Today we have the opportunity to focus on St. Helena, a territory I have not had the privilege to visit, although I hope some day to have that opportunity, and I have visited several other British overseas territories. However, having spoken to many people from St. Helena, including Calvin Thomas, who is one of our distinguished doormen in the House of Commons, I know how proud they are of being British. They want to feel like they are part of our country, just like every one of us and each of our constituents.

The hon. Member for The Wrekin (Peter Bradley), who has since left the Chamber, stated that the people of St. Helena were granted British citizenship only in 2002. That is correct, but it does not devalue the fact that those people were British subjects long before then. St. Helena remains a British territory. It seeks not independence or greater autonomy, but the opportunity to make its own decisions and govern itself. British Governments of all parties have let down the people of St. Helena. How can it be right that the people of that wonderful territory do not have access to an airport and are treated as second-best British subjects?

Mr. Steen: Is my hon. Friend aware that if a St. Helenian wants to study at a university in Britain, he pays between eight and 10 times more than a British subject from the UK? He also pays substantially more than some students coming from Europe. Does that make sense?

Mr. Rosindell: That makes no sense to me at all. As Members of Parliament, our job is to ensure that all British people are treated in the same way and given the same opportunities, and it is disgraceful that someone from St. Helena is not given the same opportunities as our constituents.

My hon. Friend referred on several occasions to the attitude of France, the Netherlands and Spain towards their overseas territories, which is different from the attitude that our Foreign Office has adopted over the years. I am afraid to say that I suspect that the Foreign Office has long hoped that our overseas territories would seek independence or join another country. I hope that that does not happen, as the remaining territories want to, and should, remain British. We should encourage them, and we should value and cherish the overseas territories that we have.

I want to commend the hon. Member for Colchester (Bob Russell), who chairs the all-party group on St. Helena, of which I am proud to be a member. I hope that more prominence is given to the needs of St. Helena and that the British Government will ensure that the EU does not impose restrictions on our overseas territories without giving them the advantages that the overseas territories of other European countries are given. I accept that St. Helena is not part of the EU, so how can it be right that restrictions and regulations are imposed on it? I know that the same is true for other overseas territories. The Falkland Islands have had similar restrictions imposed on them while receiving no benefit—how can that possibly be justified?

I endorse everything that has been said about the need to push ahead with the development of the airport. St. Helena is a honeypot for the future, which we should encourage to develop in tourism and trade. We should give it the advantages that it needs to be self-sufficient while retaining its unique British status.

I hope that the Minister will consider one important point that has not been mentioned—democracy. The people of St. Helena are British, like us, but they have no vote in British elections. They cannot send a representative, or even part of a representative, to this place. How can it be right that we can debate, make laws for and effectively decide the future of that territory, when its people have no vote or say in how this place is elected? That cannot be right in democratic terms, and it is not how France, Spain, the Netherlands and Denmark treat their overseas territories, all of which have votes in elections to their Parliaments.

Our system is undemocratic and wrong, and I hope that that and all the other valid points made by my hon. Friend the Member for Totnes and other hon. Members will be taken into account and that the Foreign Office will change its attitude. I hope that St. Helena will remain British, like Gibraltar, in perpetuity.

3.8 pm

Bob Russell (Colchester): I apologise to you, Mr. Gale, and to the Chamber for not being here at the commencement of this debate. I was in the House presenting a ten-minute Bill.

I congratulate the hon. Member for Totnes (Mr. Steen) on securing the debate and I thank the hon. Members who have spoken, in particular the three Members who have recently returned from St. Helena, an island that I had the great pleasure of visiting four years ago on the previous Commonwealth Parliamentary Association visit. By all accounts, the economic situation on the island has deteriorated in that time, and the population has fallen, arguably to below break-even point. Clearly, something has to be done.

The airfield is a vital—if not the most vital—aspect. However, there is more to the matter than that, because by my reckoning more citizens of St. Helena now live off the island than live on it. Get-up-and-go people are getting up and going, and one reason is that, given the education on the island, if a youngster is to progress through higher or further education, it is in the family's interest to move away to the United Kingdom.

Families establish residence here to qualify for an education system that is currently denied them, although, ironically—and I am sure that Napoleon would have been amused by this—a young man or woman from France can attend university in the United Kingdom for a fraction of what it costs a young person from the island of St. Helena, who is British. There is a difference between this country's treatment of its citizens who live on St. Helena and its treatment of those who live on the mainland of the United Kingdom.

It is not as if St. Helena is a rich country. It is not a third world country, but per capita income is considerably lower than in this country. I should explain that my interest in the island involves an extraordinary coincidence, in that the patron saint of Colchester is St. Helena. The spelling is the same, but the pronunciation is different. My wife and I and our three children all attended St. Helena school. That fact and a couple of constituents with connections with St. Helena are the reason for my keen interest in the island and its future.

We have a historical obligation to the people of St. Helena because the island played an integral part in sustaining empire for between 200 and 400 years. We have an obligation to the citizens who live there; I hope that we can create an economic climate such that some of those who have left will feel that they can return, and those already living there will be able to remain. I commend all that has been done. I suspect that per head of population the island of St. Helena has more spokespersons in this House than any other part of the Commonwealth or, indeed, the United Kingdom.

Something has to be done. We treat children differently if they come from St. Helena, but interestingly we are more than happy as a nation to recruit young people from St. Helena into Her Majesty's armed forces. There are more Saints per head of population serving in the British Army—about 50 young men and women from a population of fewer than 4,000 people—than there are from any other part of this country. If that sort of recruitment could be replicated across the UK, we would not have a shortfall in the Army.

This has been a welcome debate. I hope for some encouraging answers from the Minister. He is relatively new to his post, so he is not saddled with the baggage of those who have gone before. Four years ago, the new airport was on the agenda and a decision was imminent. Four years later, it is on the agenda and a decision is imminent. The best thing that I can suggest to the Minister is to tell us that the airfield is progressing. If he cannot give that assurance today, I recommend that he make an early visit to St. Helena. He would then make history; he would be the first Minister of any generation ever to visit the island. Royalty has been there, but no Minister has.

Mr. Nigel Jones (Cheltenham): It is a great pleasure to speak after the hon. Members for Totnes (Mr. Steen) and for Vale of Glamorgan (Mr. Smith), who were interesting and enthusiastic travelling companions—as, indeed, are you, Mr. Gale.

In the last 25 years the British taxpayer has spent £250 million—a quarter of a billion pounds—on St. Helena, without the island becoming remotely financially self-sufficient. We have heard that the population of the island is declining rapidly. There were 5,000 people on the island 18 months ago. When we were there last month, the population was 3,800. It has lost almost a quarter of its population in 18 months. Something is seriously wrong, and something needs to be done. St. Helena has lost its raison d'être, to use an expression that Napoleon might have used. The island used to be a great strategic asset to the East India Company and the British Crown as a provisioning point for naval and merchant ships. That has gone now, and the island has become a supplier of migrant labour to Ascension island, the Falkland Islands and the UK.

I should declare a constituency interest. St. Helena has enjoyed an education link for several decades with Cheltenham's colleges of higher education, which now form the university of Gloucestershire. Professor Tony Charlton, head of the link programme, sent me an e-mail at the weekend to say:

"Without sufficient numbers of well qualified teachers (in appropriate subject areas . . .) then education on St. Helena will fail to meet the diverse needs and aspirations of pupils and young students (and their parents). Similarly, even access to the best educational opportunities will fail unless the students' potentials are matched to local (and other) demands for employment. Employment has been one of the major concerns on the island for decades. If you take into account the large number in government employment, then few islanders are gainfully employed."

"The island's most pressing needs are for: well trained teachers given attractive financial incentives to train and then remain on the island (. . . also . . . other professionals such as nurses, police, social services personnel); meaningful—and productive—employment opportunities especially for the young; a commercial, trading and training infrastructure so that the island can not only become less financially dependent upon the UK but will also be able to generate monies to help attract islanders to remain on island; improved transport to and from the island, for islanders, traders and tourists; and an improved communication infrastructure (e.g. electronic communication facilities) so islanders can access world-wide information."

Before I went to St. Helena, I sought out Saints in my constituency. Several of them came to see me. Most of them came to train in the UK as teachers; most did not return to St. Helena. Although we are delighted that they have made their homes here, they point to and underline the main problem of St. Helena, which is population loss.

The need for air access to St. Helena has been discussed for decades. It simply is not sustainable in the modern world to rely on a single ship, the RMS St. Helena, plying its way up and down the Atlantic ocean, making occasional calls at St. Helena with fresh supplies, islanders returning for, perhaps from holiday, and a few tourists. Air access is vital. To underline what the hon. Member for Vale of Glamorgan said, airport, airport, airport—those are our three priorities.

The Government have set aside £26.3 million. The island's people, including Members of the Legislative Council, believe that that is a firm commitment. I want an assurance from the Minister that it is, because the Government do not seem to have made the final commitment to providing air access. A study of the four bidders is under way; hopefully, that will soon be concluded. We want a statement from the Government that there will be air access to the island.

I want to question the sum of £26.3 million. That is apparently the likely cost of replacing RMS St. Helena at 1990 prices. What kind of economic basis is that for making international development decisions? The actual cost of RMS St. Helena was £33 million, as it overran its initial estimate of £19 million. The airport will certainly cost more than £26.3 million. I would like the Government to revisit those numbers. I do not want them to take the £26.3 million away; I want the figure nailed down and, if necessary, given to my hon. Friend the Member for Colchester (Bob Russell) for safe-keeping. It is important that the airport goes ahead.

The RMS St. Helena requires an annual subsidy of £1.5 million, which is set to increase. As evidenced in places such as the Scottish islands, airports, particularly small ones, require subsidies to support them. St. Helena is no different. The airport will require a subsidy, which will eventually be provided by the St. Helena Government when the economy picks up. The current subsidy for the RMS, or something like it, will need to continue in the early days of the airport. Do the Government propose to subsidise the airport in the early years?

We have heard about ship access. I have some video footage—for sale at an enormous price—of the hon. Member for Totnes descending from the RMS St. Helena on to a barge. There was an extraordinary swell, but he made a very good fist of it; it was a good landing. Even when there is an airport, the island will require ships to carry freight. Better provision, such as a deep-water jetty or wharf, is needed for landing freight and passengers. We have heard that cruise liners could not send passengers to the island last year because of the choppy water. Not for the first time, the island lost a considerable amount of income because of that. Is there a Government commitment to contribute to the building of a deep-water jetty or wharf?

With air access, there is a good prospect of attracting greater numbers of tourists to St. Helena. We have heard about Longwood house, where Napoleon died. Fans of Napoleon would be showing dereliction of duty if they did not visit Longwood. The museum on Elba attracts hundreds of thousands of visitors—

Mr. Steen: Eight hundred thousand.

Mr. Jones: As we have heard, it attracts 800,000 visitors a year. Longwood has far more authentic artefacts to offer. I do not suggest that St. Helena needs hundreds of thousands of visitors, but many would come if transport links were improved. People would visit St. Helena for the sea. The island has no beaches, but does have fishing and scuba diving. Sea lovers would find a host of attractions, including a wide range of sea life and numerous wrecks, which offer a fascinating opportunity for divers. However, it may be necessary to introduce measures to ensure that those wrecks are not stripped of anything valuable.

As far as eco-tourism is concerned, many of the endemic species have died out, but some have survived, such as the wire bird—a long-legged plover, which we have seen—and the gumwood tree. The St. Helena National Trust's efforts to plant their millennium forest deserve to be applauded and supported. The forest is to include a section named the Colchester plantation, which will be devoted to the gumwood. My hon. Friend the Member for Colchester has raised more than £500 for that, some of which was from me.

Eco-tourists might like to visit the phenomenon that is Jonathan the tortoise at Plantation house. He is almost 200 years old, is reputed to be the only living creature to have met Napoleon, and has a harem of five large lady tortoises. They are all thought to have come from Mauritius. It is believed that the island may cease to exist when Jonathan passes away. I hope that that will not be the case.

I was surprised to find so little agricultural or horticultural activity on the island, as it must be possible to grow vegetables or keep chickens there. Besides providing a fresh source of food, island-produced vegetables and chicken would reduce the need to import food from South Africa, and they would be something to offer to the visitors that the island hopes to attract.

One health problem on the island that was brought to my attention was the high incidence of hypertension. As someone who suffered a heart attack a year ago, I readily sympathise. My doctor tells me to eat five portions of fresh fruit a day, and I suspect that one of the reasons for the hypertension epidemic on St. Helena is the lack of fresh food. Tinned vegetables on display in shops contain a lot of salt, which is a major cause of hypertension. Growing more fruit and vegetables on the island would help to solve that problem.

The health system on the island is generally excellent. There is a well equipped cottage hospital and four doctors who can cope with most operations and run Government clinics. I had a titanium stent inserted into a coronary artery following a heart attack last year, and I was interested and comforted to be told that the procedure could have been carried out on St. Helena. However, if a medical emergency occurs for which the hospital is not equipped, there is no air ambulance to take the patient speedily to South Africa or the UK. On such occasions, the islanders become acutely aware of their isolation and the need for an airport.

We have heard little about the plan for a new constitution, which is provoking much thought and discussion. There is a disagreement between the island's Legislative Council, which wants a three-tier system of government, and the Minister, who wants a two-tier system. The only advice that I can give the Minister is that if the islanders get the system that they want, they are far more likely to make a success of it than if something is imposed on them from London. Members of the Legislative Council raised a range of issues with us, including the infrastructure, the wind turbines, illegal fishing—they really do want their 200-mile limit to be patrolled properly—and the EU regulations regarding illegally imported honey, which were mentioned. They also want a ministerial visit.

What struck me as the RMS St. Helena chugged gently towards the island is just how far it is from anywhere else. For somewhere this remote to have survived into the 21st century, with the sea as the only access, is a tribute to those who decided to stay. However, the shrinking population is a threat to a viable future. If the much discussed airport and wharf are built in the next few years, a more prosperous, albeit changed, future for this distant outpost of the Commonwealth should be secured. Without significant, dramatic and urgent change, including air access, Her Majesty's Government will be faced with another bill of £250 million, if not more, in the next 25 years.

3.26 pm

Mr. Gary Streeter (South-West Devon): It is a pleasure to take part in this important debate on St. Helena. I congratulate the hon. Member for Colchester (Bob Russell) on securing the debate and my hon. Friend the Member for Totnes (Mr. Steen) on his able and vivid speech about the issues. I was extremely interested to hear the first-hand accounts of three colleagues who visited St. Helena only a few weeks ago. Over the years, we have all learned that there is no substitute for seeing a place in the raw in order to learn about it. I have just returned from North Korea—an isolated country. It will be interesting to talk about another country that is isolated only for the completely different reason of geography, not for reasons of politics or demography.

I have abandoned my set speech, as I do not want to go over ground that has already been well trodden, and I want to give the Minister as much time as possible to reply to the several points that have been made. I shall row in behind some of those points. My hon. Friend the Member for Totnes, in his usual vivid and interesting style, asked several interesting questions, one of which is of particular concern to me: windmills and the Government's injection of capital into a project that seems to have failed. I hope that the Minister will tell us what went wrong, what he intends to do to put it right and in what time scale. I come from a part of the world—Devon and Cornwall—where there are many windmills that seem to work extremely well, much to the irritation of local people. I wonder why this project has failed.

Hon. Members also talked about the treatment of St. Helena compared with the overseas territories of other EU countries, especially in relation to access to EU structural funds. I hope that the Minister will tell us what rules apply to St. Helena in that regard and why funds have not been made available in recent years.

We also heard about the costs of accessing education in the United Kingdom, which seem to defy logic. I appreciate that that is not entirely within the Minister's remit, but in preparing for the debate I read that he had been made aware of the issue some time ago and that he would look into it. Can he tell us today why students from St. Helena have to pay the top rates to gain access to our institutions of further education, and much more than UK and EU students?

Finally, we have heard much about the airport. It is obvious that the airport is critical, and I shall return to the matter after I have made four points, which I hope will take the debate forward.

First, I agree with the hon. Member for Vale of Glamorgan (Mr. Smith) about changes to the strategic position of the island. Once upon a time, as the hon. Member for Cheltenham (Mr. Jones) said, it was almost in the centre of things. Ships had to pass the island, and it was a strategic refuelling stop, so people had a reason for going there. Such changes happen not only to islands and countries; they can happen even to towns. Market towns that have no market may start to struggle, and a coal mining town that no longer has a coal mine will certainly start to struggle. Places like that need to find a new, strategic raison d'être. That is what the island has been trying to do.

One does not need to be a genius to work out that tourism is obviously an important part of the island's future, but one cannot do tourism in today's high-flying, mass-communications age without an airport. How many people have the time to sit on a ship for a week, travelling from Europe to St. Helena, enjoy a week's holiday and then spend another week on the ship going back? That is not a viable way to run a tourism industry. The issue seems to come down to the island having an airport.

Secondly, it is absolutely fundamental that the Government are responsible for infrastructure. We know that a capital project of that kind could not possibly be achieved by the island itself. The Government clearly have a responsibility for it. I do not propose a love-in with the hon. Member for Vale of Glamorgan, but I agree with him that it is a question not of there being more government but of the Government doing the right thing.

The Government should provide the infrastructure, even if it is the enhanced port and docking facilities that were so graphically described by my hon. Friend the Member for Totnes. I shall probably dream tonight of his legs waving around in the breeze as he tries to jump from a gangway on to the shore or on to a ship—it is a vivid impression. If the Government can move forward on proposals for the airport and the upgrading of the docking facilities, I am sure that the islanders will find the energy and enterprise to do the rest. I have read some of their websites recently, and it seems that they are not short of innovation and energy; they will provide the facilities to make the project work and come up with ways to attract tourists.

We have heard about Longwood house and Napoleon. We are all fascinated with that remarkable character, and that fascination will not go away. All tourist industries need a focal point; and the island has not only that but a beautiful climate. With the right sort of airport, it could become self-sufficient over a number of years if people focus on tourism. It is important that the Government deliver on that.

Thirdly, why has there been such delay? The issue has been raised many times in the House. I do not point the finger at the Minister, who is relatively new to his post; it is not his fault. However, the Government have taken an awfully long time deciding whether to back an airport proposal. For some time, it seemed that they were calculating whether it might be better to pump money into a new ship rather than an airport, but the advantages of an airport over a new ship cannot be compared.

The subject was raised in a debate in the House in 1997. It was explored again by my hon. Friend the Member for West Suffolk (Mr. Spring) in 2001, and it has been raised several times since. Each time the Government were pressed for a decision. Will the Minister say what has happened? How far forward are we in reviewing the bids that have apparently come in? What is the time scale for the start and completion of the project? We need definitive answers.

Finally, my hon. Friend the Member for Romford (Mr. Rosindell) said how sad he was that DFID should be dealing with one of our overseas territories. I wonder whether it is the right Department to oversee such a massive infrastructure project. Would it not be better, for example, if the Department for Trade and Industry were to be in charge of such a project? I am not saying anything negative about the Minister, but I wonder whether the Government's thinking is right. Was the transfer of responsibility for overseas territories from the Foreign Office to DFID a few years ago a step in the right direction, and did it affect our thinking about overseas territories? We do not want St. Helena to have handouts for ever and a day; we want to build self-sufficiency and give the islanders what they need.

The Government have often said that they want to make the island self-sufficient. That is clearly the right policy, but it has not yet happened and we have heard some alarming tales about population loss and a struggling economy. It has been obvious for many years that an airport is the main infrastructure project necessary to turn the island around, but it has been subject to dither and delay with the result that the island's economy is struggling. We look to the Minister today to give the residents of St. Helena some much-needed hope.

3.35 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for International Development (Mr. Gareth Thomas): I join other hon. Members in congratulating the hon. Member for Totnes (Mr. Steen) on securing this debate. He was, as ever, characteristically robust in his approach, but he was misguided in his conclusion that the Government are neglecting St. Helena. I completely reject that conclusion, but I welcome the opportunity to set out in more detail what the Government have been doing for the island. There is considerable interest in the House about St. Helena, and during oral questions in October I gave the hon. Member for Colchester (Bob Russell) the opportunity to come and have a longer conversation with me. I was toying with ways of offering other hon. Members the opportunity to consider the issues facing St. Helena and I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for helping me out.

We heard an excellent contribution from my hon. Friend the Member for Vale of Glamorgan (Mr. Smith) and an interesting insight from my hon. Friend the Member for The Wrekin (Peter Bradley), as well as interesting speeches from the hon. Members for Colchester, for Romford (Mr. Rosindell), for Cheltenham (Mr. Jones) and for South-West Devon (Mr. Streeter).

St. Helena is one of the most isolated of our overseas territories, being equidistant in the south Atlantic ocean between the coasts of Africa and south America. St. Helenians are a proud people and I am privileged to have responsibility for the development issues facing them. I feel somewhat hurt that the hon. Member for South-West Devon might be seeking to take responsibility for St. Helena from my Department just as I am enjoying getting to grips with the issues facing it.

Many hon. Members rightly touched on the innovative spirit, skills and talents of the people of St. Helena. I have not been to the island, nor, as the hon. Member for Totnes said, do I have any immediate plans to do so, but I have been very lucky to have had two full and helpful discussions in London with visiting representatives from the island's Executive and Legislative Councils. I had the pleasure of meeting Councillor Eric George, a senior member of the island's Council, on both occasions. He was accompanied on the first occasion by Mr. John Newman, the Speaker of the island's elected Assembly, and on the second occasion by Councillor Eric Benjamin, another Member with long experience in the Assembly.

On both occasions, we discussed the challenges and constraints of the island's economic development. We reviewed progress towards the development of air access and reflected on the implications of the recent decline in the island's population. We considered the prospects for privatisation of some Government services to free up additional resources and examined the need for further assistance to help with the implementation of a proposed move towards a ministerial system of government, to which the hon. Member for Cheltenham referred. I look forward to further discussions on those and other issues with two other councillors who will be visiting London next month for the overseas territories consultative council.

Hon. Members are right to draw attention to St. Helena's difficult economic background. Indeed, over some five centuries St. Helena's economic fortunes have endured what can only be described as a roller-coaster ride. The real low point came in 1976 when Union-Castle Lines ceased the regular service between Southampton and Cape Town which had maintained St Helena's essential physical access to the outside world for decades.

As the island had no airport, the Labour Government stepped in to ensure that access was maintained, and the Conservative Government who followed rightly continued that. Ever since we have provided St. Helena with a cash subsidy of over £1 million a year to support regular calls by a dedicated passenger and cargo vessel. The present one was purpose-built for St Helena's needs in 1989 at a cost to the Government of some £32 million. It would have been cheaper but for the fact that the company making the vessel went into receivership in the middle of the process. The vessel will reach the end of its economic life by about the end of this decade, and we will have to look at the situation then.

The new ship, which was launched in 1990, represents just part of the Government's consistent and unflagging commitment to St. Helena over the past 30 to 40 years. Our contribution since 1997 alone, when DFID was established, amounts to over £50 million. In addition, during the current financial year, we expect to spend over £10.5 million on a combination of budgetary and technical assistance support for the island community. We have given the St. Helena Government assurances on a number of occasions that our support will continue for as long as it is reasonably required.

We are about to start negotiating a new three-year aid package with the St. Helena Government. It will take full account of their strategic development planning. St. Helenians potentially have access not only to British Government funds but to the European regional development fund. Some £9.5 million has been set aside through to 2007, and that has been earmarked by the St. Helena Government for wharf improvements, rock stabilisation on the wharf and possibly improvements in landing arrangements. I will come on to that in a little more detail shortly.

Our shared goal for St Helena, as it is for other overseas territories that still require our support, is to try to achieve sustainable economic and financial self-sufficiency for the island as soon as possible. In an increasingly competitive global world, however, we recognise that this will remain a major challenge for such a small, isolated island that has a declining population.

Like the St. Helena Government and hon. Members, we remain concerned about the decline in the island's population. St. Helena cannot continue to lose its people at the current rate, even if some have every intention of returning either on retirement or at some future point in their career. We are working closely with the island authorities to find ways of encouraging more Saints to stay on or to return to their island.

Bob Russell: What point must the population reach for the island no longer to be economic? Has the Department even considered the possibility of a total depopulation of the island of St. Helena as a cheaper option?

Mr. Thomas: No, we have not. It would be entirely wrong for us to do so. We should concentrate our efforts on what we can do to encourage people from St. Helena to stay on the island. With that in mind, and with the support of the St. Helena Government, we are considering advertising some key posts on enhanced remuneration terms to make them more attractive to St. Helenians. I am thinking, for example, of the post of financial secretary and the post of head of Prince Andrew school.

Hon. Members have rightly identified air access as the key issue. As the hon. Member for South-West Devon said, the issue has been around for some time. One company submitted proposals to us for establishing air access. We considered them in detail and did not feel that the proposition stacked up at that point. As hon. Members will know from written answers that I have given, in April we launched an international competition to attract further interest in the idea of establishing air access. We have made it clear that the advances in air transport technology make an airport on the island a real possibility, thus opening up much greater opportunities for tourism. The competition has received four expressions of interest, which are being evaluated. We expect to receive the evaluation and share it with the St. Helena Government on 17 December. We will then have to consider its results in detail. I understand the point about the need to progress as quickly as possible. Clearly, we will keep the House informed about what we can do.

If air access can be developed, it will be some time before it comes on stream. We are assisting the St. Helena Government with an important review of the existing scheduling and routing of the RMS St. Helena to try to achieve more time for it in the south Atlantic waters, perhaps with more regular and more frequent calls to St. Helena. Further decisions on that are needed. We are looking again at the issue of the breakwater, which a number of hon. Members have raised and which the St. Helena Government continue to press with us. The hon. Member for Totnes, in particular, raised a number of other issues. I will write to him in detail with the answers.

Travellers Sites

3.47 pm

Mr. James Paice (South-East Cambridgeshire): I have to confess that I am not a great fan of this Chamber, but one of its advantages is that one sees Ministers whom one has never set eyes on before. I am delighted that that does not apply to the Minister who will reply to this debate, with whom I debated some aspects of travellers on the Floor of the House on Monday evening. I am pleased to have this opportunity. I understand that some hon. Members apply for debates in this Chamber and get them willy-nilly. I have been applying for weeks for an hour-and-a-half or a half-hour slot. The debate could easily have lasted for an hour and a half, but I am grateful for the opportunity that I have got.

I have been fortunate enough to be the Member of Parliament for South-East Cambridgeshire for 16 and a half years. Throughout that time, travellers have been one of the most crucial issues. For centuries, Cambridgeshire has attracted travellers, and it goes back to the days when it was one of the leading fruit-growing and vegetable-growing counties in the country and large numbers of casual workers were needed. Interestingly, having just secured the debate, I received from the National Farmers Union a document that it has entitled, "Britain's Rural Outlaws"—I stress that the title is the NFU's. The document underlines some of the problems faced by my constituents and many other country people and rural dwellers throughout Britain. It states:

"Nearly 80 per cent. of farmers questioned by the NFU have suffered at the hands of these 'rural outlaws' over the past five years with the estimated cost to the industry a massive £100 million per year."

It continues:

"Over 20 per cent. reported that they have been the victim of physical threats, over half have had farm equipment stolen and nearly 10 per cent. have had their livestock injured."

The NFU extrapolated those results and applied them to the 270,000 farmers in England and Wales, estimating that the total cost to the rural community of unauthorised travellers could be as high as £98.8 million, nearly £100 million per annum.

The residents association of an area in my constituency called Smithy Fen, just outside the village of Cottenham, carefully listed for me some of the problems that residents have suffered in the past few weeks. It referred to "Noise: we suffer daily, and particularly from 9.00pm through the early hours of the following morning, the blasting of car/van horns accompanied by loud music on an almost incessant basis."

It then listed

"Obstruction by day and night: cars/vans 'patrol' the area, half a dozen or more at a time, and when it suits they double/triple park thereby obstructing the single track droves," which are a feature of the fenland area,

"Speeding: the Fen Droves are narrow and straight. Once farm traffic has ceased for the day the speedsters are out . . . 50, 60, 70mph bursts from Porsches, Mercedes, BMWs . . . etc. Drove junctions, farmers' storage pads, private driveways are used as skidpans for hand-brake turns . . . daily occurrences.

Stoning: of cars and tractors.

Bullying: the school bus is no longer safe for residents' children" and, finally, there was abuse of animals. The residents association said:

"The level of intimidation is such that it is no longer safe to walk the Fen."

Those are not one person's complaints but a document produced and signed by a large number of my constituents who live in the area.

A letter from an individual constituent who has lived in the area for a long time brings a sense of proportion to the issue. We are not talking about scaremongering, or, as is occasionally suggested, intolerance towards those who live another lifestyle. My constituent states:

"Travellers have been on the Fen for forty years or so and there are thirty-three officially approved sites. Not always 'angels'; they fly-tipped, burned-out the odd car, were guilty of some littering, and were not averse to fights and general disturbance, but they largely policed themselves or were properly policed at the appropriate times. In the past they have been guilty of certain breaches of planning . . . but such breaches were identified and, from memory, quickly remedied. In short, the authorities seemed to have control and such afforded a generally peaceful and mutually respectful co-existence. Earlier this year a large number of Irish travellers arrived . . . many of the 'olde English' were intimidated into departure, this time the breach was to status quo and as a consequence since the arrivals, and on-going as I write, we endure . . . littering . . . roadside damage . . . noise . . . 'joyriding'".

Those are all the issues to which I have just referred.

I stress that I do not seek to brand the large numbers of people who live a travelling lifestyle as criminal or antisocial or suggest that they engage in such behaviour. They are entitled to live that lifestyle. They have their own law and rules by which they abide and, as my constituent said, people have learned to co-exist with them.

However, my constituents expect travellers to abide by the same rules, and the same criminal, planning and other legislation as the rest of us. I stress that equality of treatment under the law is all that we seek. As a Front-Bench spokesman, I officially welcomed the measures in the Anti-social Behaviour Bill, which is shortly to be enacted—the Minister will know whether it has received Royal Assent since Monday night—but they refer to unauthorised camping on private land where the landowner has not given consent. I want to concentrate in this debate on the situation in which travellers are camping on land that they own, or which other travellers own. Travellers are increasingly buying land, legitimately—I hesitate to suggest where the money may be coming from to buy the land, but it usually comes in the form of notes from a back pocket. They buy land legitimately, create hard standings, often install services, and park a caravan.

Mr. James Gray (North Wiltshire): My hon. Friend is describing exactly what is happening in Startley and Minety in my constituency. These people turn up with disproportionately large amounts of money—goodness knows where they get it from—paying sometimes £25,000 or £50,000 an acre for the sites. Not surprisingly, the farmers sell the land to them. It is a real problem.

Mr. Paice: My hon. Friend illustrates that the problem is not unique to Cambridgeshire, but is happening increasingly in other parts of the country. I know that other hon. Members have experienced similar situations. Travellers are buying up land; sometimes they then sell it off in smaller parcels. I cannot say where the money comes from; what concerns me is that legally these people know what they are doing. They are very clever, and understand the law and planning legislation. They know that in cases such as these, possession is half the battle. Once they own the site, have created a hard standing and have put the caravan there, they can nearly always stay there.

I shall now narrow the debate to the situation in the South Cambridgeshire district. It is important, because it underlines that, in my area at least, the local authority has done everything that it could be possibly be expected to do—indeed, more than some of my constituents would have liked—to meet travellers' needs. On the last six-monthly count, there were 290 caravans in the South Cambridgeshire district parked on approved, private pitches, and 30 more on approved sites provided by the local authority. There were 104 parked on unapproved sites. Those numbers continue to increase. With a total of 340 caravans on approved sites in South Cambridgeshire alone, I hardly think that anyone could suggest that South Cambridgeshire district council is not fulfilling its obligation.

That brings me to the planning guidance under which the council has to operate: circular 1/94, issued on 5 January 1994 by the then Department of the Environment, headed "Gypsy Sites and Planning". Paragraph 8 states:

"In preparing or amending their development plans, local planning authorities should indicate how they have taken account of their duty under the 1968 Act to make adequate provision for gypsies residing in or resorting to their areas."

Paragraph 10 says:

"It is important that policies for gypsy site provision are set out clearly in development plans . . . With such policies in place in plans, there will be more certainty for all concerned when planning applications are determined by local planning authorities or appeals are considered by the Secretary of State."

Critically, paragraph 26 states:

"The existence or absence of policies for gypsy sites in development plans could constitute a material consideration in matters of enforcement."

I am describing what has happened in the past few weeks and months. At Easter there was a massive influx into southern Cambridgeshire of what are known as Irish gypsies. They parked in a range of different places, sometimes on unauthorised property, often on private land. I shall not go into all those situations in detail but suffice to say that, after a while, they were moved on. A large number of them descended on the area known as Smithy Fen just outside the village of Cottenham, and they are still there. In some cases, they may have purchased other land from other travellers, but they have parked on land for which planning approval has not been granted.

The result was that the district council served a range of enforcement and stop notices. I have a list of them here; I shall not read them all out, but they all relate to land between Setchell drove and Water lane in the Smithy Fen area. It is not only that travellers descended on the place, parked there, that the council served notices and that they have now been to appeal; they also displaced a lot of people who were there.

Last night, a parish council meeting considered a planning application for eight caravans in the neighbouring parish of Rampton in my constituency. They are for a family of traditional travellers who have lived in Smithy Fen for a long time and have now been displaced. In a statement, the family said:

"We the Price family have resided within a 15 mile radius of Rampton for about 50 years, we are a close family unit and wish to live together collectively. Many in the village know us from the Black Horse public house and Friday's light and life gospel meetings, we have done jobbing work for many local farmers over the years and can supply character testimonials. We understand the fears of the village however unfortunately due to a ruling by a government planning inspector John Roberts on 14/10/03 who overruled an enforcement notice issued by SCDC regarding Pine Lane, Smithy Fen, Cottenham—we find ourselves in an unenviable position where we have a neighbouring travellers site that we did not want and places us in an intimidating and intolerable position we fear for our property and our safety, it is for this reason alone that we must leave the land which we have considered as home for the past 12 years."

I hope that the Minister fully comprehends the importance of that statement. They are a traditional travelling family who have lived in Smithy Fen for 12 years—lived in the whole area for 50 years—and they have been intimidated and forced out of their homes because of the influx of other travellers. That would be fine if the planning arrangements supported them in their time of need.

The district council served enforcement and stop notices and the inspector who heard the appeal came forward with his pronouncement. The inspector's report is a complete travesty of anything that could be called justice. He starts by making congratulatory statements about the district council—that is why I concentrated earlier on planning guidance and the need for provision within structure plans for travellers sites. He refers to policy SP 4/6 of the proposed revised structure plan, which "requires adequate provision to be made for gypsies who reside in or resort to the County."

He refers to the fact that the council produced nine criteria that would have to be met, which had gone through the local planning inspector. He said that there is "a new policy H29 which allows for caravan sites for gypsies and travelling show people outside the green belt in certain circumstances."

He states that there is no evidence that policy H29 is likely to be modified further, and he notes that "It would normally, therefore, carry considerable weight."

The report continues:

"The criteria based policy H29 has the advantage of being capable of application to any number of sites, as part of an assessed need or otherwise."

In paragraph 14 of the report, the inspector says:

"The duty lies upon the local authority to assess need and facilitate provision."

I hope that by illustrating the total number of approved sites earlier I have shown that the local authority has facilitated provision.

Somewhat perversely, the report later states:

"The occupiers of the appeal site should not be required to prove that they, or their close relatives, have traditionally or habitually resorted to the area or resided in it."

That is despite the fact that people who have traditionally resided in the area in question have been displaced.

[Mr. Paice]

Of the appellant families, the inspector, Mr. Roberts, says that "some of them at least have close family ties with people living on authorised pitches nearby".

If I bought a piece of land to build a home next to a member of my family because I wanted to be near my family, I would not have a prayer of getting planning consent if that plot were outside the village envelope. However, because of some purported family relationship—I have no idea whether it is true that there is one—that family will be given planning consent. Adding to the calumny, Mr. Roberts continues:

"Two publicly owned sites have had to be closed for reasons that were explained at the inquiry, including incidents of disorder."

He continues, perversely:

"In any event, the adequacy of public provision is not a good reason for refusing planning permission for private sites."

I could go on.

The inquiry result and the inspector's report have produced so much anger and distress in Cottenham and the surrounding areas, I cannot vouch that it will not cause further serious problems. There is a large number of other planning enforcement notices and appeals outstanding. I know that the Minister will probably tell me that this case does not set a precedent, but most of us are cynical enough to expect it to. The precedent it sets is horrendous. We could experience a doubling of the 33 approved pitches in this area.

The fact that the inspector approved it is beyond belief. In paragraph 33, Mr. Roberts says:

"I have concluded that the criteria of Policy H29 provide a useful checklist against which to assess the suitability of sites not allocated by the local plan."

In other words, he is supporting the policy of the district council. The council assessed the sites against that policy, and decided that they did not meet the criteria. That is why it served the enforcement notices. As I have intimated, the inspector upheld the appeal on several grounds, so families will now stay there. The Smithy Fen travellers site is now much larger, and will almost certainly get approval to become larger because the appeal is still outstanding.

I shall refer to one letter that I have received today, and I have received a large number. There has been some local publicity about today's debate, and this particular letter is from an individual who was at a meeting of the parish council. He says:

"I despair at Prescott's decision to disregard the wishes and undermine the powers of the district council and the parish council, notwithstanding Residents opposition. I grow weary of the daily erosion of life in this Country as I reflect (not through rose-tinted specs) on the daily changes that affect us all".

That is the heartfelt view of one of my constituents.

I conclude by saying that the whole purpose of planning guidance is to set a framework against which local planning authorities make their own judgments. The case of Smithy Fen and Cottenham fits across the board the planning guidance issued in 1994. The structure plan and the district plan also fit. The council has come up with a number of approved sites and has demonstrated that it is prepared to meet the needs of travellers.

In the case of my constituency, we were faced with a massive invasion by people who knew the law inside out and were prepared to flout it. They went to appeal and have got their way. Now, no one has any confidence that appeals will be rejected. No one has any confidence that anything that is said or done locally by parish or district councils will be upheld by the Government. I know that the Minister may claim that she cannot talk about one decision. However, the impact of the decision is catastrophic for local authorities trying to deal with the point that my hon. Friend the Member for North Wiltshire (Mr. Gray) has endorsed—the huge numbers of additional planning applications for land already owned by travellers. The Government have to get to grips with that, and I look forward to hearing what the Minister has to say. I want to reassure my constituents that the situation is not as bleak as it looks at present.

4.9 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Office of the Deputy Prime Minister (Yvette Cooper): I congratulate the hon. Member for South-East Cambridgeshire (Mr. Paice) on securing the debate—even though it has perhaps not taken place quite as early as he would have liked—and on raising the important issue of gypsies, travellers and the planning system, particularly in his constituency. He will know that there are thousands of gypsies and travellers in this country, many of whom have lived a nomadic lifestyle for generations. Like everyone else they have human rights, which must be respected, and like everyone else they have responsibilities to others, and to other communities. He will know the importance of ensuring that there is no unfair discrimination against gypsies and travellers. Certainly, that is a matter that the Commission for Racial Equality has been concerned about. Equally, he will be aware that settled communities, too, have rights that need to be respected.

Respect for those rights includes the obligation for gypsy and traveller communities and settlements to comply with the law, including planning law. It also includes the obligation for local authorities and the police to deal with concerns about fly-tipping, antisocial behaviour and the other problems that hon. Members have raised.

Mr. Gray: Of course, there must be no discrimination against gypsies—but does the Minister agree that there must be no discrimination against local people, either?

Yvette Cooper: Certainly; that was the point that I was making. Just as there should be no discrimination against gypsies and travellers, the settled community of towns and villages that have existed for many years, equally, has rights that should be respected.

Hon. Members will be aware that I cannot comment on the detail of specific planning cases, given the role of the Secretary of State in such cases. However, I shall talk briefly about the current planning system and related issues. Department of the Environment circular 1/94 set out planning policies concerning the provision of suitable locations for gypsy sites, whether private or provided by the local authority. In formulating development plans, local authorities are encouraged to discuss gypsies' accommodation needs with the gypsies themselves, with a view to identifying suitable locations for gypsy sites in plans wherever possible. For many local authorities, especially in rural areas, the identification of specific sites is not easy. Where they have found it impossible to identify suitable locations, circular 1/94 says that they must define clear and realistic criteria as a basis for site provision.

Development plans must take account of local circumstances. Concern is increasingly expressed in Adjournment debates about gypsies establishing sites without first obtaining planning consent, often after choosing inappropriate locations in land-use terms, such as greenbelt land or open countryside, giving rise to enforcement action by local authorities.

Local authorities have a range of enforcement powers for dealing with breaches of planning control. First, they have the power to serve a planning contravention notice, when they require information. Secondly, there is the power to issue an enforcement notice, requiring steps to be taken. Thirdly, there is the power to serve a stop notice, with immediate effect. Fourthly, the authority can seek an injunction in the High Court or the county court to restrain any actual or expected breach of planning control. Finally, there are improved powers of entry to land for authorised officers of the local planning authority.

Powers exist under section 178 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1990 to enable a local planning authority to enter and remove unauthorised development undertaken in breach of an enforcement notice.

Separate issues arise in relation to unauthorised encampments—where the land is not owned by the campers. The hon. Member for South-East Cambridgeshire raised some issues about cases of that kind, and the discussions earlier this week about the Anti-social Behaviour Bill and the important improvements in police powers to remove illegally camped gypsies and travellers to authorised sites are relevant here. However, as he confined most of his remarks to planning issues when gypsies and travellers own the sites, I shall say a little more about that, and explain what issues I think we should consider further in the next few months.

The hon. Gentleman is one of many people who have raised concerns about the way in which the current system works. Such concerns have been raised not only by MPs but by the Gypsy Council, local authorities and the CRE. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has set in train a serious programme of work to examine those concerns in some detail.

For example, a serious problem raised by many is that there is not enough site provision throughout the UK. A study carried out by the university of Birmingham suggested that an extra 1,000 to 2,000 residential sites might be needed over the next five to 10 years. Whether those would be local authority sites, or whether they would be appropriate sites for gypsies and travellers to buy where development would be acceptable, many people are concerned that there is simply not enough site provision. We are examining that issue in some detail. The Government have allocated £33 million over five years to improve the sites provided by local authorities, but we continue to examine the issue.

We are also concerned about the nature of the enforcement system. We are conducting a review of the planning enforcement regime, and are due to report our conclusions over the next few months. Many of the cases raised by hon. Members concerned gypsies and travellers who have settled where local authorities have not given planning permission. Those cases give rise to issues that are distinct from the broader planning enforcement regime. Statistics show that gypsy and traveller planning applications are more likely to be turned down in the first place, but more likely to be successful at the appeal stage. There are also links between enforcement and the level of site provision.

We are examining the speed of the planning enforcement system, where planning is inappropriate, and a range of other issues related to enforcement against inappropriate development. Over the next few months, as the work under way in the Department continues, I will be happy to discuss this matter further with hon. Members, based on the experience that they have gained in their constituencies. Many hon. Members have raised concerns, and we must ensure that we get the balance right in addressing this complex issue.

4.17 pm

Mrs. Janet Dean (Burton): I welcome the opportunity for a debate on traffic noise on the A50 and A38 in my constituency. I was very pleased when, in July 1998, the Government announced their quieter roads programme. That was a good step forward, because for too long, roads were built with materials such as concrete, which, although hard-wearing, was noisy both for local people and for road users.

Naturally, we can all argue for earlier dates, but I understand the need for the assessments that have taken place over recent years, and I know that we must make the best use of resources, by fitting the programme in with maintenance programmes due to take place. However, the A50 and the A38 have both been unfortunate with the assessment process and the timing of the programme. I shall discuss the two roads separately.

The A38, which passes through—indeed, in places, over—Burton upon Trent is, as the Minister will know, a major cross-country route from the west to the east midlands. I first received complaints from constituents in Burton upon Trent and Branston about the noise from the road in late 1998. The northbound carriageway of the road was surface-dressed in August 1998, which appears to have exacerbated the noise problem. According to a response that I received from Lord Whitty when he was Under-Secretary of State for Environment, Transport and the Regions, the work was ordered from the contractor in the spring of 1998, prior to the publication in July of the Government's new noise policy, set out in "A New Deal for Trunk Roads in England". That was the first instance of unfortunate timing.

In 1999, the new surface started to fail due to defective materials. Repairs were carried out at the contractor's expense, using the same materials. I raised my concerns with Ministers and the Highways Agency. I said that although the Government had announced their intention to introduce quieter roads, a noisier surface had been laid on a major trunk road. The difference was even more significant because in 1983, 1984 and 1987, porous asphalt had been used on a section of the A38 as a trial to evaluate the drainage performance of the material. One side effect of the porous asphalt was that noise levels were reduced. Although the northbound test surface was removed in 1996, there was incremental increase in noise between then and 1998, when my constituents complained to me.

Following an assessment of the scheme and the programme for road surfacing, I was advised by the Highways Agency in 2001 that the A38 Burton bypass was included in the programme for the 2003–04 financial year. I have received a further letter from the Highways Agency that says that work on the A38 between Branston junction and Clay Mills is scheduled to take place in the financial year 2004–05. I seek a reassurance that that work will be carried out in the next financial year, and not put back again.

I also ask for clarification on behalf of a Branston constituent, who tells me that he believes that the noise from which residents in the area of the village's main street suffer comes from the road south of the Branston junction. Will the Minister tell me whether resurfacing of that section will also be carried out in the near future?

The A50 is another major east-west route, which runs to the north of Uttoxeter in my constituency. I have received complaints about the noise from the road from residents of both Uttoxeter and the rural area of Leigh, to the west of the town. Again, I have been in contact with Ministers and the Highways Agency about my constituents' complaints for some time. The A50 has been improved in stages over the years, resulting in a great increase in traffic along its whole length. The parts of the A50 that most affect my constituents are the concrete section between Blythe Bridge and the New road—A522—junction in Uttoxeter, and the length between that junction and the Ashbourne road—B503—junction, which is surfaced with hot-rolled asphalt.

I am concerned that in the current programme for resurfacing concrete roads, the Blythe Bridge to Uttoxeter section will not be resurfaced until between 2007–08 and 2010–11. I have also been advised that the length between New road and Ashbourne road will be resurfaced in sections between 2004 and 2008. The Doveridge bypass, which is the section east of Uttoxeter, was opened after June 1988, so it is timetabled to have a quieter road surface applied between 2004–05 and 2006–07. Although I am pleased that the problems of residents of Doveridge in west Derbyshire are recognised, I do not believe that it is right that the Blythe Bridge to Uttoxeter section should have to wait longer than the Doveridge bypass, simply because of when the roads were built.

The opening of the Doveridge bypass in February 1998, along with other major improvements along the A50, resulted in the traffic increasing by 51.3 per cent. between 1997 and 1998 along the whole route. The increase along the Blythe Bridge to Uttoxeter section was even greater, at 57 per cent. The route total has risen from 19,075 vehicles for a 24-hour, seven-day-a-week average in 1997, to 43,132 in 2002. The Blythe Bridge to Uttoxeter section has risen from 15,657 to an average of 36,591.

As the traffic has more than doubled since the upgrading of the A50 was completed in 1998, the noise emanating from both the concrete section and the hot-rolled asphalt section in Uttoxeter has increased dramatically. The way in which schemes are assessed means that the length west of Uttoxeter may have to wait up to six years longer than the length east of Uttoxeter, yet the traffic and noise increase has been the same. That cannot be just or sensible.

I hope that the Minister will reassure me that the timetable for work on the Blythe Bridge to Uttoxeter section will be reviewed to take into account the impact of the improvements on the whole route. This is an exceptional case, and I believe that that should be recognised in the programme of works. I hope that the Minister will also reassure me that a quieter surface will be applied to the length between New road and Ashbourne road early in the period 2004 to 2008.

As I said, I know that everyone hopes that schemes in their particular area will be put at the start of any programme. In the case of the A38 and the A50, however, the arguments for the early relief of the difficulties that my constituents face are strong.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Transport (Mr. David Jamieson): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Burton (Mrs. Dean) on securing the debate and on recognising the benefits of the Government's policy on quieter roads. I also thank her for her proportionate opening remarks about the Government's need to ensure that work in progress is a priority. Her contribution today, and her correspondence with the Highways Agency and my Department, show her to be an effective voice for her constituents in Burton. Long may she continue to be so.

My hon. Friend wanted to be sure that our approach was just and sensible, which I believe it is, but before I go into the details of the two roads in question—the A38 and the A50—it would be helpful to say a little about the background to the development of the Government's quieter roads programme.

The strategic road network helps to support a healthy economy by providing the backbone for the effective distribution of goods and services and the easy movement of people, but it is not without disadvantages. People who live close to major roads sometimes experience the effects of increased noise, and the expansion of the road network inevitably disturbs the local environment, as my hon. Friend described.

A balance that satisfies our economic and environmental needs must be struck. Indeed, much can be done to minimise any negative impact on the environment. I often say that the Highways Agency is the second largest planter of trees in this country—second only to the Forestry Commission—so we do take environmental matters very seriously.

The Government recognise that traffic noise is a concern for many people, and in the White Paper, "A New Deal for Trunk Roads in England", which was published in July 1998, we gave a commitment that > "In future, whenever a road needs to be resurfaced, we shall ensure that the most appropriate noise reducing surfaces are used for those areas where noise is a particular concern."

I am sure that that will be of comfort to my hon. Friend.

In March 1999, we announced sift criteria for identifying the most serious and pressing cases, and a ring-fenced budget of £5 million a year for dealing with the most serious cases in which practical, cost-effective noise mitigation measures could be found. The criteria are as follows. First, trunk roads must have been opened before June 1988, but priority attention is to be given to locations affected by roads that have remained unaltered since October 1969—the qualifying date for the first introduction of noise mitigation measures. Secondly, current—that is, 1998—noise levels immediately adjacent to the road must have been at least 80 dB. Thirdly, in the case of roads opened or altered after October 1969, noise levels must be at least 3 dB greater than predicted for the design when the road was being planned. The aim was to address people's disappointment that the noise levels mentioned during the planning process were different from those experienced when the road was eventually opened.

In November 1999, a list appeared in Hansard under cover of a letter from the chief executive of the Highways Agency, showing the most serious and pressing cases to be studied to ascertain the most practical and cost-effective solutions. That became familiarly known as the "Hansard list". By the time of the Government's 10-year plan, published in July 2000, the Highways Agency had been set the target of installing quieter surfaces on more than 60 per cent. of the trunk road and motorway network, including all concrete stretches, by 2010–11. That will benefit approximately 3 million people living within about one third of a mile from such roads.

The Government's trunk road noise reduction policy over the period of the 10-year plan can be summarised as follows: a noise mitigation programme costing £5 million a year to address sites that meet the "Hansard list" criteria; resurfacing all concrete roads with quieter materials; and resurfacing black-top roads with quieter materials when normal maintenance is required.

About 5 per cent. of the trunk road network at some 70 different locations is constructed with a concrete surface. Clearly, given the scale of the problem, the work cannot be completed overnight. To ensure that cases are dealt with in order of priority, we have established criteria to be used to phase in the work over the 10 years. That will also ensure the effective use of resources and minimise disruption to road users.

In October 2001, the Government announced the criteria to be used by the Highways Agency to determine the priority for different parts of the network to be resurfaced by 2010–11. I shall set out those criteria. Where possible, the application of quieter surfaces will fit in with normal maintenance needs. Priority will be given to sites where treatment will benefit the greatest number of people. Works will be carried out in such a way as to minimise disruption to the general public and users of the trunk road and motorway network. Priority will be given to roads opened since June 1988 where noise levels have turned out to be significantly higher than was predicted when they were planned.

Following the announcement, the Highways Agency continued study work to identify schemes that satisfied the criteria. The fourth criterion was introduced because the extra noise arising from concrete surfaces remained the most significant factor causing excess nuisance from traffic once we had rectified the under-prediction attributable to underestimating traffic growth in assessments made before 1988. The agency also identified 17 roads with concrete surfaces that had been open since 1988, and undertook a programme of noise surveys to identify those that satisfied the fourth criterion. Following completion of that work, the Government announced in April 2003 a timetable for removing all concrete surfaces on the motorway and trunk road network by 2010–11. The report on the surveys of the 17 lengths of concrete road was placed in the Library.

In the first phase, between 2004–05 and 2006–07, more than 11,500 homes throughout the country will benefit from reduced traffic noise, and journeys on those roads will, of course, be quieter for motorists, too. Priority for the first phase of the work has been given to the schemes where resurfacing will benefit more than 100 properties per kilometre or, if the road was opened after June 1988, where the current noise level is 3 dB greater than predicted. That is equivalent to the noise increase expected from doubling the volume of traffic on the road. Of necessity, the arrangements are somewhat complex, but they are designed to ensure that the resurfacing work is carried out as equitably as possible.

[Mr. David Jamieson]

My hon. Friend raised specific points about the A38 and A50 trunk roads, and I fully understand her concerns about the resurfacing of the A38. Because of pressure to undertake urgent maintenance elsewhere in the region, since 1998 we have had to carry out minor works to keep the surface of the A38 intact. My hon. Friend referred to that. The section involved is between Branston and Clay Mills, to the west of Burton on Trent, and is known as the Burton bypass.

That section of road does not have a concrete surface. Various forms of an experimental quiet surfacing material, now known generically as porous asphalt, were put on trial there between 1984 and 1994. The experimental sections, which were about 100 m long, were spread over a length of about 4 km along the southbound carriageway between the junctions at Branston and Clay Mills. The northbound carriageway was mainly constructed with conventional hot-rolled asphalt.

The original reason for the experiment was to test the effectiveness of such material at reducing spray, which was a problem on the road because of the relatively high number of heavy goods vehicles that used it. It was realised that the porous surface, originally designed for airport runways to stop aquaplaning, might be useful for roads, but might also deteriorate rather quickly. Because of wear and tear over the 10 years, most of the trial surfaces had to be replaced with hot-rolled asphalt, which generates considerably more tyre noise than the new porous asphalt.

The resurfacing undertaken on the Burton bypass in 1998 was necessary to restore its skid-resistance. The most cost-effective treatment selected was surface dressing, as the underlying carriageway construction was sound. It was inevitable that restoring the surface roughness would increase noise to some extent. However, surface dressing is recognised as a treatment with a relatively short life, and in due course, it would be necessary to undertake some major works on the carriageway and replace the whole surface layer.

I am pleased to say that, as part of the normal maintenance programme, this section of the A38 is included in a major resurfacing scheme between Branston and Clay Mills programmed to take place in 2004–05. That is subject to the availability of funding—and my hon. Friend knows that we have been generous in funding our roads. I can confirm that the work will go ahead in the time scale that she described. It will include the provision of the quieter road surface that she asked about, which is likely to reduce traffic noise by as much as 30 per cent. That will be welcome to her constituents, some of whom live close to the road, particularly in the northern section. I hope that that is a sign of good news on the horizon for my hon. Friend.

The announcement by the Secretary of State in April 2003 listed the concrete section of the A50 between Blythe Bridge and Uttoxeter among those scheduled for resurfacing in the period between 2007–08 and 2010–11, subject to the availability of funding. My hon. Friend expressed concern that the Blythe Bridge to Uttoxeter section was treated differently from the Doveridge bypass, which was listed among those to be treated in the preceding three-year period. I assure my hon. Friend that that was not the case. The resurfacing of the Blythe Bridge to Uttoxeter section has been prioritised on a consistent basis with all other concrete sections, according to the criteria outlined earlier.

Doveridge bypass is scheduled for resurfacing before the Blythe Bridge to Uttoxeter section. That is because the Doveridge bypass, which was opened in 1998, meets the criterion of having been opened after June 1988, and having a noise level 3 dB greater than predicted. The section from Blythe Bridge to Uttoxeter, which opened in 1985, does not meet that criterion. Furthermore, resurfacing would not benefit more than 100 properties per kilometre.

Mrs. Dean: Does my hon. Friend accept that the increase in traffic has been greater, if anything, on the Blythe Bridge to Uttoxeter section? I accept the way in which things were worked out using the criteria. However, I would suggest that the effect on the ground is that the section of road between Blythe Bridge and Uttoxeter has noisier concrete than the Doveridge section. I do not want to push Doveridge back at all, but we should look at the case again. When a road is made up of sections built at different times, as the Uttoxeter to Blythe Bridge section is, the increase in noise may be equivalent to the increase in noise when traffic more than doubles, as it has done on the Doveridge section.

Mr. Jamieson: I accept my hon. Friend's point. I undertake to examine the recent surveys to reassure her that the matter has been dealt with consistently. Although we try to be fair, those further back in the process always feel a little hard done by, which I accept because the stress and anxiety caused by noise make them impatient to get the work done.

The Blythe Bridge to Uttoxeter section was considered for noise mitigation measures under the criteria announced in March 1999 to identify the most serious and pressing cases that merited further detailed study, which was promised in "A New Deal for Trunk Roads in England". Because the A50 from Blythe Bridge to Uttoxeter met the sift criteria, a detailed study was completed in April this year. The study revealed that the wide scatter of affected properties makes replacement of the concrete surface the most appropriate treatment to address the noise issues. Given the nature of the road, I think that my hon. Friend would agree that other mitigation measures would have a marginal effect on the properties; the road needs a different surface.

Mrs. Dean: Is it possible to examine pockets of properties along the Blythe Bridge to Uttoxeter section to see whether specific areas would benefit from planting? For example, Leigh's residents are affected by the noise from the A50.

Mr. Jamieson: I imagine that that work has already been done. I undertake to examine the survey to see whether a proportionate amount of money can be spent. Obviously, we do not want to spend money disproportionately, because that might push back the programme for resurfacing the whole road. If there are particular hot spots and we can deal with them economically, however, I will be happy to examine them. I think that my hon. Friend accepts that the answer is getting the road resurfaced, and when that happens, many of the other measures will become otiose. It was decided that resurfacing would be achieved within the commitment in the 10-year plan for transport, and priority was assigned according to the criteria that I have described.

It is too early to provide a more specific indication of when resurfacing may take place within the time frame set out by the Secretary of State for Transport in his April statement. However, I assure my hon. Friend that the Highways Agency will keep her informed as its detailed in-year programme develops. Although mitigating noise from trunk roads and motorways is a complex subject, I hope that she agrees that the Government are doing all they can to ensure that we have the fairest system that will benefit the greatest number of people over the next few years.

I congratulate my hon. Friend on raising this matter, because noise from roads intrudes on people's lives. It can cause a great deal of upset and makes people angry. That is especially true when traffic grows, which has clearly happened in Burton; Burton's economy is thriving, which means more vehicles on the road. I will make sure that my hon. Friend gets full and proper answers to the questions that she has raised.

Question put and agreed to.

EDUCATIONS AND SKILLS

Teachers' Pay (2004–06)

The Secretary of State for Education and Skills (Mr. Charles Clarke): The thirteenth report of the School Teachers' Review Body is being published today. It covers all the major pay changes over the period April 2004 to September 2006.[1] Copies are available in the Vote Office and the Library of the House of Lords and at http://www.teachernet.gov.uk/management/payandperformance/

In making their recommendations, the review body were required to have regard to the matters set out in the remit letters of 1 August 2002 and 11 July 2003. The STRB report deals with a wide range of weighty and complex issues. The review body has also been working to a much quicker timetable than usual which has placed special pressures on it and on the consultation partners. I am indebted to the review body and to other partners for the high degree of professionalism, dedication and skill they have shown in tackling such an important and difficult remit on such a timescale. STRBfs recommendations are set out below, followed in each case by my response.

General Pay Matters

The STRB have recommended the following:

We recommend a multi-year award.

We recommend that, with effect from September 2006, changes in pay rates be implemented in September each year rather than in April each year.

We recommend the following changes to classroom teachers' salary levels:

an increase of 2.5 per cent. from April 2004 and of 3.25 per cent. from April 2005 to end August 2006 in the values of the main scale and upper scale for qualified teachers the pay spine for Advanced Skills Teachers; and the pay scale for unqualified teachers.

These increases should also apply, in respect of all classroom teachers, to the values of the special needs allowances.

We further recommend that there be a re-opening clause under which any of the parties can ask us to review the matter of the above percentage increases awarded. This should take effect if the average rate of headline inflation for the respective preceding 12 months, April 2004—March 2005 or April 2005—March 2006, exceeds 3.25 per cent. or falls below 1.75 per cent.

[1] A further report from STRB on more technical matters will be published in February 2004 and be the subject of a separate consultation

I welcome the responsible and constructive way in which the STRB has tackled the issue of how to position an inflation-led, multi-year settlement. There is much here that I am able to endorse outright. Where I have not done so, it is to ensure changes are affordable for schools, as they also continue with workforce reform.

The background to the need for an inflation-led settlement is set out in detail in the recital of evidence in the STRB's report. In the Government's evidence document of 11 July we made clear that it is vital that heads and governors are enabled to meet the funding challenges of the next two years if the education of pupils is not to suffer. Pupils must always be our main concern.

I believe that the current recruitment and retention position is the healthiest one for many years. The statistics published today by the Teacher Training Agency, showing a rise of 8 per cent. in teacher training students, provide further evidence of the success story on recruitment. None the less, I concur with STRB that the position must be monitored and we must remain vigilant.

The STRB is also right, in my view, to highlight the importance, in trying to retain our best teachers, of tackling workload issues. That is why the national agreement on workforce reform is so important, with all that this agreement means for reducing excessive workload for teachers and helping them focus more exclusively on what matters most—teaching and learning. I am clear that, in looking at teachers' pay over the next two years, it is essential we do not allow the sort of increases that would have an adverse impact on teachers' jobs and workload and workforce reform.

The STRB's recommendations also respond imaginatively to the challenge of setting headline figures for several years in the future. Heads and Governors will reap very considerable benefit from such advance knowledge of what is overwhelmingly their main financial commitment, as teachers' pay is the largest call on their budget. I also note the STRB concern that teachers would worry if there were no safety valve if inflation turned out to be much higher than all reasonable forecasts are indicating.

I therefore endorse the recommendation that any of the statutory parties may ask the STRB to review the figures again if they are outside the parameters set by that recommendation. In such an event, I would expect the STRB to report to me and I would then consult on proposals in the usual way. Any recommendations would need to be considered carefully by the Government on merit and with due regard to affordability. In addition, in assessing the inflation position, I would want proper account to be taken of both RPI and RPIX.

I am also pleased to see that the STRB has supported the calls of my Department and the local authority employers that we should move to a September timing for all pay awards, ie headline increases should be paid from September at the same time as teachers receive any new incremental or performance-related increases. That will be another powerful boon to schools in aiding their financial planning and in giving them a buffer of five months in the early part of the financial year before their increased paybills take effect. Indeed, my proposals below mean we would actually be introducing this change a year early, in September 2005.

I believe that the STRB recommendations on headline pay show prudence, creativity and a strong sense of the priorities and challenges facing schools. I am able to endorse outright the 2.5 per cent. pay award proposed for April 2004.

However, a 3.25 per cent. pay increase for the full 12 months of 2005–06 would be a heavy burden for some schools to bear. For those in deficit it would worsen their ability to turn round their finances; and even for others, it would use up the headroom they need to raise standards and tackle other issues facing teachers such as their workload and the wider workforce reforms. Therefore, I must propose a phased approach to the recommended 3.25 per cent. pay increase in 2005–06.

I propose a 2.5 per cent. increase from April 2005 topped up to 3.25 per cent. from September 2005 (as in the attached pay scales). The next increase after that would be from September 2006. As I stated on 29 October, I will keep under review the guaranteed minimum increase for schools for the financial year 2005–06 and announce a final figure in due course.

In addition to these headline increases over the next two and a half years, I should perhaps note that many teachers will naturally continue to receive other pay elements of pay. For example, over 100,000 main scale teachers will receive annual increments of up to £2,000 each year. An even higher number will have reached upper pay scale point 2. And some 200,000 teachers will receive management allowances of between £1,638 and £10,572.

Local Approaches to Pay

The STRB have recommended the following:

> We recommend that the existing pay spines and the Outer London Allowance be replaced by new Outer London pay spines for qualified teachers, unqualified teachers, the leadership group and ASTs. Likewise, the existing pay spines and the Fringe Allowance should be replaced by new Fringe pay spines for qualified teachers, unqualified teachers, the leadership group and ASTs.
> We recommend a differential increase for outer London effective from April 2005
> From April 2005 to end August 2006, we recommend an enhanced increase in the values of the main and upper scale for qualified teachers, the pay spine for Advanced Skills Teachers and the pay scale for unqualified teachers in outer London.
> We also recommend an enhanced increase to the starting pay of all qualified classroom teachers in inner and outer London from April 2005 to end August 2006.

I welcome the principles and motives behind the important recommendation to give outer London and the Fringe their own consolidated pay scale, on the same lines as was introduced for inner London this year. I endorse these changes, which take us further in the direction of a more local and regional dimension to pay, but within a nationally determined framework. I look forward to seeing the STRB's further recommendations early next year on how we should continue to develop local and regional pay for the medium and longer term.

I am more cautious about the recommendation to increase outer London pay differentially from April 2005, as there is further debate to be had about whether these changes are based on hard evidence of need. The same reservations apply to the recommendations about starting pay for inner and outer London.

Major pay changes were introduced in inner London only in April. There is an argument that these must be given time to bed in and have effect. We also need to ensure that changes designed to improve recruitment and retention in inner London are not undermined by countervailing changes in the outer London area. Moreover, other measures are currently working their way through the system which may help remedy the issues reflected in the STRB report. These measures include the £1 billion key worker housing scheme recently announced by the Deputy Prime Minister, which will benefit hundreds of London teachers with their accommodation.

None the less, I am currently minded to endorse the principle of STRB's proposals, but would expect the implementation to take place from September 2005, in line with the phased timetable set out above for other teachers. I propose that the changes recommended for April 2005 should actually come into effect from September 2005.

Recruitment and retention allowances

The STRB have recommended the following:

> We recommend that the recruitment and retention allowance scale be abolished with effect from 1 April 2004.
> We recommend that payments for recruitment purposes should be made for a fixed period of up to a maximum of three years. For retention purpose, a three-year maximum should also apply, but with scope for renewal in exceptional circumstances.

I endorse these proposals. The STRB have drawn attention to the fact that the School Teachers' Pay and Conditions Document makes separate provision for schools and LEAs to pay recruitment and retention incentives and benefits, and that there is a degree of duplication between this more wide-ranging provision and the recruitment and retention allowance scale set out elsewhere in the Document. The STRB have said that continuing or new payments can be made by means of the more wide-ranging provision, rather than by means of a set scale.

I interpret the STRB's recommendation to mean that, from April 2004, all allowances currently awarded under what is currently paragraph 24 of the pay document (which sets out the scales and arrangements for payment) should either be abolished, or renewed under paragraph 48 of the pay document, and this is the proposal on which I am consulting. I also endorse the proposals about time-limited allowances.

However, I propose that, in addition to changes needed to the pay document, supplementary guidance on handling the range of issues which are involved here is worked up in consultation with the parties, with the aim of ensuring that teachers currently in receipt of recruitment and retention allowances are treated fairly.

The Upper Pay Scale

The STRB have recommended the following:

> We recommend that consultations take place urgently on a new framework for progression to U3 in both England and Wales, including: > rigorous criteria which enable schools to identify those teachers who are performing at the highest level;
> a grading system which enables schools to rank the performance of teachers in their school in relation to those criteria; and > a system of external assessment, using the threshold model. We recommend that this new framework be completed by 5 January 2004.

The STRB preface these recommendations by setting out a compelling vision for schools, in which:

> governors, heads and teachers are comfortable with the concept of rewards related to performance;
> schools are able to make decisions without detailed rules and guidance;
> high-quality performance management and professional development are available to all teachers to help them improve standards;
> schools have the confidence and capability to assess performance and reward staff; and > performance and reward systems are managed effectively, transparently and fairly.

I welcome this statement and the detailed commentary provided in the STRB report on where we are with the upper pay scale. I also welcome the STRB statement that:

"We wish to ensure that further progression up the scale is clearly based on merit. We believe this should result in a tapering pattern of progression in which teachers will have the opportunity, on performance grounds, to move up the scale but progressively fewer of them will do so. We see a more substantive role for continuing professional development in this model."

I must declare publicly my disappointment about the outcome on upper pay scale point 2, where too few schools made a serious attempt to differentiate between the relative performance of their teachers. If we go on in the same vein as UPS2 then schools will ultimately face a bill of £700 million by the time UPS5 has taken full effect, over and above a similar bill for threshold payments. That is not tenable.

In all walks of life people may perform competently, or highly effectively, or outstandingly well. We have the best ever generation of teachers. But to be clear that some are positively outstanding is no insult whatever to their able colleagues. The notion that every teacher is performing identically well fails to pay proper tribute to our very best teachers and defies common sense. I am grateful to those schools which have recognised this and showed the courage to administer UPS2 with appropriate rigour. The fact that some awarded points to only a minority of teachers disproves the argument made by others that this was impossible.

I now look to the pay partners to rally behind the STRB's proposals for where we should go now on UPS3, including the challenge to achieve a result by 5 January based on agreement with as many of the pay partners as is possible. I recognise that finding agreement will be difficult, but I am determined to succeed and am heartened by the success of the National Agreement on Workforce Reform. Therefore, I will be writing to all the statutory consultation partners today inviting them to work with us over the coming weeks to achieve a better way forward.

As these issues are taken forward, all parties should restrict any preconditions, so that all options can be considered thoroughly and frankly. As I made clear in my 11 July proposals, I must ensure that any outcomes are affordable and manageable for the school system; and I am committed to the tapered approach to progression advocated in the STRB report. We also need to take account of the legal position in Wales. But I do not rule out at this stage fundamental changes to the structure of the upper pay scale, albeit that these might need to be referred to the STRB for further consideration, which would have an additional impact on the timetable.

I have also been considering the issue of mainstreaming threshold and PRP monies into school budgets in England in 2005–06. Having taken account of representations from the headteacher associations, I am today announcing that no such transfer will take place and that these monies will instead go to schools as a Specific Formula Grant (paid via LEAs). That will enable the money to continue to be distributed to schools according to the numbers of threshold and post-threshold teachers, as at present, rather than through the more general local authority finance system.

Management Allowances

The STRB have recommended the following:

> We recommend that management allowances be increased in April 2004 and be frozen at this level thereafter. We further recommend that the parties discuss and agree as soon as possible a framework and guidance for new arrangements so that they can take effect by April 2005 to make payment for specific, additional, weighty responsibilities targeted on teaching and learning.
> We recommend that where management allowances are awarded in the transitional period until the implementation of the new arrangements, they should be awarded for a period of up to one year only.
> We recommend that the maximum level of payment available for duties under these new arrangements be £11,000. This value should apply from April 2005 or from such later date that the new arrangements are put into operation, in the event that the new arrangements are not ready to be implemented by April 2005.

We recommend there should be discussion, with resulting decisions and guidance, on the following aspects:

> The types of responsibilities for which payment should be made, advising on levels of payment, perhaps differentiated by type and size of school;
> Whether the payment scale should be open with only a minimum and a maximum amount specified (maximum to be the amount that we have recommended), leaving the actual payment to be decided by the school in line with agreed guidance; or
> Whether the payment scale should contain specific levels of payment (similar in concept to the current management allowance scale), leaving the school to decide on which specific level to pay, in line with agreed guidance;

Whether the payments should be made for a fixed term of up to three years, the term to be renewable if the teacher continues to undertake the duties;

Whether the minimum level should be lower than present management allowance 1; and

Whether there should be provision made for bonuses of up to £500 for teachers taking on one-off important learning and teaching projects, with smaller tasks and projects undertaken by teachers as part of their professional development, without payment.

The STRB report identifies a serious issue in schools that needs to be addressed over management allowances. There are now too many allowances in the system and too many of those that exist are really disguised retention or performance awards. An implausible 52 per cent. of teachers have such an allowance and the number of allowances is growing by 4 per cent. annually. Over £1 billion is currently being spent each year on all allowances. This development has begun to undermine confidence in the allowance system. It can also damagingly inflate a school's costs, at a time when budgets are already under pressure.

The school system needs to undergo a major sea change on staffing structures so that teachers are freed to teach and more and more administrative and managerial tasks are undertaken by non-teaching staff. That will help focus the precious resource of qualified teachers on the job they came into the profession to do - namely, teaching. And it will also help schools deal better wi[illegible]ding pressures.

The STRB's recommendations on management allowances are central to these wider changes. No one would argue against a substantial allowance being paid to, for example, a head of a subject department who is outside the leadership scale. But we must reverse the trend reported by the STRB and move rapidly to the new position they describe. That would freeze the financial level of current allowances and target future allowances on issues directly concerned with teaching and learning.

I therefore fully endorse the principle of the STRB's recommendations on the need to consult on a new system of management allowances to better reflect our teaching and learning priorities. However, I believe it is possible, through discussion with the parties, to make faster progress. Therefore, I propose bringing forward by one year to April 2004 the recommendation to freeze the value of management allowances – ie. there will be no further inflation-uprating of current allowances.

I believe that the new, targeted, allowances should be introduced either from April 2004, if the criteria and arrangements for them can be worked out with the consultation partners in time; or otherwise from as soon as possible thereafter. This more rapid timescale is essential if we are to nip this worrying trend in the bud; and if we are to minimise the uncertainty that would inevitably surround any "transitional" arrangement applying throughout 2004–05.

I endorse the recommendations to cap the new management allowances at £11,000. In the event that the new system cannot be introduced in time for April 2004, I endorse the recommendation that any old-style allowances awarded in 2004–05 should be for a maximum of one year only.

Leadership Group Pay

The STRB have recommended the following:

We recommend that the percentage increases in value to the pay scales for qualified teachers that we have recommended in paragraph 21 of chapter 4, be applied to the leadership group pay spine.

I welcome the STRB's careful consideration of the issues relating to leadership group pay. In reaching the decisions that there should be no specific changes to the leadership group pay spine other than those applying to pay scales for qualified teachers, they have looked carefully at labour market issues for heads, whether there was a need for action for particular groups, and the case for a change in the basis for calculating differentials.

I endorse the recommendation that there should be no specific changes for leadership group pay other than the general uplift. I propose, however, that the uplift should be adjusted as set out above and phased in the same way as my proposals in relation to other qualified teachers.

Next steps

I am now initiating consultation with the employer organisations, the teacher associations and other interested parties as required under section 126 of the Education Act 2002, before I make provision by order for teachers' pay and conditions in 2004–05.

Summary of Secretary of State's proposals

The national pay award should be as follows:

2.5 per cent. from April 2004

2.5 per cent. from April 2005, topped up to 3.25 per cent. from September 2005 (as in the attached pay scales)

All pay awards should run from September with effect from September 2005.

The figures above should be open to further STRB review if inflation is more than 3.25 per cent. or less than 1.75 per cent. on average over a 12 month period as specified by STRB.

Outer London allowance should be rolled into the basic pay to create a new outer London pay scale from April 2004 (as attached). Fringe Area allowance should be treated similarly to create a new Fringe Area pay scale from April 2004 (attached).

Outer London salaries should increase differentially from September 2005 (see attached scales).

Starting salaries in inner and outer London should increase differentially from September 2005 (see attached scales).

From April 2004, recruitment and retention allowances should not be subject to a scale as at present; but such allowances should then be payable to individuals only for periods of three years, except that the period for retention allowances could be extended in exceptional cases.

A new framework should be established for resolving issues on the upper pay scale.

Current management allowances will be frozen at their current cash values. Work will begin on a new type of management allowance to be introduced from April 2004 or as soon as possible thereafter.

There should be no specific changes for leadership group pay other than the general uplifts.

Responses to the consultation letter are required by 12 December 2003. However, in line with the STRB's proposals on the upper pay scale, as summarised above, discussions on that issue may continue if necessary until 5 January 2004 in the interests of reaching as broadly based an agreement as possible.

Detailed information on current and recommended pay levels April 2004 to August 2006 has been placed in the Library.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Television Licence Fees

The Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (Tessa Jowell): The television licence fee settlement announced by the Government in February 2000 provides for changes in the licence fee of RPI plus 1.5 per cent. for each year from 2000–01 to 2006–07. This settlement is designed to enable the BBC to provide a strong and distinctive schedule of high quality programmes and remain at the forefront of broadcasting technology. The settlement includes a requirement for the Corporation to raise around £1.1 billion through efficiency savings and increased income over the same period.

Application of the RPI figure of 2.8 per cent. for the year to September 2003, plus 1.5 per cent. to the current unrounded licence fees produces new rounded totals of £121.00 for a colour licence and £40.50 for a black and white licence. The necessary regulations to bring these fees into force will be laid before the House in due course. The changes will come into effect from 1 April next year.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (Angela Smith): The Annual Report and Statement of Accounts for the Fire Authority of Northern Ireland for the financial year 2002–03 were published today.

ENVIRONMENT, FOOD AND RURAL AFFAIRS

Rural Delivery

The Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (Margaret Beckett): I am very pleased to welcome today the publication of Lord Haskins' report on Rural Delivery, copies of which are in the Libraries of both Houses. I would like to take this opportunity to thank Lord Haskins and his team for all their work. The report is compelling in its analysis of the rural delivery landscape as confusing for customers and too bureaucratic and centralised to meet our future challenges. This echoes the concerns which led us to commission his report. While we have already begun to address these concerns, this report helps us take our work forward.

Shortly we will also be publishing a review—three years on—of the Rural White Paper alongside a study of economic performance in rural areas from Birkbeck College. In the New Year, drawing on the three reports, we expect to publish a "refreshed" rural strategy.

I attach a copy of Lord Haskins' recommendations, but will single out for comment a few key issues.

Next steps

My first priority is an immediate full review of rural funding schemes to provide a clearer and simpler framework for applicants and to achieve a reduction in bureaucratic procedures.

In the principles he published in the summer Lord Haskins called for a clearer division of responsibility between policy making and delivery. Government's clear role is to set the framework for policy. But is clear that policy advice can be particularly valuable when it comes from those involved in delivery. I attach huge importance to independent advice from my Department's agencies and partners. I do not intend to lose that advice.

An Integrated Agency

A major challenge in the 21st century is the effective stewardship of land in England against the need to conserve and improve the natural environment, maintaining and enhancing biodiversity. Lord Haskins recommends bringing together elements of the work done by English Nature, the Countryside Agency and the Rural Development Service where those functions will most enable the agency to reflect its new remit. I accept that broad recommendation. We will also consider how to achieve alignment of the Forestry Commission with the integrated agency.

The integrated agency will build on the successes and expertise of its constituent parts, such as English Nature's worldwide reputation on biodiversity matters. It will create a single, stronger authoritative body, accelerating integration of work on biodiversity, natural resource protection and landscape issues in order to improve the environment across rural, urban, marine and coastal England. It will provide independent policy advice and implement policy within the framework of the Government's approach to sustainable development. I will look for a legislative opportunity as soon as possible to formalise arrangements for the agency, and am pleased the constituent bodies have agreed to work with DEFRA to make practical progress before that point. This will allow continuity for the organisations, their staff and stakeholders, while preparing for the future.

Countryside Agency

Lord Haskins recommended the abolition of the Countryside Agency. I do not, however, agree that there will be no role for it. There will be a continued need for a much smaller organisation, with a new, well focused role providing independent policy advice to Government from a national perspective on issues affecting people in rural communities, and analysing and reporting on best practice in the delivery of the Government's rural policies. We also need to build on experience so far on rural proofing and embedding rural objectives in all relevant aspects of government policy.

REGIONAL AND LOCAL DELIVERY

Lord Haskins recommends devolution of the way in which the DEFRA family delivers its policies to achieve greater effectiveness and accountability at regional and local level. My Department will therefore be discussing with the Regional Development Agencies, the Government Offices for the Regions, local government, the Rural Affairs Forum and the voluntary sector how to define new mechanisms for delivering services to rural communities, which will be accompanied by strong and effective performance management arrangements.

Much work will be required to develop these proposals into a practical implementation plan, which we hope to publish in the spring. I want to work in partnership on this with all those concerned to secure real improvements in sustainable development from biodiversity to resource protection. This is not only in the interests of Britain's rural communities, but in the interests of us all.

LORD HASKINS, RECOMMENDATIONS

To improve accountability through a clearer separation of responsibility for policy and delivery functions (see Chapter 4):

DEFRA should review and clarify its rural policy remit in order to ensure that it is consistently understood by all concerned, including those who deliver its policies.

DEFRA's prime responsibility should be the development of policy, and it should arrange for the delivery of its policies through national, regional and local agencies. Policy and delivery functions should be managed separately so that accountability for policy and delivery is clearly defined.

The separation of policy and delivery functions will require DEFRA to consult delivery organisations at the earliest stages in policy formulation and to require the latter to put forward proposals for t he effective delivery of policy. I n this way the delivery organisations will be more accountable for effective management of programmes, and there should be less duplication of existing regional and local schemes. DEFRA will continue to appoint members of the various boards and to hold them accountable for their performance.

DEFRA policy officials should develop a good understanding of delivery issues through a programme of training and secondments to delivery organisations. An understanding of delivery issues must be given higher priority in the assessment of individual performance. Secondments and recruitment from delivery organisations should also be encouraged in order to improve mutual understanding.

Deliverers should agree targets with DEFRA, working with the Treasury, rather than having unrealistic ones imposed on them by Whitehall. This would include DEFRA's rural PSA. In this way delivery organisations will accept greater ownership of these targets, which will be more achievable and less vulnerable to manipulation. There should be greater emphasis on setting rural targets that are linked to outcomes (such as an increase in species numbers) rather than outputs (such as the number of grants processed).

Delivery organisation should have the maximum flexibility to allocate resources in the most effective ways, whilst keeping the necessary discipline over administrative costs.

DEFRA should agree shared targets with other government departments and their delivery organisations as an essential means of securing better delivery of its rural policy objectives. This will strengthen DEFRA's ability to influence outcomes.

DEFRA should improve the quality of its management information so that it can take better informed decisions and control the administrative costs associated with the schemes and services that it funds.

In pursuit of the objectives of separating policy from delivery and of devolving delivery, the functions of the Countryside Agency should be transferred to the appropriate specialist organisations. Thus:

policy development (including the commissioning of pilots and demonstration projects), together with the promotion of rural proofing would pass to DEFRA and the Government Offices; social and economic programmes would pass to regional and local networks of Regional Development Agencies (RDAs), local authorities and the voluntary and community sector; environmental, landscape, access and recreational programmes would pass to the new, integrated agency proposed below (see Recommendation 16); review of rural proofing, challenge and external advice would pass to a reformed Rural Affairs Forum for England (see below).

In the light of these changes the Countryside Agency would cease to be required as a separate organisation.

To bring delivery closer to the customer by devolving greater power to regional and local organisations to deliver economic and social policy (see Chapter 5):

RDAs should play a key role in the devolved delivery of DEFRA's rural economic and social agenda. They must therefore demonstrate and develop their capacity to contribute to sustainable development in addressing rural needs.

A concordat with DEFRA should be established as a first step towards making the RDAs accountable for their part in achieving DEFRA's policy objectives on rural sustainable development.

The successors to the existing business and farm diversification schemes (the so-called "project-based schemes") that are administered by DEFRA's Rural Development Service under the England Rural Development Programme should become the responsibility of Regional Development Agencies, which will arrange for their delivery.

Regional Development Agencies should have the lead responsibility in co-ordinating public sector rural business support and advice. To that end they should take direct responsibility for Business Links. They should take steps to improve the quality and consistency of business support and advisory services.

Local authorities and local partnerships should assume the main responsibility for delivery of schemes and services to rural communities. They should be fully consulted by DEFRA and the RDAs about any changes to policy and delivery arrangements and should be given the necessary flexibility to address local needs. The potential of Rural Community Councils as partners in community based delivery is underestimated and should be enhanced.

As part of the next round of local public service agreements DEFRA, working with other government departments and the Local Government Association should agree joint Whitehall targets for the delivery of rural policies by local authorities.

To develop a more integrated approach to sustainable land management by rationalising agencies with overlapping agendas (see Chapter 6):

The government should establish an integrated agency to promote sustainable use of land and the natural environment. This is necessary in order to prepare for the expanding land management agenda and to improve co-ordination and service delivery to customers. This would be achieved through a merger of English Nature, DEFRA's Rural Development Service and some functions of the Countryside Agency. Its remit should embrace biodiversity, historical landscape, natural landscape, natural resources, access and recreation.

DEFRA should establish close collaboration between the Environment Agency and the new, integrated agency so that their activities complement each other.

Consistent with the principle of clear separation of policy from delivery functions, the policy development role of the Forestry Commission in England should be transferred to DEFRA.

Following the creation of the new integrated agency, it is logical to integrate or closely align the delivery functions (regulation, incentives, advice) of the Forestry Commission with those of the new agency.

I would also expect DEFRA to seek opportunities to rationalise the various levy-funded organisations that it sponsors in respect of certain agricultural sectors for marketing, developmental and other purposes. There is scope to share resources (administrative, economic and research) between the various boards and to strengthen support for industry programmes if savings are realised through rationalisation.

To improve the coordination of delivery by enhancing the role of Government Offices for the Regions as coordinators and monitors (see Chapter 7):

The Government Offices for the Regions should be given a stronger remit to promote co-ordination of and to monitor rural delivery and to promote rural proofing on behalf of DEFRA. Regional Rural Priority Boards, chaired by Government Offices and including key regional and local bodies responsible for rural regeneration and service delivery, should be set up to provide strategic coordination and monitoring.

Delivery agencies should strengthen joint working through the development of joint regional delivery plans. These would include designated lead delivery partners, agreed joint targets, shared resources and clear accountability for delivery.

DEFRA should consult earlier and more closely with the Government Offices to ensure more coordinated policy development and strategic planning at the national level and reduce the number of strategies that are handed down to the regions.

The Government Offices should focus on their role as coordinators and monitors of programmes affecting rural areas and not be involved in direct delivery. They should disengage from their current role in the administration of EU Structural Funds if and when these are replaced by a national programme of regional regeneration, as the government has proposed.

Regional Rural Affairs Forums (RRAFs), comprising representatives of rural customers and beneficiaries, should become the forums in which national and regional delivery of rural policies is reviewed and reported on. Their key duties would be:

to highlight important issues and priorities for rural development and service delivery; to comment on the effectiveness of rural development and service delivery in their region and identify areas for improvement; to comment on the impact and effectiveness of existing policy developments and rural proofing initiatives and to generate new ideas; to provide leadership to help drive rural development at regional and local level. The RRAFs would receive secretariat services from the proposed Rural Priorities Board secretariat.

To make things better for the customer and get greater value for money for the taxpayer through a more integrated approach to regulation and through simpler services (see Chapter 8):

The Government Offices for the Regions should work with regional and local organisations to develop a more co-ordinated approach to front line delivery. This should include spreading best practice between regions on integrated delivery and facilitation, recognising what is practical and affordable.

DEFRA, as the lead body, should accelerate the development of a "whole farm approach" that will ensure better co-ordination of government regulation and compliance, subsidy, advice and financial incentives linked to farm businesses. This would require:

the development of an integrated rural database linked to land-based business (to which the Environment Agency would have access, subject to resolution of data privacy constraints);

Risk-based self-assessment backed up by audit, preferably using such independent bodies as FWAG and LEAF; encouraging more rapid uptake of internet use by farmers and rural businesses in general;

the creation of a farm advisory service in the light of the recent settlement on CAP-reform; this would logically fall under the control of the new integrated agency.

In view of the expanding agri-environmental protection agenda, the Environment Agency should agree with local authorities a supplementary role on regulation and compliance. Local authorities should agree standards for delivery with the Agency and call in its support where the extent of a problem or the risks connected with it are beyond the authorities' capacity to manage.

Local authorities should take the lead local role in co-ordinating general regulation and compliance advice on farm premises.

DEFRA should rationalise its inspection functions, integrating them wherever possible with existing regulatory authorities to achieve administrative savings and avoid duplication of skills.

DEFRA should review all rural funding streams and schemes, to achieve a more rational, transparent and comprehensible approach to the administration of financial incentives and to ensure that all new initiatives are consistent with DEFRA's delivery strategy, add real value and do not duplicate.

DEFRA should review and simplify the current procedural rules connected with grants to rural businesses and communities in order to provide greater discretion in the execution and targeting of grants in a user-friendly way, consistent with state-aid rules.

Reporting on progress:

DEFRA should publish progress reports on the implementation of my recommendations in the spring or summer of 2004, 2005, 2006 and 2007.

TREASURY

Scotland Office/Wales Office (Financial Arrangements)

The Chief Secretary to the Treasury (Mr. Paul Boateng): The Secretaries of State for Scotland and Wales are responsible for the expenditure of the Scotland Office and the Wales Office within the Department for Constitutional Affairs, including payment of grant to the devolved administrations, although for normal accounting purposes the provision of the former Scotland and Wales Office Departments will be transferred to the Department for Constitutional Affairs. The expenditure for each Office will be contained within separate requests for resources in the DCA Estimate and the Heads of the Scotland and Wales Offices will be appointed as additional accounting officers by the Treasury. Any future changes in the provision for the Scotland Office or the Wales Office will be determined in spending reviews and will continue to be found within the aggregate Scotland and Wales funding in the normal way. The Secretaries of State will continue to represent the interests of Scotland and Wales, including in respect of financial aspects of the devolution settlement.

Home Reversion Plans

The Paymaster General (Dawn Primarolo): The Treasury is today publishing a consultation document seeking evidence to inform an in-depth analysis of the costs and benefits of regulation by the Financial Services Authority (FSA) of home reversion plans. Copies of the document have been placed in the Library. Responses to the consultation are requested by 13 February 2004.

WORK AND PENSIONS

Pension Credit

The Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (Mr. Andrew Smith): I can now report further progress on the take-up of pension credit, which became payable on 6 October. I can also report the publication today of new research by my Department looking at pensioners' motivations and barriers to claiming the minimum income guarantee (MIG), the predecessor to pension credit, and their likely reactions to the new entitlement. Figures represent the period up to 31 October 2003, unless stated otherwise.

There are now 1.97 million pensioner households (around 2.3 million individuals) on our systems being paid pension credit, including 82,000 new pension credit households (over 96,000 individuals) in October. As at 17 October, there are over 1.2 million households (around 1.4 million individuals) now receiving more money as a result of the introduction of pension credit. The pension credit application line, at our four sites across the country, has received 1.3 million calls since it became operational on 7 April and 370,000 signed applications have been returned to pension centres. The average pension credit award is £47.10 per week.

Our direct mail campaign is continuing, supported by a major advertising campaign on TV and in the press which began in September. We are continuing to work with partner organisations, such as Help The Aged, Age Concern and Citizens Advice, among others, both at a national and local level, to encourage eligible people to take up their entitlement.

There is plenty of time for pensioners to apply for pension credit. To ensure that pensioners do not lose out, there is a 12 month backdating provision until October 2004. This will allow applications to be backdated to October 2003, where entitlement exists, or to the date entitlement begins if this is later.

I am placing in the Library a set of charts and tables showing progress so far, including regional breakdowns of the number of pension credit households. Copies are also available for hon. Members in the Vote Office. From this month onwards, I will provide monthly progress reports on take-up of pension credit.

A copy of the research report "Entitled but not claiming?: Pensioners, the Minimum Income Guarantee and Pension Credit" (DWP Research Report No. 197) has also been placed in the Library. The aims of the research were to further understand barriers to MIG take-up (and, potentially, pension credit take-up), in order to help identify ways of overcoming them, to explore likely reactions to the new pension credit, before its introduction, and to provide data to improve my Department's estimates of take-up of MIG.

Working Parents Payments

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (Mr. Chris Pond): Currently small employers whose gross national insurance contribution payments in a tax year are £40,000 or less (the Small Employer's Relief Threshold) can recover 100 per cent. of the Statutory Maternity Pay (SMP) they pay out plus an additional amount of 4.5 per cent. in compensation for the employers' share of National Insurance contributions due on SMP payments. Small employers paying out Statutory Adoption Pay (SAP) and Statutory Paternity Pay (SPP) recover those payments on the same basis as for SMP.

The threshold has been £40,000 since April 2002 when it was doubled in anticipation of the recent improvements made to maternity pay. Doubling the threshold meant that around 60 per cent. of all employers paying SMP, SPP and SAP in a year will get full reimbursement. The increase in national insurance contributions from April 2003 will affect the number of small employers able to claim full reimbursement from 6 April 2004. The threshold is therefore being increased to £45,000 from 6 April 2004 to continue to ensure that around 60 per cent. of all employers paying SMP, SPP and SAP will get back 104.5 per cent. of the money they pay out. Regulations will shortly be laid to achieve this change.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Kosovo

The Minister for Europe (Mr. Denis MacShane): Over the past months it has become clear that the stability of Kosovo, and the Balkans, is increasingly affected by a lack of a clear way forward on its final status within the terms of UNSCR 1244. The Contact-Group has therefore designed a new approach.

It is based on a review mechanism, conducted in consultation with UNMIK, the Contact Group and the PISG, to monitor Kosovo's progress on implementation of the internationally endorsed standards set by the UN. There will be quarterly reviews with a first opportunity for a formal assessment of progress in mid-2005, or earlier if sufficient progress has been made. If the assessment is positive then the UN Security Council will consider whether a process should be initiated for a final settlement as laid down in UNSCR 1244. In the event of a negative assessment, more work would need to be done on the standards, and a date set for a further review. The Contact Group's intention is not to express a view on final status itself. This would be premature. The aim is to advance standards, assess how much progress has been made on those standards, and judge whether or not such progress could justify addressing final status as UNSCR 1244 requires.

This approach was outlined on 4–5 November in Belgrade and Pristina by the United States' Under-Secretary for Political Affairs, Marc Grossman, with the Special Representative of the UN Secretary-General (SRSG) for Kosovo Harri Holkeri and local Contact Group representatives. UNMIK has a key role in this strategy. SRSG Holkeri has our full support. EU High Representative Javier Solana has also welcomed this strategy.

DEFENCE

Project Aquatrine

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence (Mr. Ivor Caplin): I am pleased to inform the House that the C2C consortium has today been announced as the preferred bidder for the second of three contracts for the provision of water and wastewater services to Ministry of Defence sites in the North and East of England.

Project Aquatrine is one of the Government's leading and most significant Public Private Partnership (PPP) Projects and will transfer the responsibility for the operation and maintenance of the Department's water and wastewater assets and infrastructure throughout Great Britain to private sector providers. This Project will enable the transfer of environmental risk to those in the private sector who are best placed to manage it.

This contract is expected to go live in September 2004 following a pre-commencement period.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Best Value Authorities (Discretionary Services)

The Minister for Local Government, Regional Governance and Fire (Mr. Nick Raynsford): The Government has today published guidance for best value authorities in England on the general power to charge for discretionary services provided in the Local Government Act 2003. Copies of the guidance are available in the Libraries of both Houses. Separate guidance is to be issued for Wales.

The Local Government Act 2003 provides all best value authorities in England and Wales with a new power to charge for discretionary services (section 93). Charges made under the new general power are subject to certain restrictions including a duty to ensure that the income from charges does not exceed the costs of provision.

The guidance offers advice on:

- The scope of the general power to charge for discretionary services;
- Which authorities benefit from the power;
- Discretionary services;
- The limitation to cost recovery;
- Calculating the costs and setting the charge;
- The Competition Acts and the effect on local businesses;
- The power at section 94 to disapply the new power to charge; and
- The power at section 97–98 to modify existing legislation that in some way restricts an authority's ability to charge for the provision of a discretionary service under section 93.

This guidance applies only to the new power at section 93 of the Act to charge for discretionary services and to the related powers at sections 94 and 97–98 of the Act. It is issued under the power at section 93(6). Best value authorities must have regard to the advice it contains when charging for discretionary services using the new power. Copies are being sent to all best value authorities and other interested parties. The guidance builds on the draft published for consultation in March 2003 and takes account of the responses received to that consultation.

Ascension Island

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (Mr. Bill Rammell): The Wideawake Agreement between the United Kingdom and the United States Governments, which allows for the opening of Wideawake Airfield on Ascension Island to civilian charter traffic, was signed on 1 October.

At present access to Ascension Island for civilians is by ship, or on RAF flights between Brize Norton and the Falkland Islands. The UK Government wishes to improve access to Ascension Island, in order to provide an essential building block for its future economic development. The UK Government has therefore agreed with the US Government that the US Wideawake military airbase on Ascension Island may be used for a limited number of civilian charter flights every week.

It will be for airlines to decide on commercial grounds whether to take the opportunity to fly to Ascension Island. The UK Government will work closely with the Ascension Island Government to encourage airlines to fly there. A prospectus will be issued in early 2004.

The opening of the airfield is part of the modernisation process of Ascension Island. In 2002 a fiscal regime was introduced and the first ever Island Council was formed. The Ascension Island Government is working to continue this process and is preparing a strategic plan providing a vision for the Island for the next five years. A copy of the Wideawake Agreement will be laid before Parliament as a Command paper in due course.

Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health (Miss Melanie Johnson): The Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority's 12th annual report and accounts 2003 were laid before Parliament today.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prison Service

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department (Paul Goggins): The performance data for HMP Moorland and HMYOI Hatfield published in Appendix 1 of the Prison Service Annual Report and Accounts for 2002–03 are shown separately but should have been combined. In June 2002, HMYOI Hatfield became an integral part of HMP Moorland and it is not appropriate or accurate to show the figures separately. Indeed the figures for cost per prisoner and cost per place cannot be separated.

In Appendix 1 of the published Prison Service Annual Report and Accounts, establishments are categorised by their main role only. Establishments that have more than one role have been placed in the category that represents the primary or dominant function of the prison. For this reason, performance of prisons ostensibly within the same category cannot necessarily be compared on a like-for-like basis. Performance at the following establishments in particular during 2002–03 was affected by dual functionality:

Brinsford (YO/Juvenile)	Moorland (Closed/Open)
Castington (YO/Juvenile)	Onley (YO/Juvenile)
Durham (Adult Male/Female)	Stoke Heath (YO/Juvenile)
Feltham (YO/Juvenile)	Thorn Cross (YO/Juvenile)
Highpoint (Adult Male/Female)	Winchester (Adult Male/Female)
Lancaster Farms (YO/Juvenile)	Wealstun (Closed/Open)

A correction to the Prison Service Annual Report and Accounts 2002–03 covering these issues has been placed in the Library.

CABINET OFFICE

Regulatory Impact Assessments

The Minister for the Cabinet Office and Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (Mr. Douglas Alexander): The Government are committed to ensuring that regulations are necessary, give effective protection, balance cost and risk, are fair and command public confidence. In accordance with this, we require Departments to produce and publish RIAs for all regulatory proposals likely to have an impact on business, charities or voluntary bodies.

I have today presented to Parliament a Command Paper listing RIAs published between 1 January and 30 June 2003. Copies of those listed have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses. This is the 19th such Command Paper.

DEFENCE

Defence Industrial Policy

The Minister of State, Ministry of Defence (Mr. Adam Ingram): The Government launched their Defence Industrial Policy in October 2002. We sought to maximise the economic benefit to the United Kingdom from our investment in defence and to enhance the competitiveness and global sustainability of our defence industry. Since we launched the policy we have worked closely with industry to develop and pursue a joint implementation plan. We have completed a review of progress over the first year. During this time our close and productive relationship with industry has developed further and we have agreed how we will take forward our common aims over the next few years.

The policy has been a significant driver in bringing together Government and industry, resulting in better communication and access to information. We both recognise that the policy is for the long-term and that it will take some time to measure the full effects on defence programmes and the industry that supports them. We remain committed to the policy and will continue to monitor its effectiveness and to develop best practice in this area among the MOD acquisition community. We will also continue to work to improve access to overseas defence markets and to maximise the benefits from our investment in research and technology. We will conduct a further review of progress in a year's time. Copies of the review have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses and on the Ministry of Defence and DTI websites.

EDUCATION AND SKILLS

Examinations System

The Secretary of State for Education and Skills (Mr. Charles Clarke): I am grateful to the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority (QCA), the other regulatory authorities and the examination boards for their hard work in ensuring that the exam system ran smoothly this year. It is nonetheless a system under strain. QCA has therefore developed proposals to ensure we have an examinations system fit for the 21st century which will support rising standards in schools and colleges.

I am announcing today that I shall be making some £50 million available to QCA in each of 2004–05 and 2005–06 by reprioritising from within my existing resources. In doing so, I remain committed to ensuring that schools are properly funded. The resources released for modernisation will not impact on the money available for school funding.

The overall programme will include improving the supply and quality of examiners; upgrading examinations offices in schools and colleges and supporting the work of examinations officers; improving the system for the transfer of information between schools, colleges and awarding bodies; and streamlining and making more secure the movement of examination papers and scripts between awarding bodies, schools and colleges, and examiners. It will also cover some developmental work on increased use of ICT in the examinations system, including some piloting of e-marking. The programme will also cover some short-term work aimed at reducing the assessment load and complexity.

QCA are also proposing to establish a new National Assessment Agency. This body would still be accountable to QCA's Chief Executive and Board. It would work with the examination boards to secure the long-term viability of the examination system and lead the way in modernising it through the five strands of work which I have announced today, including through the use of its own ring-fenced budget. It would also be responsible for administering the tests that take place at the end of each key stage, but not for the regulatory functions which would remain with the main QCA. The establishment of the new agency would thus ensure that these two potentially conflicting responsibilities are kept apart.

This programme of work represents a considerable investment in the examinations system. I believe it will make for an efficient, robust and modern examinations system such that our young people deserve.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Homeless Households

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Office of the Deputy Prime Minister (Yvette Cooper): I am pleased to announce today that in the light of positive responses to the public consultation on the Government's proposals to improve standards of temporary accommodation for homeless households we intend to:

Make an Order under s.210 of the 1996 Housing Act to come into force on 1 April 2004 to end the long-term (defined as more than six weeks) use of Bed and Breakfast (B&B) accommodation as temporary accommodation for homeless families with children or where a member of the household is pregnant;

Issue statutory guidance to bring together and re-state existing minimum standards for all temporary accommodation used by housing authorities to accommodate homeless families and individuals under the legislation;

Issue statutory guidance on additional standards that should apply to B&B accommodation where this is used by housing authorities to accommodate homeless families and individuals under the legislation; and

Issue statutory guidance on the arrangements that should be put in place to ensure that all households placed in temporary accommodation by housing authorities under the legislation receive support to ensure that their health, education and welfare needs are met.

A summary of responses to the consultation will be made available on the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister's website http://www.odpm.gov.uk/.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Anti-Terrorism, Crime and Security Act (Detentions)

The Secretary of State for the Home Department (Mr. David Blunkett): Sixteen foreign nationals have so far been detained using powers in Part IV of the Anti-terrorism, Crime and Security Act 2001. Eight were detained in December 2001, one in February 2002, two in April 2002, one in October 2002, one in November 2002, two in January 2002 and one in October 2003. One further individual has been certified under Part IV of the ATCS Act in August 2003 but is detained under other powers.

Of the total detained, two have voluntarily left the United Kingdom. The other fourteen remain in detention.

My decisions to detain these individuals were made on the basis of detailed and compelling evidence. That evidence is being examined by the Special Immigration Appeals Commission as the individuals' appeals are heard, as provided for under the ATCS Act. The Commission is equivalent to the High Court. It has the power to overturn my decisions.

Where terrorism is concerned, our paramount responsibility is to ensure public safety and national security. So long as the public emergency subsists, where a person is suspected of terrorism but cannot currently be removed and for whom a criminal prosecution is not an option, we believe that it is necessary and proportionate to provide for extended detention, pending removal.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Housing Revenue Account Subsidy (2004–2005)

The Minister for Housing and Planning (Keith Hill): The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister consulted local authorities and others over the summer on proposals to introduce a new and fairer way of allocating management and maintenance (M&M) allowances within Housing Revenue Account (HRA) subsidy. The new approach was designed to take better account of the challenges now facing local authorities, including low demand and tackling anti-social behaviour. We also consulted on proposals about the treatment of debt charges within the HRA subsidy system in light of the new prudential borrowing regime. There was general support for our objectives, and we are today issuing final proposals for 2004–05 for consultation. These take account of a number of changes made in response to suggestions made to us by local government.

The proposed M&M allocations see significant increases for many authorities, with national increases in both management and maintenance allowances of 6 per cent. in real terms. This, and associated technical changes to the allowances to take account of rent restructuring, will provide local government with an extra £133 per dwelling compared with 2003–04.

To protect those authorities that would otherwise see a reduction in M&M allowances, the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister is proposing generous transitional protection so that all authorities receive at least an inflation level increase per dwelling for both 2004–05 and 2005–06. We intend that transitional protection should continue beyond that period, subject to the outcome of the next Spending Review.

We are also proposing that the Major Repairs Allowance should increase in line with inflation next year, and that local authorities should move their rents gradually towards their restructured rents, with average increases nationally of 1.5 per cent. in real terms.

From 2004–05, rent rebates will no longer be accounted for in the Housing Revenue Account and will no longer be subsidised through the HRA subsidy system. Instead, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions will allocate subsidy for rent rebates alongside his responsibilities in respect of subsidy for rent allowances and council tax benefit. Rent rebate subsidy limitation will continue to operate. There will be transitional arrangements to prevent this move from the HRA to the General Fund affecting council tax payers in 2004–05.

On the capital side, the redistributive mechanism of set-aside is being replaced by pooling. Housing capital receipts will be pooled in the year they arise. Following consultation on the new subsidy arrangements, therefore, reserved receipts that have arisen in 2002–03 and 2003–04 (except those arising from large scale and small scale voluntary transfers) will not now be taken into account in the calculation of HRA subsidy entitlement.

The requirement to set aside funds from revenue for debt repayment has been abolished in the HRA, along with the corresponding subsidy element. In some cases, this will have a negative effect on authorities' finances. We are therefore proposing a new allowance, which will compensate authorities over the next three with a reducing proportion of any loss.

Copies of the draft HRA subsidy and Item 8 determinations for 2004–05, as well as the draft general determination of administration of HRA subsidy 2003 and supporting material, are being placed in the Libraries of the House, and will be available on the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister's web site www.odpm.gov.uk/housing/consult/. These allocations are based on the most up-to-date information available to us from authorities, and may change as that information is refined. Authorities have until 16 December to comment on the draft determinations.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Man-portable Air Defence Systems

The Minister for Europe (Mr. Denis MacShane): Man-Portable Air Defence Systems (MANPADS) are surface to air missiles, usually shoulder-launched and fired by an individual or more than one individual, acting as a crew. The Government are committed to preventing them from falling into the wrong hands. They are designed for military air defence use, but, in the hands of terrorists, they have been, and could again be, used against civil aviation. The House will recall that in November 2002 in Mombasa terrorists only narrowly missed downing a commercial aircraft using such a weapon.

The international community is responding to this threat by a range of actions including strengthening export controls on MANPADS. The Prime Minister and other G8 Leaders, meeting at Evian in June 2003, expressed their deep concern about the threat posed to civil aviation by MANPADS, especially in the hands of terrorists or countries that harbour them. The G8 meeting agreed an Action Plan to Enhance Transport Security and Control of MANPADS. The Action Plan contains five measures, including an agreement to: "ban the transfer of MANPADS to non-state end users, MANPADS should only be exported to foreign governments or to agents authorised by a Government"

The Government assess export licence applications on a case-by-case basis against the Consolidated EU and National Arms Export Licensing Criteria. This involves considering amongst other factors, the risk of diversion or re-export under undesirable conditions, including to terrorists. The Consolidated Criteria also provide that the Government will not issue an export licence if approval would be inconsistent with the UK's international commitments regarding the application of strategic export controls.

Taking the criterion of UK adherence to international commitments into account, the Government will therefore consider any licence applications for the export of MANPADS to any non-government body in the light of the G8 Action Plan commitment mentioned above. This is consistent with our current export control practice.

In the case of any licence application for the export of MANPADS to Governments or to any agents authorised by governments, the Government's assessment under the Consolidated Criteria will also be informed by consideration of the proposed export against the "Elements for Export Controls of Man-Portable Air Defence Systems (MANPADS)" agreed in the Wassenaar Arrangement on Conventional Arms and Dual-Use Goods and Technologies. These provide that exports of MANPADS may only take place if a range of strict conditions to prevent diversion or leakage of these weapons to unauthorised end-users are met. This document is available at http://www.wassenaar.org/. The Government are playing an active role in discussions to update and strengthen the Wassenaar document.

The Action Plan also commits G8 countries to "ensure strong national regulation of production, transfer and brokering" (of MANPADS). The Government's secondary legislation under the Export Control Act 2002, laid before Parliament on 31 October 2003, implements this commitment. This legislation introduces controls on the brokering of all equipment on the UK's military list, including MANPADS, where any part of the transaction is carried out in the United Kingdom. It represents a very significant step in preventing the involvement of UK persons in undesirable arms transfers. To counter the terrorist threat from MANPADS the Government will decide over the next few months whether anything further needs to be done to control brokering of these weapons.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Export of Objects of Cultural Interest (Control) Order 2003

The Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (Tessa Jowell): I have today laid The Export of Objects of Cultural Interest (Control) Order 2003 (SI 2003/2759) made under the auspices of the Export Control Act 2002 before Parliament. In addition to this the Statutory Guidance required under the same Act about the general principles to be followed when exercising licensing powers on objects of cultural interest was also laid.

DEFENCE

Ministry of Defence Police

The Secretary of State for Defence (Mr. Geoffrey Hoon): In light of the recommendations made by the House of Commons Defence Committee as a result of the introduction of the Anti-Terrorism, Crime and Security Act 2001, I am pleased to place in the Library of the House on behalf of the Ministry of Defence Police their Operational Report for the year 2002–03.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Police Funding (Allocations of Grant)

The Minister for Crime Reduction, Policing, and Community Safety (Ms Hazel Blears): I have today placed in the Library a copy of the Home Secretary's proposals for allocation of police grant for England and Wales in 2004–05. The Home Secretary and I intend to implement the proposals subject to consideration of any representations we receive about them, and to the approval of the House.

Funding the police properly remains a top priority for this Government. The settlement for 2004–05 builds on significant extra resources for policing in England and Wales over the last three years. Since 2000–01 total provision for policing to be supported by grant or spent centrally on services for the police has risen by over £2.3 billion or over 30 per cent.

Total provision for policing to be supported by grant in 2004–05 will be £10,086 million. This is a cash rise of £403 million or 4.2 per cent. over the provision for 2003–04. This includes principal formula police grant, specific grants, capital related grants, direct Home Office spending and the formula spending on which revenue support grant is based.

I have decided, exceptionally this year, to provide a standard general grant increase of 3.25 per cent. for each police authority in England and Wales. I recognise the financial pressures on police authorities and I am concerned to avoid excessive burdens on local taxpayers. My approach should help ensure that precepts are kept at a sustainable level and that policing services continue to improve. The grant increase is sufficient to cover inflation, in particular the pay increases announced for next year.

In order to do this, I have added £140 million from wider Home Office resources and I have transferred into general police grant provision amounting to £100 million from existing and planned specific grants and central spending. These transfers will give police authorities greater scope to determine their own spending. We launched the National Policing Plan 2004–07 earlier this month. The overarching aim of the plan is to deliver enhanced police performance and public reassurance. Particular regard is given to the Home Secretary's priorities to provide a citizen focused service and to tackle the crimes that blight the lives of many. Other key priorities include tackling anti-social behaviour and disorder; continuing to reduce burglary, vehicle crime, robbery and drug-related crime and combating serious and organised crime. This settlement will support the priorities outlined in the National Policing Plan and continue to support our reform and modernisation process.

There is continuation funding for recruits under the Crime Fighting Fund and Community Support Officers who are playing an important role reassuring the public on our streets; more funding from the Street Crime Initiative that has seen street crime reduce by an estimated 7 per cent. in England and Wales in April—June 2003 compared with the same period last year; Basic Command Unit funding to deal with policing problems most effectively at local level; continuation of the Rural Policing Fund to improve policing for communities with the most widespread populations; funding from the DNA Expansion Programme and other schemes to allow forces to make the most of new technology.

In this statement, I want to outline the wider provision for support for the police service in England and Wales.

THE POLICE GRANT SETTLEMENT

We propose to distribute the settlement as follows:

Table 1: Police funding settlement for 2004–05 compared to 2003–04

£ million[1]

	2003–04	Provision 2004–05	Variance £ million	Variance Per cent

[1] Rounded to £ million

[2] Includes Revenue Support Grant/National Non Domestic Rates grants and product of assumed national council tax precept. Both years' figures exclude technical adjustment for resource equalisation (£600 million).

[3] Includes provision for NCS/NCIS and Airwave core service charges.

Police funding proposals within the Local Government finance system are being announced by my right hon. Friend Ministerial title the member for Greenwich and Woolwich today, and by the Welsh Assembly Government.

Provisional general policing grants (ie Home Office Police Grant, Revenue Support Grant and National Non Domestic Rates) for English and Welsh police authorities in 2004–05 compared with 2003–04 are given in Table 2.

METROPOLITAN POLICE FUNDING

Grant for the MPA will increase from £1,764.1 million to £1,822.3 million; a cash increase of 3.25 per cent. in line with all other police authorities. I have increased the formula provision for the MPA national and capital city functions from £202 million to £207 million to keep the formula up to date so that the MPA will receive appropriate benefit in future years. The MPA will receive separately provision for counter-terrorism, continuing funding made available this year. Details will be announced at a later stage. £15 million will also be made available to fund 750 CSOs recruited since 2002. The MPA will be eligible for specific grants from the Crime Fighting Fund, the Basic Command Unit Fund and the Street Crime Initiative.

SPECIFIC GRANTS FOR POLICE AUTHORITIES

In addition to increased general grant, police authorities will continue to receive extra funding through several specific grants for particular schemes. Targeted grants were introduced as a direct response to what the police service and the public told us they wanted. Specific grants enable us to target funds to the areas where they are particularly needed.

The measure of the success of specific funding is now clear. We have record police numbers helped by the Crime Fighting Fund; increased support for those living in rural areas; the Street Crime Initiative has helped reduce street crime; recruitment problems in London and the South East have been tackled through increased or new allowances for officers; the presence on our streets of Community Support Officers is providing the public with reassurance.

Provision for specific grants in 2004–05 will be £657 million, a little lower than in 2003–04. This has enabled us to maximise general grant which may be spent at the discretion of police authorities.

THE MAIN SPECIFIC GRANTS ARE:

Crime Fighting Fund: £277 million will be provided to forces in 2004–05. This Fund has been a remarkable success. With the help of this Fund the Home Secretary's target of 132,500 officers by March 2004 was exceeded by nearly 4,000 this August. We will continue to pay for the 9,000 police officers recruited between April 2000 and March 2003 through the Crime Fighting Fund. I intend to pay for 60 per cent of the cost of the further 650 officers recruited under the Fund in 2003–04. The scheme will not be expanded further in 2004–05.

Counter Terrorism: As last year, we will continue to provide additional funding to the Police Service to enable it to respond to the increased threat from international terrorism. This funding will be provided to both the Metropolitan Police Service and provincial forces in England and Wales and is in addition to existing funding streams for Counter Terrorism and Security.

Basic Command Unit (BCU) funds: £50 million will be provided for BCUs. These are at the forefront of local policing. The grant is targeted towards forces with BCUs in high crime areas to help reduce crime in partnership with Crime and Disorder Reduction Partnerships. The money is directed so that all forces in England and Wales receive a proportion of the pot.

Special Priority Payments: The pay and conditions package agreed by the PNB in May 2002 introduced new elements into police pay such as payments for the most experienced officers who can demonstrate a high level of professional competence and extra rewards for officers in the most difficult and demanding posts. I have split the allocation for 2004–05. £50 million will be available as a specific grant for special priority payments in 2004–05. A further £9 million has been rolled back into general grant.

Community Support Officers (CSOs): £41 million funding will be available to support the costs of CSOs who free up police officer time, play a crucial role in providing reassurance and who have some powers to deal with low level crime and anti-social behaviour. The provision will continue to fund CSOs recruited in 2002–03 and 2003–04.

Rural Policing Fund: £30 million is again provided for the particular needs of the 31 forces with the most widespread populations.

Street Crime Initiative: Additional funding of around £25 million is being made available to support continued police operations against street crime. Distribution will be determined in December 2003.

We will, as well, make available funding for the following:

Seventy five per cent. of the cost of the London and South East Allowances (£49 million).

Funding support for the cost of free travel for Metropolitan and City of London officers (£3.2 million).

Promotion of volunteering within the Police Service (£7 million).

Workforce Modernisation Implementation Fund. We have allocated £5 million in 2004–05 to support forces in developing an effective skills mix of police staff and police officers.

The Home Secretary is committed to the DNA Expansion Programme and the benefits that it is delivering. Funding is provided for the continuation Programme.

POLICE AUTHORITY CAPITAL

The Home Secretary and I intend to allocate provision of capital grant for 2004–05 in December.

In addition capital grants for the introduction of Airwave will be made available to those authorities taking up the radio communications service in 2004–05.

There will be capital provision for the case and custody project of the Criminal Justice IT system. This will be supported by resource funding.

£40 million is being provided for the capital costs of developing the Metropolitan Police Authority's Command Control and Communications Information (C3i) System. In total £140 million is being provided towards this project.

CENTRAL SPENDING ON POLICING

Central spending on policing will total £706 million. The main specific items are the DNA expansion programme, the National Strategy for Police Information Systems and the Airwave contractor's core charges. In addition, provision is made for the costs of organisations supporting policing, mainly the Police Information Technology Organisation (PITO), Centrex (the Central Police Training and Development Authority), National Criminal Intelligence Service/ National Crime Squad and scientific and technical facilities.

EFFICIENCY

The settlement continues to take account of the Home Secretary's commitment to improve efficiency and effectiveness in the police service. Guidance on efficiency plans for 2004–05 will be issued shortly. Future Police Grant allocations will be considered in the light of police authorities meeting the current target for 2 per cent. efficiency improvements. The efficiency target will be examined during the Spending Review 2004. Targets reflecting each authority's circumstances may be more appropriate than a universal one. We shall also be considering the balance between cash releasing efficiencies and those which are the result of service improvements.

CONCLUSION

We are continuing to invest substantially in the police service to ensure delivery of an effective and efficient police service that has the support and confidence of all communities. We have listened carefully to the concerns of police authorities in determining this settlement. We have ensured that all forces will receive an increase of 3.25 per cent. in general grant which is well above general inflation of 2.6 per cent. This settlement provides the resources to help the police do their job more effectively, building on a strong platform of record police officer numbers, a growing policing community and reduced levels of crime.

[4]. A "Floor" increase of 3.25 per cent. has been applied to all police authorities. Minor variations from 3.25 per cent. in the increase in grant occur mainly due to capital financing adjustments. Percentage increases are rounded to one decimal place.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Draft Gambling Bill

The Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (Tessa Jowell): I have today published the major sections of the draft Gambling Bill for pre-legislative scrutiny.

The Bill will make major changes to the way in which gambling is regulated and controlled in Great Britain. It will build on the work undertaken by Sir Alan Budd and the Gambling Review Body that he led.

It is based on the three key principles:

First, the principle that the system of gambling law and regulation must keep the gambling industry free of crime. Our industry has a high international reputation for integrity, which must not be put at risk;

Second, the law must ensure that gambling is conducted fairly, so that players know what to expect; and Third, there must be effective protection for children and the vulnerable.

The current laws on gambling dating back to the 1960s have failed to keep pace with rapid technological change. Attitudes to gambling have changed too. The law needs to be modernised but we must make sure that it is flexible enough to cope with further change.

However, modernisation does not mean a gambling free for all and reform must not be allowed to generate an upsurge in problem gambling. The provisions published today combine a managed relaxation of outdated restrictions with the strongest protections for children and the vulnerable. Following reform, there will be greater choice for adults but there will remain important limitations on what types of gambling are available and where they can be located.

INVESTOR IN PEOPLE

In A Safe Bet for Success (published in March 2002, Cm 5397) we accepted the vast majority of the Gambling Review's recommendations. Since then, we have been working closely with the interested industries, representatives of groups encouraging responsible gambling, local authorities, consumer groups, other Government Departments and the devolved administrations to prepare draft legislation that would give effect to this new system of regulation.

The proposals published today build on and subsume the draft clauses published in July 2003. They will simplify regulation by establishing a single regulator for commercial gambling. The Gambling Commission will have wider functions, greater flexibility to act and stronger enforcement powers than the Gaming board that it will replace. Local authorities will license all types of gambling premises, to ensure that local people have a say in where gambling outlets are sited. The draft Bill will keep crime out of gambling and protect the industry's reputation for integrity and excellence. The Gambling Commission will be a strong, effective regulator and will root out illegal gambling; its staff will have statutory powers of entry, search and seizure.

The draft Bill also removes unnecessary restrictions on the ability of business to meet consumers' wishes. The rule allowing casinos to be established only in designated parts of the country will be abolished, as will the rule requiring membership of a casino or bingo club at least 24 hours before playing. Remote gambling, for example on the Internet, interactive TV and through mobile telephones, will be licensed and regulated effectively in Great Britain for the first time.

The published clauses also strengthen safeguards protecting children and the vulnerable. The current minimum age limits for access to gambling products will be retained and enforced strongly. The draft Bill also includes reserve powers for a statutory levy on gambling operators. These powers will be used if the gambling industry does not keep its promises to contribute to a charitable trust funding research, prevention and treatment programmes for problem gambling.

A Joint Committee of both Houses has been convened to examine the Government's draft proposals. I am confident that what they will scrutinise is a set of mature proposals that will achieve a sensible reform of the law on gambling. Such scrutiny will improve the legislation and build parliamentary understanding and public confidence, enabling us to strike the right balance between deregulation and the protection of young and vulnerable people.

I intend to publish the remaining sections of the draft Bill early next year.

DEFENCE

Medical Supply Agency

The Minister of State, Ministry of Defence (Mr. Adam Ingram): Key targets have been set for the Chief Executive of the MSA for Financial Year 2003–04. The targets build on the progress already made by the Agency since it formed in March 1996 and are as follows:

improvements in the effectiveness and efficiency of the medical supply chain, contribute to CDL's strategic objectives, and improve delivery to our customers.

Armed Forces Pension Scheme

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence (Mr. Ivor Caplin): After the introduction of the Armed Forces Pension Scheme (AFPS) in 1973, the Royal Air Force has, for the purposes of awarding pensions, been reviewing War Pension Scheme decisions on whether injuries, ill-health or deaths were due to service using the normal civil standard of proof ("balance of probabilities"). The War Pension Scheme uses a "beyond reasonable doubt" standard in favour of the claimant for the first seven years after leaving service. This interpretation of AFPS scheme regulations was challenged in a complaint to the Pensions Ombudsman who found in favour of the claimant, Mrs Hulme. The Ombudsman's decision was upheld on appeal in the High Court and has today been further upheld in the Court of Appeal on the basis that the relevant regulations required AFPS administrators to accept the decision on attributability taken under the War Pension Scheme. I have decided that the Ministry of Defence will not seek leave to appeal the Court of Appeal judgement further to the House of Lords.

Following this decision, the Department will now review previous decisions on entitlement to attributable pensions for those conditions that led to invaliding or to death-in-service where AFPS administrators have previously not accepted War Pension Scheme decisions on attributability. Awards will be backdated and the Department will consider compensation to reflect the effect of inflation on the value of pensions over the period of non-payment. I expect to make a further announcement on this matter early in the New Year.

Initial research indicates that the incorrect interpretation of the regulations is likely to have affected Royal Air Force compensation payments since soon after 1973, and Army and perhaps some Royal Navy claims since 2000.

We do not know how many pensioners are likely to have been affected or the likely cost. However, a substantial number of pension award decisions will need to be reviewed to ensure that all those at risk are identified. At present, we expect it to take around a year to complete this review. Payments will be made as soon as possible. We will also be using appropriate advertising to publicise to the ex-Service community those categories of pensioner who might be affected and how claims can be lodged. We will consider these as quickly as possible. The judgement does not affect the benefits paid under the War Pension Scheme.

The Department will abide fully by the Court of Appeal decision with respect to claims from the past or where a decision is still pending. However, I have decided that, for the future, as soon as the relevant changes can be made to secondary legislation, the Department should establish the right of AFPS administrators to take a second decision on attributability, using the balance of probabilities standard of proof. This is the standard of proof used for other public service occupational schemes, as well as for decisions in the civil courts and for the recently proposed new Armed Forces Compensation Scheme.

ENVIRONMENT, FOOD AND RURAL AFFAIRS

Autumn Performance Report

The Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (Margaret Beckett): The 2003 Autumn Performance Report, which highlights my Department's progress against all its outstanding Public Service Agreement targets, will be published on 21 November. Copies will be placed both Libraries of the House.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Rwanda

The Secretary of State for International Development (Hilary Benn): I am today placing a copy in the Library of DFID's Country Assistance Plan for Rwanda over the next three years.

Rwanda has made extraordinary progress since the 1994 genocide, which claimed the lives of over 800,000 Rwandans—1 in 10 of the population. The country is at peace, the economy is stable and growing, access to quality education and health services is increasing rapidly, and the incidence of poverty is declining, from around 70 per cent. in 1994 to under 60 per cent. in 2001. But the challenge remains immense. All of Government's actions are driven by the need to reconcile the people and build a new "Rwandan" (rather than ethnic) identity. This will take time. Meanwhile, it must balance the need to open up space for legitimate political debate with the reality of extreme social fragility. The price of failure may be renewed conflict.

The UK will remain Rwanda's major bilateral development partner. Recognising Rwanda's traumatic past, its continuing severe needs, the potential for instability in the region, and the Government of Rwanda's commitment to poverty reduction and to establishing a democratic and inclusive state, DFID's programme will rise from £37 million in this financial year to £42 million next year and £47 million the year after. Two-thirds of our programme will continue to be delivered as direct budgetary support, to help finance the Government of Rwanda's own strategy. DFID believes that where adequate government structures and systems are in place, such support can have the greatest impact on poverty. We will continue our support for capacity building around Government's strategic planning and budgeting processes, revenue collection and education. We will also develop two major new programmes, aimed at supporting rural livelihoods and at strengthening the capacity of civil society organisations to represent Rwandan citizens and progressively secure their human rights.

Our engagement with the Government of Rwanda will continue to be based upon the joint commitments set down in the UK/Rwanda Memorandum of Understanding. These commitments include: the promotion of peace and stability within the Great Lakes region, including the promotion of transparency and legality of the exploitation of the region's natural resources; the promotion and protection of all human rights, and; establishing a democratic and inclusive state. We have a substantive and honest dialogue with the Government of Rwanda on progress towards these commitments, supported by an annual independent review. Should we believe that the Government of Rwanda is not honouring the commitments made in the Memorandum of Understanding, and where the consultation process provided for within the Memorandum of Understanding fails to satisfy our concern, then the UK Government reserve the right to amend or suspend our engagement with the Government of Rwanda. Our analysis, and that of the independent review, is that the Government of Rwanda remains committed to progressively securing all human rights for its citizens and to establishing a democratic and inclusive state. Our engagement will help the Government of Rwanda to make good on those commitments.

TRANSPORT

Streetworks

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Transport (Mr. Tony McNulty): Regulations under section 74A of the New Road and Street Works Act 1991 allow highway authorities to charge utility companies a daily rate, commonly known as "lane rental", whenever the latter carry out works in the street. The powers have not, as yet, been activated nationally, but are being tested in pilot schemes in the London Borough of Camden and in Middlesbrough.

The Department for Transport appointed consultants, Halcrow, to monitor the effectiveness of the powers in reducing disruption on the highway. Halcrow have now produced their first annual report, covering the period March 2002 to February 2003. The report consists of two volumes; Volume 1 is the main report and Volume 2 contains accompanying tables and charts. Copies of each have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Iraq

The Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (Mr. Jack Straw): On 15 November, Jalal Talabani, President of the Iraqi Governing Council, announced a programme and timetable for a new constitution and elections in Iraq. Under the plan, the Governing Council will draft a Fundamental Law by February 2004, which will be based on the respect of human rights, freedom of speech and religious tolerance. The Fundamental Law will apply for the transitional period until full national elections.

A Transitional National Assembly will be established by June 2004 through transparent and democratic caucuses at provincial and local level, facilitated by the Governing Council and the Coalition Provisional Authority (CPA). The Assembly will elect an executive and ministers as the Iraqi Transitional Government by July 2004, by then, the progressive handover of executive and legal authority from the CPA will be complete, and the Coalition's legal occupation will come to an end. The Transitional Government will oversee elections to a Constitutional Convention by March 2005, which will promulgate a new permanent constitution for Iraq. A referendum on the new constitution will take place before full elections of a new representative Iraqi government at the end of 2005.

The programme announced by Mr. Talabani is an important and welcome step forward, and comes in response to the wishes of Iraqis themselves. It should enable the coalition to fulfil the shared goal of ensuring a progressive transfer of executive and legislative authority to the Iraqi people as soon as possible. It responds to the Iraqi people's wish that the body tasked with writing a permanent constitution be elected. The plan will bring an earlier end to the status of the UK and US as occupying powers, and will enable the Iraqis to develop their democratic institutions leading to full direct elections for a new government.

The plan announced by Mr. Talabani will also meet the requirement under UN Resolution 1511 for the Iraqi Governing Council to report to the Security Council by 15 December with "a timetable and a programme for the drafting of a new constitution for Iraq and for the holding of democratic elections under that constitution".

The Secretary-General of the UN, Kofi Annan, has said he is heartened by the announcement. I have already spoken to him and stressed that we will work with him to ensure the UN plays a vital role as set out in Resolution 1511.

Alongside this political progress, everyday life for Iraqis on the ground is steadily improving. Over 14,000 reconstruction projects have been launched. Almost all 240 hospitals and more than 1200 clinics are open, as are almost all schools. More than 200 newspapers have appeared. Satellite dishes, which were illegal under Saddam's regime, are now freely available and widely used. Electricity production has surpassed pre-conflict levels.

This announcement does not mean any reduction of our long-term commitment to Iraq. We stand ready to assist the Transitional Government in the task of rebuilding the country and its civilian institutions. We hope that other countries, international organisations, particularly the UN, and NGOs will continue to support us in this task, as envisaged at the Madrid donors' conference. Our military contribution to the multinational force of over 30 countries in Iraq will also continue, in agreement with the Iraqi Governing Council and Transitional Government, until the Iraqis themselves are able to assume full responsibility for their own security. Already Iraq's own security forces—so far 40,000 police, plus the Iraqi Civil Defence Corps and the New Iraqi Army—are growing in strength. They are working courageously with the support of coalition troops to combat the reactionary forces who want to deny the Iraqi people the security, representative government and prosperity they deserve. They can be confident of our support for as long as they feel it is required.

TREASURY

Inland Revenue

The Paymaster General (Dawn Primarolo): On 8 September 2003, I announced legislation for Finance Bill 2004 to ensure that, for Inland Revenue taxation matters, the usual six year time limits apply to common law actions for relief from the consequences of a mistake of law as apply for other actions to recover direct tax. The change applies to court actions brought on or after 8 September 2003. The intended effect is to restore balance to the tax system so that broadly similar time limits apply to assessments and repayments. Draft clauses for inclusion in Finance Bill 2004 were published at the time of the announcement.

Some claimants who had commenced proceedings before 8 September 2003 are seeking to amend their claims to add in years beyond the normal time limits. They are doing so because, under existing law, if the courts allow an amendment of this sort, it is deemed to be a new action started on the date of the original action. So it is arguable that the legislation announced on 8 September would not apply to such an amendment. And, other claimants may also seek to amend their existing claims to add in years beyond the normal time limits.

This places tax revenues at risk. And whilst the Inland Revenue may well succeed in opposing amendments to existing claims in the courts, I believe that this risk is unacceptable.

I am therefore announcing today amended draft legislation to ensure that tax revenues are further protected. The amended draft legislation will prevent amendments being made to proceedings for relief from the consequences of a mistake of law, commenced before 8 September, to introduce new periods of claim for years beyond the normal time limits. The change announced today will not, however, affect applications made to the court before today.

This draft clause is applicable to England, Wales and Northern Ireland. The draft legislation applying to Scotland is unchanged. This is because the new issue that has arisen is not relevant in Scotland.

Today's Inland Revenue News Release giving the relevant background to this measure and the amended draft clause for inclusion in Finance Bill 2004 have been deposited in the Library of the House and are also accessible on the Inland Revenue's website http://www.inlandrevenue.gov.uk/.

Written Answers to Questions

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Church Repairs (VAT)

28. Miss McIntosh: To ask the hon. Member for Middlesbrough, representing the Church Commissioners what recent representations the Church Commissioners have made on the reduction of VAT on church repairs. [137050]

Mr. Bell: The hon. Lady will be interested to hear that I am going to Brussels tomorrow with members of the Church of England VAT Group for meetings with UK representative officials and with Commissioner Frits Bolkestein.

I have also had a meeting with the Economic Secretary, who has been most helpful and supportive.

Clergy

29. Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the hon. Member for Middlesbrough, representing the Church Commissioners when the McClean review of clergy terms of service is expected to deliver its final report. [137051]

Mr. Bell: The review group will submit its first full report to the Archbishops' Council in December. It will look at ways of improving security for clergy who do not have freehold of office or employment contracts. The group hopes to submit its final report, which will consider the future of the freehold, by the end of 2004.

ELECTORAL COMMISSION

Parliamentary Boundaries

26. Michael Fabricant: To ask the hon. Member for Gosport, representing the Speaker's Committee on the Electoral Commission when he expects the Commission to absorb the functions of the bodies responsible for reviewing parliamentary boundaries. [137048]

27. Mr. Steen: To ask the hon. Member for Gosport, representing the Speaker's Committee on the Electoral Commission when the Electoral Commission will absorb the functions of bodies responsible for reviewing parliamentary boundaries. [137049]

Mr. Malins: I have been asked to reply.

I understand that the Government have not yet announced a date for the transfer to the Electoral Commission of the functions of the Parliamentary Boundary Commissions, as provided for in section 16 of the Political Parties, Elections and Referendums Act 2000.

Postal Voting

30. Mr. Allen: To ask the hon. Member for Gosport, representing the Speaker's Committee on the Electoral Commission if he will make a statement on progress with extension of postal voting. [137052]

Mr. Malins: I have been asked to reply.

It is for the Government, not the Electoral Commission, to take steps to extend the availability of all-postal voting. However, the Electoral Commission submitted recommendations to Government on the future use of postal voting at local elections in their report "The shape of elections to come" in July 2003. It has also been directed by Government to recommend up to three European Parliamentary regions where all postal pilots would take place at the European Parliamentary elections in 2004.

ENVIRONMENT, FOOD AND RURAL AFFAIRS

Packaging

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will take steps to require fast food outlets to use only biodegradable packaging. [134847]

Mr. Morley: We have no plans at present to require fast food outlets to use only biodegradable packaging. The concept of degradable plastics that are made from mineral oil (a fossil fuel resource) and specifically designed for disposal with no beneficial recovery potential, runs counter to the aim to increase recycling. In addition, if disposed of in landfill rather than, for example, being composted, biodegradable waste breaks down to release greenhouse gases. It is for this reason that the Landfill Directive requires member states to significantly reduce the amount of biodegradable waste going to landfill.

The Government do support the development of biodegradable plastics from non-fossil sources. The Government-Industry Forum on Non-Food Uses of Crops has concluded that there is a opportunity to produce compostable packaging materials in the UK. Defra is currently drawing up a Non-Food Crops Strategy. A draft is expected to be issued for consultation early in 2004.

The Government are also committed to reducing the incidents of fast food litter. We recently launched a consultation document entitled "Voluntary Code of Practice for the Fast Food Industry—Options for Reducing Fast Food Litter and Waste in the Local Environment". The consultation closes on 30 January 2004.

Climate Change

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the steps the Government is taking to ensure that the Kyoto Protocol becomes legally binding. [136111]

Mr. Morley: When the Kyoto Protocol enters into force, the targets it sets will become binding on the parties involved. In order for the Protocol to enter into force it must be signed by at least 55 countries including Annex 1 (developed) countries representing 55 per cent. of developed countries carbon dioxide emissions in 1990. Currently 119 countries representing 44.2 per cent. of emissions have ratified. Following withdrawal of the US from Kyoto in 2001, ratification by Russia is crucial to meet the 55 per cent. target and bring the Protocol into force.

The Prime Minister has written to President Putin twice this year to stress the importance of Russian ratification in the near future, and other ministerial colleagues press their Russian counterparts on the issue whenever appropriate. Officials also meet regularly with Russian counterparts and we have highlighted the significant economic, as well as environmental benefits to Russia if they ratify. We are confident that the Protocol will come into force in 2004.

Commercial Lobbyists

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what guidance her Department has issued on the (a) formal and (b) informal interaction between civil servants and commercial lobbyists. [137267]

Alun Michael: Matters of propriety and conduct such as formal and informal interaction between employees of Defra and commercial lobbyists are covered by the general requirements of the Civil Service Code. The Code, along with further detailed guidance and advice is reproduced in the department's staff handbooks. The Cabinet Office also issued formal guidance on contact with lobbyists and this was made available to ex-MAFF staff via Office Notice and is replicated in the ex-DETR Staff Handbook.

Crop Spraying

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when her Department plans to introduce crop spray buffer zones for land next to housing. [137567]

Alun Michael: No decision has been taken to introduce crop spray buffer zones for land next to housing. A public consultation on the viability of no spray buffer zones closed on 31 October. A copy of the consultation paper will be placed in the House of Commons Library shortly.

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of the effect on farmers of the introduction of crop spray buffer zones for land next to housing. [137568]

Alun Michael: The public consultation on the viability of the introduction of no spray buffer zones closed on 31 October. The responses will help to inform a full Regulatory Impact Assessment including a cost/benefit analysis of effects on farmers.

Export Health Certificates

Mr. Prosser: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many export health certificates have been issued since 1 February. [135928]

Mr. Bradshaw: Since 1 February 2003, 207 export health certificates have been issued by the Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (Defra) for exports of sheep. 145 of these certificates have been certified to enable exports to take place. Details of the number of certificates issued for exports to each country are set out in the following table. These figures are derived from the computer system used to issue export health certificates and are subject to updating and amendment. Figures for certificates issued by the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development, Northern Ireland (DARDNI) for exports of sheep will follow shortly.

France	12	49	0
Germany	4	2	0
St. Helena	1	0	0
Total	75	70	0

Flooding

Mr Liddell-Grainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the flood defence budget will be in the next three financial years. [136555]

Mr. Morley: The Government is committed to maintenance and improvement of flood and coastal defences, including those to reduce the risk of coastal erosion as well as flooding. Central Government's spending plans for flood and coastal defence remain as announced following the 2002 Spending Review:

	£ million
2005–06	564

These figures include Defra funding and funding from the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister through local authority mechanisms as well as an estimated £20 million revenue from a new funding stream in 2005–06.

Provision for 2006–07 will be set in the Government's next Spending Review in 2004.

Mr. Liddell-Grainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what fiscal contribution district councils are required to make to flood defence capital projects. [136556]

Mr. Morley: District councils are empowered under the Land Drainage Act 1991 to undertake works to manage flood risk on watercourses which have not been designated as "main rivers" (for which the Environment Agency has the requisite powers) and which are not in an internal drainage district (for which the relevant internal drainage board would have powers).

The district council is responsible for funding those projects which it directly promotes but Defra makes available grant aid at a rate of 45 per cent. for capital flood defence projects which meet the Department's criteria and (for those projects only) the council can also apply to the Department for a Supplementary Credit Approval to cover borrowing for the balance of expenditure after grant. The latter results in support from the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister (ODPM) through its local authority funding mechanism.

The authority primarily responsible for managing flood risk in England is the Environment Agency. The Agency obtains part of its funding for capital flood defence projects along with other aspects of this activity from county councils and unitary authorities in the form of levies agreed annually by the relevant Flood Defence Committee. However, it is the intention that these levies should be largely replaced from April 2004 by direct funding from Defra as my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced to the House on 12 March. An appropriate transfer of resource from ODPM to Defra will take place to reflect this change in funding. A further change we are making is to transfer responsibility from district councils to the Agency of those ordinary watercourses identified as creating the greatest flood risk.

Foot and Mouth

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs which of the farms in the Alnwick area of Northumberland declared to be infected places in the foot and mouth epidemic were subsequently found to have no positive blood test results. [135916]

Mr. Bradshaw: Information relating to individual premises or farms is held by Defra in strict confidence and, in accordance with the Data Protection Act, cannot be released. Statistical information below county level cannot be released for the same reason, as it may enable premises to be identified. I can, however, report that in Northumberland, during the 2001 outbreak of foot and mouth disease, 75 out of 88 infected premises were sampled and 17 returned negative results.

A negative lab result does not mean that infection was absent. Each case was confirmed on the basis of a clinical diagnosis of foot and mouth disease by the vet on the farm, supported by convincing clinical evidence.

Landfill

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many incidents of pollution from landfill sites have been investigated in each of the last three years; how many prosecutions resulted; and what amount of fines was levied. [136110]

Mr. Morley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given on 30 October 2003, Official Report, column 374W. All of the incidents referred to in that reply were investigated by the Environment Agency.

Large Combustion Plant Directive

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs which United Kingdom power stations have been granted derogation from the Large Combustion Plant Directive. [136025]

Mr. Bradshaw: So far the revised Large Combustion Plants Directive (2001/80/EC) has been implemented in the UK only for plants subject to it that were first licensed after July 1987, and it will not apply to other plants until 1 January 2008. Derogations under the Directive for these plants will be a matter for Environment Agency in England and Wales and their equivalents in rest of the United Kingdom. Operators of plants licensed before July 1987 may apply for a limited hours derogation before 30 June 2004. Such a derogation would allow the plant to be exempt from complying with the emission limits or the national emission reduction plan established under the Directive, but it would mean that the plant could operate for no more than 20,000 operational hours between 1 January 2008 and 31 December 2015. Other applications for derogations would be made nearer the time that the Directive applies.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what plans she has to implement the Large Combustion Plant Directive in the north-east region. [136026]

Mr. Bradshaw: The Large Combustion Plants Directive (2001/80/EC) applies thoughout the United Kingdom. It has already been implemented for plants first licensed after July 1987. The Government have just completed a consultation on proposals to implement this Directive for plants first licensed before July 1987. We are considering the responses to that consultation and the Government will take a decision shortly on the most appropriate implementation approach; whichever approach is adopted would apply in the north-east region.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. David: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what recent discussions she has had about the possible siting of a new nuclear waste facility. [136048]

Mr. Morley: None.

Ozone Depleting Substances

Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what quantities of CFC have been collected and safely destroyed from the licensed facilities operating in the UK under EU Regulation 2037/2000 on Ozone Depleting Substances in each year since implementation of the regulations. [133302]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 30 October 2003]: We are currently collating the figures and we will write to the hon. Member as soon as they are available.

Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the cost to public funds has been of implementing EU Regulation 2037/2000 on Ozone Depleting Substances in each year since implementation of the regulations. [133303]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 30 October 2003]: Most of the enforcement of EC Regulation 2037/2000 is carried out by agencies during the normal course of their duties. There are no estimates available of costs specifically related to this. The Environment Agency does not monitor the costs of implementing individual regulations. Charges are levied for applications and subsistence on waste management licences for storage and treatment sites and the Agency seeks to recover relevant costs, including site supervision.

However, with respect to waste implications of the Regulation, the principal public costs have fallen on local authorities. Local authorities in England received £40 million to assist with the costs of storing and processing refrigerators and freezers in 2002–03. This was in addition to £6 million provided for the period 1 January 2002 to 31 March 2002. Spending Review 2002 included future funding within the Environmental, Protective and Cultural Services block which will be distributed through Formula Standard Shares (FSAs).

Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs whether local authorities are permitted to offer contracts for the purpose of compliance with EU Regulation 2037/2000 on Ozone Depleting Substances to licensed facilities whose recycling plants have not passed validation tests. [133305]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 30 October 2003]: This issue is regulated through the duty of care under section 34 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 which requires that the holder of waste: (a) may only pass it on to an authorised person such as a waste management licence holder or a person authorised for transport purposes, for example a registered carrier of controlled waste, and (b) should take all reasonable measures to prevent the fly tipping of waste or the escape of the waste from his control or that of any other person.

Generally, a fridge recycler cannot treat fridges until the recycling plant has been licensed and validated. However, the recycler or another party might properly store such fridges at a licensed storage site, pending treatment. Up until October 2002, the Environment Agency allowed operators to make applications and store fridges pending their determination. A local authority, for instance, could lawfully establish contracts with such operators in the expectation that their fridges would not be treated immediately.

Parrett Catchment Project

Mr Liddell-Grainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the level of capital funding from central government for the Parrett sluice is in 2003–04; and what role the Parrett catchment project has in the Parrett sluice. [136354]

Mr. Morley: Defra provides funding to operating authorities for capital flood defence schemes and related studies that meet set criteria and achieve an appropriate priority score. No applications have been received for capital works on the Parrett Sluice, but I understand the Environment Agency will be seeking grant on related studies in 2003–04.

Defra has provided funding to the Environment Agency for both the preparation of a Catchment Flood Management Plan for the River Parrett and strategic studies for the Lower Parrett and Tone. I understand that the Agency are consulting on the outcome of those studies, and that the Parrett Sluice is one of the options being considered. However the flood management strategy for the Lower Parrett and Tone has yet to be submitted formally to Defra for consideration, and it would therefore be inappropriate for me to comment on the options at this stage.

The Parrett Catchment Project is a partnership of all stakeholders with an interest on Flood Risk Management in the area, and will therefore be key to forming proposals which will be prepared by the Environment Agency.

Pesticides

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many pesticides are approved for use in the UK; and how many have (a) full approval and (b) provisional approval. [137262]

Alun Michael: A total of 4,096 pesticides are approved for use in the UK. Of these, 2,783 hold full approval and 1,313 are provisionally approved.

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what recent assessment the Pesticides Safety Directorate has made of the safety of the use of pesticides in school grounds and playing fields. [137263]

Alun Michael: The assessment of the safety of the use of pesticides in school grounds and playing fields is covered by the specific assessments carried out by the Pesticides Safety Directorate (PSD) when evaluating risks to human health prior to any decision to grant approval for the marketing and use of a pesticide.

There are an extensive range of legislative and administrative controls over the approval, storage, marketing and use of pesticides. Applicants for pesticide approvals must show that their products are effective, humane, and pose no unacceptable risks to human beings, non-target species, or the wider environment before approval will be granted. All pesticide manufacturers are required to provide a wide range of scientific data that are evaluated by scientific experts in the PSD or the Health and Safety Executive (HSE). These evaluations are then scrutinised by the independent experts of the Advisory Committee on Pesticides (ACP), who make recommendations to Ministers. Only when the Ministers responsible for pesticides, are satisfied on the basis of this expert advice that a pesticide can be used without unacceptable risk to people, animals, and the environment, will approval be given to put it on the market.

As part of the risk assessment process, the exposure of bystanders and persons re-entering the treated area is considered. Specific estimates of potential dermal and inhalation exposure are made and the risk assessed directly.

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many of the pesticides in use in the United Kingdom which have only provisional approval have had this status for (a) one to three years, (b) three to five years and (c) more than five years; and if she will make a statement. [137264]

Alun Michael: As at 5 November 2003, of the pesticides currently holding provisional approval status in the UK,

(a) 450 have been provisionally approved for periods of one to three years;

(b) 308 have been provisionally approved for periods of three to five years;

(c) 344 have been provisionally approved for more than five years.

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of the amounts of pesticides used in grain stores in the United Kingdom. [137266]

Alun Michael: Assessments of the amounts of pesticides used in grain stores are carried out every four years, as a part of the Government's regular programme of surveys of pesticide use.

The most recent published results relate to grain harvested in 1998 and stored in the 1998–99 season. In total 13.31 tonnes of pesticides were used to treat the fabric of buildings, and 10.95 tonnes were used to treat stored grain.

The survey has been repeated for grain harvested in 2002 and stored in the 2002–03 season. Data from this survey are currently being assessed and it is expected that the results will be published early in 2004.

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what procedures her Department has for monitoring the use of pesticides in food produce entering the United Kingdom. [137268]

Alun Michael: Pesticide residues in both imported and domestically-produced food are controlled through UK Regulations, which lay down Maximum Residue Levels (MRLs) for pesticide/commodity combinations covering the components of the UK diet.

The Government's monitoring programme for pesticide residues in both home produced and imported food is overseen by the independent Pesticide Residues Committee (PRC). Some 4,105 food samples were analysed in 2002 for a wide range of pesticides with the result that the number of individual pesticide/commodity combinations analysed was in excess of 180,000. The proportion of imports in each survey varies depending on the balance of imports and domestic produce on the market. Overall in 2002, 52 per cent. of the samples tested were imports.

All the monitoring results are published on a website: www.pesticides.gov.uk/committees/PRC/prc.htm

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs which EU countries impose a pesticide tax; and at what levels. [137286]

Alun Michael: We are aware of pesticide taxes in Belgium, Denmark, France, Norway and Sweden. To the best of our knowledge, the current tax rates applied are:

Belgium:
Two hundred and forty eight euros per kg of active ingredient for non-agricultural uses of pesticides containing atrazine, diuron, isoproturon, simazine and pentachlorophenol.

Denmark:
Tax levied as a percentage of retail price excluding VAT. Insecticides attract a 54 per cent. tax, herbicides 33 per cent. and non-agricultural pesticides 3 per cent.

France:
Seven tax bands for different active ingredients. Tax rate ranges from zero to about €1.68 euros per kg.

Norway:
Basic rate is NOK 15 per treated hectare multiplied by a banding factor of 0.5, 1, 4 or 8.

Sweden:
SEK 20 per kg of active ingredient.

Printer Cartridges

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what estimate she has made of the change in waste to UK landfills of excluding printer cartridges from the Waste Electrical and Electronic Equipment Directive; and if she will make a statement. [135888]

Mr. Morley: The Government have not undertaken an assessment on the change in waste to UK landfills as a result of not including printer cartridges in the scope of the WEEE Directive. The Directive applies to whole products placed on to the market and not to individual components, sub-assemblies or consumables, such as printer cartridges.

There are currently a large number of businesses which refill printer cartridges, and the Government would like to see this continue. Further, cartridges which are in a printer at the time it is discarded will have to be reused or recycled.

Recycling Plants

Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs whether licences have been issued to recycling plants before validation of plants has been completed. [133306]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 30 October 2003]: Yes. Licences for all such plant are issued before validation, so that the plant may store fridges at the site, and abide by the duty of care. However, validation is required before the plant can begin fridge reprocessing.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Djanogly: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what reviews have been undertaken in each of the last three years of renewable energy schemes in Cambridgeshire; and what the associated cost to public funds was of the reviews. [134871]

Mr. Timms: I have been asked to reply.

During 1999, Government Offices were asked to facilitate the production of studies into the potential for generation of renewable energy in their region. For the East of England, the findings were made available towards the end of 2000. The cost of professional assistance for the Region as a whole was about £50,000, but it is not realistic to apportion this across the six counties concerned.

Subsequently, Government Offices were invited to bid for monies for a two year period from March 2002 to raise awareness and activity on renewable energy generation with special reference to the planning system. For the East of England, the sum involved is around £250,000, with other matched funds, but again this cannot be taken down to county level.

Rural Services

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when Lord Haskins' report on reform of Government delivery of rural services will be made public; and if she will make a statement. [137120]

Alun Michael: Lord Haskins was asked to review the way the Government delivers its rural policy. We have recently received his report and are considering his recommendations carefully. We intend to publish the report, and the Government's interim response to it, shortly.

Sewerage

Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what steps she has taken to introduce first time sewerage schemes in rural areas. [136279]

Mr. Morley: Sewerage undertakers have a statutory duty to provide, improve and extend their public sewer network. It is a matter for each sewerage company to decide on its programme of work in relation to this duty.

Companies have submitted their draft business plans for 2005–10 to the Office of Water Services (Ofwat). It was open to companies to include costed proposals to extend or improve their sewerage network, these could also include first time sewerage schemes. Ofwat will examine their plans, and decide the appropriate revenue requirement, having taken advice from other stakeholders, particularly the Environment Agency, for companies when it sets price limits in 2004.

Ofwat have published a summary of companies' proposals and the issues that arise from these plans. It will publish its draft determination in July 2004 for consultation before making its final decisions in November 2004.

Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what representations she has received from Hambledon and Wormley residents concerning recent statements by Southern Water on first time sewerage schemes. [136280]

Mr. Morley: The Department has received no recent representations from Hambledon and Wormley residents concerning recent statements by Southern Water on first time sewerage schemes.

Animal Welfare

Mr. Prosser: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many live sheep have been exported from the United Kingdom since 1 February for (a) slaughter and (b) further fattening. [135929]

Mr. Bradshaw: The total number of live sheep certified for export from Great Britain since 1 February 2003 is shown in the following table. These figures are derived from the computer system used to issue export health certificates and are subject to updating and amendment. The figures for sheep certified for export from Northern Ireland will follow shortly.

Total	1,199	22,194	0

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make it her policy to reject the draft Regulation on the Transportation of Animals unless it allows the United Kingdom (a) to continue to enforce the Minimum Values legislation and (b) to refuse to permit live equines to be exported for slaughter; and if she will make a statement. [136106]

Mr. Bradshaw: Defra are playing a full role in the discussions in Brussels on the draft proposals on the transport of animals. We are reviewing the options available to us to achieve controls that are similar in effect to those in our current rules.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the progress the Government have made in ensuring that the welfare of (a) equines and (b) livestock will be improved in the Regulation on the Transportation of Animals. [136109]

Mr. Bradshaw: We are playing a full role in the discussion in Brussels on these draft proposals which are likely to come before the Council of Ministers in December.

Water Industry

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the changes in the overall environmental impact of water consumption by (a) consumers and (b) industry since 1997; and what measures are being taken to reduce consumption. [136113]

Mr. Morley: The Environment Agency has a duty to secure the proper use of water resources, ensuring that a balance is maintained between the needs of water consumers and the environment. Between 1997 and 2003, household water use remained fairly stable at about 8,600 Megalitres per day, whilst non-household use fell from 4320 to 3823 Megalitres per day. The Government undertakes a range of activities to encourage sustainable water use. The Water Supply (Water Fittings) Regulations were introduced in 1999 and set the maximum water consumption of certain domestic fittings and appliances. The Envirowise programme provides practical environmental advice to businesses to help reduce their water consumption, and the Enhanced Capital Allowance scheme has recently been extended to include designated water efficient technologies. Water companies have been set annual leakage targets since 1998 and are also under a statutory duty to promote the efficient use of water by their customers.

Wild Birds (Imports)

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) on how many occasions the importation of wild caught birds has been stopped and enforcement action taken in the last five years; [135819]

(2) how many people have been successfully prosecuted under existing (a) international and (b) UK regulations for the illegal importation of wild caught (i) parrots and (ii) other birds in the last five years for which figures are available. [135821]

Mr. Morley: For the period in question, one person has been successfully prosecuted for the illegal importation of parrots, and two people for the illegal importation of birds of prey. The prosecutions were for international import offences under the Customs and Excise Management Act 1979.

PRIME MINISTER

Correspondence

Mr. Collins: To ask the Prime Minister which Department will answer the letter from the hon. Member for Westmorland and Lonsdale to him of 21 October concerning the proposed closure of the Holehird Leonard Cheshire home for the disabled in Windermere; and when it will do so. [137920]

The Prime Minister: My hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Health will be replying to the letter this week.

GM Trials

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Prime Minister what response he has made to the letter sent to him by 114 United Kingdom scientists relating to GM trials. [137703]

The Prime Minister: I strongly believe that science and technology are vital to our country's future prosperity. As a government, we need to ensure that the UK continues to be one of the top countries in the world for scientific research.

I read the letter from Professor Burke and others with interest. In light of this, I have responded to the letter re-iterating that this government's approach is to make decisions on GM crops on the basis of sound science. The reason why we have not yet made a formal response to the results of the farm-scale evaluations is that we are waiting to hear the assessment of the Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment, which we expect to receive around the end of this year.

Government Prospectus

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Prime Minister (1) when the Government will publish a prospectus setting out its progress and the challenges facing the country; [134538]

(2) what arrangements the Government proposes for consultation on its progress and response to challenges; and what resources it will commit to this exercise. [134539]

The Prime Minister: The prospectus will be a Labour Party publication. Individual departments account for their progress annually and regularly publish consultation documents on policy issues that are funded by those departments.

Kenny Richey

Mr. Carmichael: To ask the Prime Minister if he intends to make representations for clemency to the President of the United States in the event that the appeal on behalf of Mr. Kenny Richey to the 6th Circuit Court of Appeals is unsuccessful. [136816]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State gave him today.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL

Serious Fraud Office

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Solicitor-General for what reasons the Serious Fraud Office did not initiate an investigation into whether payments made by a firm whose name has been communicated to her were authorised in the UK. [135892]

The Solicitor-General: If the hon. Member will write to me, outlining in full his concerns, I should be happy to provide him with a substantive reply.

TRANSPORT

Foreign-registered Lorries

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many foreign-registered lorries used British roads in the last 12 months. [136187]

Mr. Jamieson: During the 12 months ending June 2003, the latest period for which figures are available, foreign-registered lorries made 1.4 million trips to Great Britain. However, the number of vehicles was much less than this because individual lorries may make more than one trip.

Lime Street Station

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the negotiations on Network Rail taking operational control of Lime Street station to be concluded. [137113]

Mr. McNulty: This is an operational matter for Network Rail. At this stage there is nothing further I can add to my answer of 4 November 2003, Official Report, column 540W, to my hon. Friend.

Montreal Convention

Mr. John Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to amend the Montreal Convention by substituting (a) incident for accident and (b) personal injury for bodily injury. [136998]

Mr. McNulty: Under the terms of the international 1999 Montreal Convention, in the case of death or injury to passengers airlines are strictly liable for claims up to 100,000 SDKs, and may be exonerated only from higher claims if they can prove absence of negligence.

Within such a regime it would be inappropriate to broaden the scope of airline liability by substituting (a) incident for accident or (b) personal injury for bodily injury, and I have no plans to propose amendments to the Convention.

Mr. John Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will press the European Union not to ratify the Montreal Protocol until airline liability is extended to include the health of air passengers. [136999]

Mr. McNulty: No. In the interests of airline passengers we look forward to the ratification of the Montreal Convention by the Community and by the member states as soon as possible.

National Rail Training Centre

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to set up a National Rail Training Centre; and if he will make a statement. [137124]

Mr. McNulty: The Centre for Rail Skills was established in July 2003 as the industry-wide training organisation. The CfRS does not itself provide training courses but is responsible for co-ordinating and facilitating them. This training takes place across the whole of the rail industry and throughout the country and is therefore delivered at a wide range of venues rather than from a single location.

Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act

Brian White: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what statutory investigatory powers the Department has; which ones will be superseded by use of the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act 2000; and what plans he has for removing these legacy powers. [136125]

Mr. McNulty: The Department for Transport is responsible for the following statutory investigatory powers:

Sections 179 and 180 of the Road Traffic Act 1988, 76 and 77 of the Public Passenger Vehicles Act 1981, 129 of the Transport Act 1985 and 128 and 129 of the Road Traffic Regulation Act 1984, to require production of documents and to call witnesses in the course of an inquiry.[1]

Section 180 of the Road Traffic Act 1988, to inspect a vehicle that has been involved in a road accident.

Section 75 of the Civil Aviation Act 1982, to obtain information in connection with investigations of air accidents.

Sections 257 to 260, 267 and 268 of the Merchant Shipping Act 1995, to require the production of documents and call witnesses under a formal inquiry, and require production of ships' documents and other documents necessary for inspections and examinations.

Section 119 of the Railways Act 1933, to require the production of information to make directions to railway operators about safety.

The Department for Transport does not have any statutory investigatory powers that would be superseded by the use of the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act 2000 or plans to amend or repeal any of its powers to that end. The above powers will continue to be used to compel the necessary and proportionate production of information, other than communications data, for the purposes described above. The draft Regulation of Investigatory Powers (Communications Data) Order would give access to communications data to selected officers of the Maritime and Coastguard Agency for the purposes of protecting public safety and preventing and detecting maritime crime.

Powers under section 259(2)(k) the Merchant Shipping Act 1995 to compel people to assist the Maritime and Coastguard Agency will be retained as they are used for other purposes not relating to accessing communications data. If the draft Order is enacted, these powers will not be used or attempted to be used for obtaining communications data.

[1] Similar powers exist under sections 249 and 249 of the Road Traffic Act 1960 and section 56 of the Goods Vehicle (Licensing of Operators) Act 1995, due to legislative changes these provisions will soon be repealed.

Road Safety

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what research his Department (a) has carried out and (b) has collated on the effect on the risk of collision of (i) hand-held and (ii) hands-free mobile phone use when driving. [137182]

Mr. Jamieson: The Department commissioned the Royal Society for the Prevention of Accidents to review the relevant research on the use of any mobile phone while driving. The report, was published in 2001 and is available on-line at:

www.rospa.com/pdfs/road.mobiles/report.pdf.

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with representatives of police forces concerning the enforcement of the Road Vehicles (Construction and Use) (Amendment) (No 4) Regulations 2003; and if he will make a statement. [137183]

Mr. Jamieson: The Department consulted representative police organisations prior to making the new regulation introducing an offence of using a hand-held mobile phone when driving. Enforcement will be a matter for the police.

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to publicise the new regulations concerning the use of mobile phones when driving. [137184]

Mr. Jamieson: My Department is publicising the new hand-held mobile phone legislation in a number of ways:

National radio advertising will begin on 17 November 2003 and run for four weeks.

National press advertising will appear in late November 2003 and early December 2003.

Information will be emailed to the top 1,000 UK companies/ Central and Local Government Departments in November 2003 encouraging them to cascade messages to employees.

National press release will be issued on 17 November 2003 and journalists approached to generate national and regional media coverage.

Variable message signs on motorways will carry messages regarding the new legislation.

Public relations activity will target relevant HR, business, personnel, office management, legal and auto-fleet magazines in November 2003.

Promotional materials including posters and leaflets are now available and will be disseminated by Road Safety Officers around the country.

Detailed information about the new legislation is available on the Think! website www.thinkroadsafety.gov.uk and the DfT website.

The Department is also re-iterating the dangers of driver distraction surrounding the use of all mobiles phones, focusing on the simple message "Switch off before you drive off" in the following ways:

In January 2004 national radio advertising will run for two weeks.

National cinema advertising will begin in February 2004 and run for eight weeks.

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to publish further guidance regarding the new regulations on the use of mobile phones when driving, in addition to the guidance on the Department for Transport website. [137185]

Mr. Jamieson: The Department's advice leaflet on mobile phones and driving has been updated to take account of the new regulations and the text was recently added to the THINK Road Safety site at www.thinkroadsafety.gov.uk/mobile/index.htm. Printed copies (product code T/INF/885) will shortly be available free of charge from the Department's distribution centre, telephone 0870 122 6236.

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many children under 16 (a) received a serious head injury as a result of a cycling accident and (b) died in each of the last 10 years. [136423]

Dr. Ladyman: I have been asked to reply.

The available information is shown in the tables.

Financial year	Number of admissions of children under 16
1996–97	2,781
1997–98	3,349
1998–99	2,711
1999–2000	3,115
2000–01	3,489
2001–02	3,372

Due to changes in coding methodology it is only possible to provide the last seven years of data.

1994	27	39
1995	31	43
1996	34	47
1997	25	35
1998	18	29
1999	20	32
2000	14	24
2002	10	19

Data for 2001 and 2002 may not be directly comparable to those for previous years, due to changes in coding methodology in 2001. The figures should therefore be interpreted with caution.

South Coast Study

Dr. Murrison: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he will publish his response to the Bristol/Bath to South Coast Study. [137624]

Mr. McNulty: The study is yet to be completed, but it is anticipated that the final report will be finished by the end of this month. The South West Regional Assembly has indicated that they wish to comment on the report, in particular regarding the de-trunking issue which gave rise to the study being commissioned.

Following receipt of the study report and comments from the Regional Assembly, I will be in a position to make a response.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Consumer Debt

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent discussions she has had with (a) the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux, (b) representatives of high street banks and building societies and (c) the Financial Services Authority on the issue of consumer debt [136756]

Mr. Sutcliffe: My officials and I have had a number of meetings with Citizens Advice, representatives of high street banks and building societies (including trade associations such as the British Banking Association and the Finance and Leasing Association) and the Financial Services Authority to discuss the issue of consumer debt.

These discussions have covered a number of areas, including how to enshrine responsible landing, joining up Government policy on over-indebtedness, improving access to and the quality of debt advice etc. Government proposals on these issues will be laid out in the White Paper on Consumer Credit.

International Atomic Energy Agency

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make it her policy to agree voluntarily to International Atomic Energy Agency inspections as provided for in the Additional Protocol; and if she will make a statement. [136699]

Nigel Griffiths: The protocol additional to the UK/Euratom/IAEA safeguards agreement was approved by the IAEA Board of Governors in June 1998 and was signed by the UK Governor and the European Commission on 22 September 1998. The legislation necessary to implement the protocol in the UK, the Nuclear Safeguards Act 2000, will enter into force when the European Commission has confirmed that it is ready to implement the protocol. Voluntary declarations of the type of information that the UK will be required to provide under Article 2 of the protocol have been provided to the IAEA since 1999. We have also indicated our willingness to allow complementary access visits to locations in the UK, as provided for in our protocol, on a voluntary basis. Prior to entry into force of the Nuclear Safeguards Act, any such access will require the agreement of those responsible for the location concerned.

London Development Agency

Linda Perham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will require the London Development Agency to (a) set an annual target for increasing the total of start-up units in London and (b) publish an annual register showing where such business premises are located. [136617]

Jacqui Smith: The London Development Agency currently has an annual target for creating or attracting new businesses in London, set at 900 for the current year. The LDA Corporate Plan 2003–06 envisages this annual target being increased to 950 in 2005–06. The Agency also monitors the number of VAT registrations in London's most deprived wards.

The Government does not publish figures relating to the number of business start-ups or closures, and there are no plans to do so. VAT registrations and de-registrations are the best official guide to the pattern of business start-up and closure, and are published by the Small Business Service and Office for National Statistics on an annual basis.

Arms Fairs

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans she has to support arms fairs in the future. [136300]

Jacqui Smith: My Department represents the interests of UK-based defence manufacturers in their legitimate manufacturing and export interests. My Department also has no plans to change its long-standing arrangement whereby Ministers and Officials will attend exhibitions and fairs where armaments may be displayed and promoted. UK Trade & Investment (UKTI), through the Defence Manufacturers Association, supports the presence of UK companies at overseas exhibitions, seminars and in outward missions.

Details of grants provided by UKTI to DMA were given to the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent (Llew Smith), on 20 October 2003, Official Report, column 439W.

British Energy

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will place in the Library the Government's responses to each of the submissions from interested parties to the European Commission regarding the British Energy restructuring application. [137021]

Mr. Timms: No. Correspondence between the United Kingdom and the European Commission concerning current state aid cases, and that relating to specific undertakings, is confidential in accordance with the terms of Exemption l(c) information received in confidence from international organisations of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Broadband

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans she has to provide extra funds to allow access to broadband for rural areas of (a) England and (b) Cumbria. [137123]

Mr. Timms: The Government intends spending £1 billion on broadband connectivity for the public sector between 2003–2006. The Broadband Aggregation Project will set up nine Regional Aggregation Bodies (RABs), which will aggregate and procure public sector demand for broadband. Each RAB will work closely with stakeholders in their region to develop an appropriate regional strategy that will offer best value for money and the widest availability to surrounding communities.

The North West Regional Development Agency Corporate Plan has allocated £106 million between 2003–06 to promote a comprehensive broadband infrastructure throughout the region and maximise its usage. A project to procure broadband services for Cumbrian residents and businesses is currently awaiting approval by the Capital Projects Review Group and HM Treasury.

Business Support Schemes

Brian Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many business support schemes are in existence; and if she will list the schemes that have been closed down by her Department since November 2002. [135900]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 3 November 2003]: The DTI funds 52 schemes that are currently open to new business. In addition two other schemes, the Broadband Fund and the Regional Innovation Fund have had funding provision re-allocated from DTI to the Regional Development Agencies. The Department is in the process of closing all schemes in order to replace them with 10 business support products by April 2004.

Since 30 November 2002, 39 schemes have closed to new business. Eight of these schemes have closed down completely and 31 have closed to new business but have a tail of activities to which the department has made legal commitments.

Schemes that have closed down completely

Partnership in Plastics Programme

Coal Production (Scotland)

David Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much (a) deep mined coal and (b) open cast coal was produced in Scotland in (i) 2000–01, (ii) 2001–02 and (iii) 2002–03. [137128]

Mr. Timms: The information available on the amount of deep mined and opencast coal produced in Scotland, relates to financial years and, in millions of tonnes, is as follows.

	Deep Mine	Opencast
2000–01	0.7	7.1
2001–02	0.8	8.1

Cold Calling

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what regulatory framework protects the public from cold callers; and what plans the Government has for further regulation of the practice of cold calling. [136598]

Mr. Timms: The regulatory framework for unsolicited direct marketing by phone currently gives individual subscribers the right to opt-out of sales calls if they do not wish to receive them. Under the Telecommunications (Data Protection and Privacy) Regulations 1999 (which will shortly be replaced by the Privacy and Electronic Communications (EC Directive) Regulations 2003), no-one may make a sales call to a subscriber who has previously notified them that they do not wish to receive such calls from them, or who has been registered with the Telephone Preference Service for twenty-eight days or more.

Both the Distance Selling Regulations and the Consumer Protection (Cancellation of Contracts Concluded away from Business Premises) Regulations provide rights to consumers over distance and doorstep selling. The Distance Selling Regulations require that consumers are provided with clear, comprehensible information about the goods or services offered. Where a business uses cold calling by telephone to sell to consumers, the caller must clearly identify the business they represent and the commercial purpose of the call at the start of a conversation. The Regulations also provide for a seven-day cooling off period (except for certain goods and services which are excluded) in which to withdraw from any contract.

The Consumer Protection (Cancellation of Contracts Concluded away from Business Premises) Regulations, commonly known as the "doorstep selling regulations" provide the right to a seven day cooling-off period during which an agreement to buy goods or services worth more than £35 from a trader whose visit is unsolicited may by cancelled, and the same right where a visit by a trader follows an unsolicited doorstep or telephone approach.

The Office of Fair Trading is currently investigating the doorstep selling market under powers provided by the Enterprise Act 2002. The OFT expect to report on their investigation early in the New Year. All recommendations will be carefully considered.

Concorde

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what role she has in determining the final destinations for each of the Concorde aircraft; and if she will make a statement;. [135331]

(2) what estimate she has made of the final public cost of the project to (a) develop, (b) produce and (c) maintain, while in public ownership, the Concorde aircraft since 1973; and if she will make a statement. [135333]

Ms Hewitt [holding answers 5 November 2003]: Total UK Government expenditure in support of Concorde was £1,358 million gross, £1,062 million net of receipts in prices of the day. These data were compiled from information taken from the appropriation accounts over the period 1956–57 to 1986–87.

Public ownership ceased in 1984 when British Airways became the owner and operator of the UK Concorde fleet. The Government is therefore not in a position to make a decision on the final destinations for each of the Concorde aircraft. That remains a decision for British Airways, the legal owner of the UK Concorde fleet.

Construction Industry

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what policies she is following to ensure an adequate supply of skilled construction engineers; and if she will make a statement on the effect of current employment legislation on training of the under-18s. [134239]

Nigel Griffiths: The Government provide approximately £35 million to the Construction Industry Training Board in respect of various contracts and schemes administered by them. £3 million support their role as a Sector Skills Council and sponsors events like National Construction Week to encourage young people to make construction a first choice career.

The DTI also works closely with the Department for Education and Skills to take forward actions arising from the recent Skills White Paper, and Work Permits UK, which administers the work permits regime. The Government are fully committed to Modern Apprenticeships as a means of preparing young people for an economy based on high-level skills.

The Department for Education and Skills on the matter of training for the under-18s, which is a matter primarily for them.

Consumer Credit

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what action she will take to amend consumer credit law to stop shopping vouchers being used as a first contact for those selling doorstep loans; [136290]

(2) what representations she has received about loan companies using shopping vouchers as a means of avoiding consumer credit legislation which forbids unsolicited selling of loans; [136291]

(3) what discussions she has had with (a) high street stores and (b) trading standards departments to stop loan companies using store discount vouchers to avoid the consumer credit legislation which forbids unsolicited selling of loans. [136292]

Mr. Sutcliffe: As you are no doubt aware, my Department is currently undertaking a major review of the Consumer Credit Act to bring it up to date so that it continues to provide appropriate consumer protection. A major aspect of this will be the publication in December 2003 of a Consumer Credit White Paper.

The review has been characterised by consultation, and decisions on the content and focus of the White Paper have been made after comprehensive discussions with key stakeholders—industry, consumer groups and enforcement agencies—including the Office of Fair Trading, which has responsibility for monitoring social and commercial developments in the provision of credit.

In addition, my Department has also received comments and opinions during the course of the review from many organisations and individuals—including on the issue of doorstep lending techniques—that have contributed to the development of the proposals that will be set out in the White Paper.

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps her Department is taking in (a) the review of the Consumer Credit Act 1974 and (b) the preparation of the forthcoming Credit White Paper to require companies to make more accessible the language used in their (i) promotional and (ii) contractual material. [136631]

Mr. Sutcliffe: As the hon. Gentleman is aware, my Department is nearing the conclusion of its review of the Consumer Credit Act 1974. I have announced that a Consumer Credit White Paper, outlining our proposals will be published in December of this year.

Among other things, the White Paper, will set out proposals for reform in two key areas where clear and accessible information for consumers is required, the advertising of consumer credit products and the form and content of credit agreements. Alongside the White Paper we will publish consultation draft legislation to reform the law in these areas.

Estate Agents

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the protection given to consumers and their right to financial compensation under (a) the Property Misdescriptions Act 1991, (b) the Estate Agents Act 1979 and (c) other legislation governing housing transactions. [136797]

Mr. Sutcliffe [holding answer 6 November 2003]: The Estate Agents Act 1979 regulates the conduct of estate agents in the buying and selling of property and seeks to ensure that consumers as either buyers or sellers are treated honestly and fairly. The Office of Fair Trading can, if satisfied that a person is unfit to carry on estate agency work, make an order prohibiting that person from carrying on estate agency work. Under the Property Misdescriptions Act 1991 it is a criminal offence to make a false or misleading statement about a number of specified matters concerning a property in either written or verbal communication with a prospective client.

Neither of these Acts provides directly for the payment of compensation to consumers. However, those who suffer a financial loss as a result of malpractice by estate agents or misdescriptions of property may be able to make a claim for compensation in the civil courts. If the estate agent is a member of the Ombudsman for Estate Agents Scheme, consumers may also be able to make a claim for compensation to the ombudsman.

The Department is not responsible for any other legislation specifically governing housing transactions.

Correspondence

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when she will respond to the letter of 2 September from the honourable Member for Totnes concerning Mr. Trevor Sams of Scope Communications UK Ltd, Totnes. [136971]

Ms Hewitt: My office has no record of the hon. Member's letter. If he writes to me again I will ensure that the letter will be dealt with as quickly as possible.

Departmental Expenditure (Official Residencies)

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much the Department spent on (a) maintenance, (b) renovation, (c) council tax and (d) running costs of residential properties used by ministers and officials in each year since 1997. [134698]

Ms Hewitt: My Department has not had any costs relating to Government-owned official residences used by DTI Ministers since 1998. Information about the costs for previous financial years is already in the public domain.

Direct Payment

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which financial institutions have committed to providing a universal banking service through post office branches; how much each institution has committed to pay towards the cost of the Post Office card account; how much remains to be paid; and what the deadline is for payment. [137022]

Mr. Timms: The financial institutions supporting universal banking are Barclays, Lloyds TSB Bank, Royal Bank of Scotland/Nat West, HSBC, Abbey National, HBOS, Alliance and Leicester, NAG, the Co-operative Bank, First Trust, the Bank of Ireland and the Nationwide Building Society. They are each making a basic bank account accessible at post offices, and together they are contributing £180 million to the costs of the Post Office card account. Individual contributions and the schedule of payments are matters of commercial confidentiality.

Energy Policy

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much (a) electricity and (b) other energy her Department has used in each year since 1997 (i) in total and (ii) per square metre; what the projected use is for each of the following years for which forecasts are made; what plans she has to reduce usage; and if she will make a statement. [135058]

Ms Hewitt: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs has answered part A and B on 3 November 2003, Official Report, column 404W. The Government's strategy with regard to long term carbon dioxide emissions is set out in the Energy White Paper published in February 2003. The Department of Trade and Industry will play its full part in delivering through its own operations the energy efficiency and carob reduction aims set out in the white paper. Forecasts of energy use for future years are not available, but we have committed to reducing CO_2 emissions by at least 1 per cent. per annum. From 1 November all new DTI contracts will meet minimum energy efficiency standards, as well as value for money in line with the commitments laid out in the Energy White Paper.

On top of this the Department purchases electricity from renewables sources equating to almost 30 per cent. of its HQ estate requirement compared to a target of 5 per cent. The Department is also continuing to work toward the Sustainable Development in Government green energy targets, which are to be published by the end of this year.

European Union

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what changes have taken place in the balance of trade in manufactures with the EU since the UK joined the organisation. [134097]

Mr. Mike O'Brien [holding answer 6 November 2003]: The UK's trade with the EU has grown steadily since UK membership in 1973. The value of the deficit in trade of manufacturers with the EU in 1973 was 0.3 per cent. of GDP. This grew to 3.0 per cent of GDP in 1989. In 2002 the deficit was 2.1 per cent. of GDP.

These changes since 1973 in the balance of trade with the EU are smaller than those seen with non-EU countries. Over the same period the trade of manufacturers with non-EU countries has gone from a surplus of 2.3 per cent. in 1973, to a deficit of 1.8 per cent. of GDP in 2002.

The UK's membership and increasing economic integration with the EU has generated considerable opportunities for UK businesses and contributed positively to UK prosperity. This has helped drive the twenty fold increase in UK trade in goods with the EU since 1973, compared to the twelve fold rise in trade in goods with non-EU countries.

Gas Act Order

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry why there is no requirement that changes to the Gas Act Order go on the public register before they come into force. [136173]

Mr. Timms: The requirements in the Gas Act for Ofgem to keep a Public Register are expressed in broad terms. I understand that it is Ofgem's intention to place a wide range of relevant information on the Public Register once such information is in final form.

Generators

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many generators burn biomass and wood residues in the United Kingdom; and what her forecast is for the number so doing in (a) 2006, (b) 2010 and (c) 2012. [137096]

Mr. Timms: In 2002, there were eight generating stations in the United Kingdom that burned biomass or wood residues. Figures are not yet available for 2003 but we are aware that up to 17 more biomass schemes could generate electricity in 2003. Forecasts of future electricity generation are not made at this level of detail.

International Thermonuclear Experimental Reactor

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what research her Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated on a United Kingdom bid to build the International Thermonuclear Experimental Reactor. [136156]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 3 November 2003]: There has been no research commissioned or evaluated on such a United Kingdom bid and no such bid has ever been made. The previous Government decided not to bid for ITER on cost grounds and on the basis that the United Kingdom currently hosts the Joint European Torus (JET) fusion experiment and would be very unlikely to win a bid to host its successor.

Internet

Brian Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many guidance booklets produced by her Department are only accessible via the internet; and if she will make a statement. [137303]

Ms Hewitt: I have understood a guidance booklet to be a publication produced by my Department to give information to the general public. To distinguish the guidance booklets from other DTI publications could be done only at disproportionate cost.

Of 3,306 publications currently available, and notified to my Department's Publications Unit, 847 (25.6 per cent.) are accessible only via the internet. These include publications previously available in hard copy but now out of print.

Iraq

Mr. Hepburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the value of contracts awarded for the reconstruction of Iraq to date is; what outstanding contracts remain to be awarded; and to which countries contracts have been awarded, broken down by (a) value and (b) type of contract. [135343]

Ms Hewitt: Contracts for the reconstruction in Iraq are awarded by a number of different agencies. We have information on many of the contracts awarded, (see appendix A) but there is no comprehensive breakdown giving the details requested. We continue to monitor the issuing and awarding of contracts to alert UK companies as appropriate.

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on manufacturing industry in (a) the North West and (b) Lancashire. [136917]

Jacqui Smith: Manufacturing in the North West—and especially in Lancashire—remains vitally important to the regional and national economy. It contributes around £19 billion to the region's GDP, accounts for some £14 billion worth of exports and employs around 500,000 people, and its importance is reflected in the Regional Economic Strategy and Manufacturing Strategy. North West manufacturers have identified a number of key issues, including the need for more skilled personnel, greater availability of financial support for business start-ups and better product and process development. The North West Development Agency (NWDA) is piloting closer working with the Small Business Service and the Local Learning and Skills Councils to better address these issues. I recently announced an expansion of the successful Manufacturing Advisory Service in the region. This is an £18 million project supported by an initial investment of £5 million from the NWDA, and aims to deliver assistance to an additional 2,500 businesses in the region, and to achieve productivity increases of £50 million. In addition to benefiting from these initiatives, businesses in Lancashire have access to the services provided by the Lancashire West Partnership Productivity Centre, which helps companies, particularly Small and Medium-sized Enterprises, to achieve significant productivity improvements.

Mobile Phones

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent discussions her Department has held with the Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs about recycling mobile phones; and what steps are being taken to encourage such recycling. [136810]

Mr. Timms: The recycling of mobile phones is covered by the EC Directive on Waste from Electrical and Electronic Equipment. The Directive is currently being transposed into UK legislation and this work is being overseen by an inter Departmental team, which includes officials from Defra. Although the recycling of mobile phones has not been discussed specifically, we are aware of a number of initiatives around the UK that take back, refurbish and reuse mobile phones or that recycle them.

The Department welcomes the reuse and recycling of mobile phones through these initiatives, as a useful contribution to sustainable consumption and production, but does not operate a promotional programme specifically aimed at encouraging mobile phone reuse or recycling. We believe that the WEEE Directive will offer the incentive for more schemes of this type to be established, especially since mobile phones contain potentially high value materials such as precious metals and chips.

National Minimum Wage

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many (a) men and (b) women in (i) York unitary authority area and (ii) the City of York parliamentary constituency benefited from the national minimum wage in the last year for which figures are available. [135938]

Mr. Sutcliffe: It is not possible to provide estimates specifically for the York unitary authority area or for the City of York parliamentary constituency. However, based on the Office for National Statistics' Low Pay data for 2003, the DTI estimates that between 110,000 and 140,000 people in Yorkshire and the Humber are expected to benefit from the increase in minimum wage rates in October 2003.

It is not possible to provide a gender breakdown for Yorkshire and the Humber. For the UK as a whole, around 70 per cent. of those who are expected to benefit from the October 2003 uprating are women.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate she has made of the number of people in (a) Leeds and (b) Leeds, West who will gain from the latest minimum wage increase. [136056]

Mr. Sutcliffe: It is not possible to provide estimates specifically for Leeds or for Leeds, West. However, based on the Office for National Statistics' Low Pay data for 2003, the DTI estimates that between 110,000 and 140,000 people in Yorkshire and the Humber are expected to benefit from the increase in minimum wage rates in October 2003.

Postal Services

Mr. Lazarowicz: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps she is taking to ensure that Post Office Limited follows the procedures agreed with Postwatch to integrate consideration of proposals to close branch offices with area network reinvention plans. [136498]

Mr. Timms: Proposals for post office closures under the urban network reinvention programme are put out to public consultation in accordance with the code of practice agreed with Postwatch. Final decisions on closure, after consideration of representations received, are an operational matter for Post Office Ltd and I have asked the Chief Executive to reply direct to the hon. Member.

Property Rights

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry pursuant to her answer of 18 September, Official Report, column 880W, on property rights in developing countries, if she will make such an assessment. [135111]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We have no plans to make such a formal assessment but we are willing to consider any proposals the hon. Member may wish to make on the feasibility of doing so.

Radioactive Waste

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make it her policy to (a) retain access to the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee website from DEFRA's site if RWMAC is wound up and (b) arrange for pre-2000 RWMAC reports to be posted on the RWMAC website as an accessible archive. [135625]

Mr. Morley: Whatever decision is taken concerning its future, the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee (RWMAC) component of the Defra website will continue to operate to provide access to the committee's post-2000 advice. The current arrangement is for the copies of the pre-2000 advice to be supplied upon written request if they are still available. Again, this arrangement will be maintained.

SBX Project

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many UK companies have been involved in the bidding process for the Boeing Company's Sea-Based Test X-Band Radar (SBX) project; what assistance her department (a) offered and (b) gave to each company; and if she will make a statement. [136932]

Jacqui Smith: The number and identification of any UK companies bidding for Boeing's Sea-Based Test X-Band Radar (SBX) project would of course be a commercial matter between Boeing and the specific companies involved. I am not aware of any approach for assistance in relation to this programme. The lead on UK defence export activities is the responsibility of MoD's Defence Export Services Organisation (DESO).

Textiles

Sir Archy Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many textile and clothing companies there are in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) Scotland. [137352]

Jacqui Smith: The number of VAT based local units in the textile and clothing industry in March 2003 was:

Local Units	Textiles[1]	Clothing[2]
United Kingdom	5,210	4,840
of which:
Scotland	480	215

Sir Archy Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many people are employed in the textile industry in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) Scotland. [137353]

Jacqui Smith: In December 2001 there were 124,000 employee jobs in the textile industry in the United Kingdom, of which 12,000 were in Scotland.

Trade

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what she is doing to promote trade between Britain and (a) Saudi Arabia, (b) Oman, (c) the United Arab Emirates, (d) Qatar and (e) Bahrain. [135513]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: UK Trade and Investment sponsors a range of activities to alert UK companies to opportunities in the countries listed. These include a programme of inward and outward trade mission, exhibitions, the provision of market information and tailored assistance to UK companies through our network of posts in the region.

Trade Links

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans she has to set up trading links that would benefit third world countries in Africa. [135507]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Africa faces many challenges. Nearly half of the 600 million people in sub-Saharan Africa live on less than $1 dollar a day. The United Nations estimates that over 14 million people in the region will be dependent on food aid by March 2003.

Since September 2001 the UK government has committed over £80 million to humanitarian assistance and recovery programmes in Southern Africa. But aid also is not the answer.

We also provide assistance to British companies wishing to trade with Africa through services available from UK Trade and Investment and our network of posts in the region. We also support events in Africa designed to enable UK companies to assess the prospects for trade and investment in African countries.

This is why we are working hard, with our EU colleagues, to deliver a development round in line with the promises made at Doha. All countries will benefit, but the poorest stand to gain the most.

Unmanned Air Vehicles

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which UK companies produce (a) unmanned air vehicles and (b) components for unmanned air vehicles; and if she will make a statement. [136933]

Jacqui Smith: There are a wide number companies engaged in the development, production and support of un-manned air vehicles (UAVs) and their components in the UK. This Department does not however maintain an exhaustive listing of such companies. Such data is readily available through commercial sources.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions she has had in 2003 with UK companies interested in participating in future bidding processes for US requirement contracts for unmanned air vehicle projects; and if she will make a statement. [136934]

Jacqui Smith: I have had no specific discussions with UK companies in relation to the bidding process for the US requirement contracts for unmanned air vehicles (UAVs). UK Trade and Investment did however support, through the outward missions scheme, in May of this year a Society of British Aerospace Companies (SB AC) industry mission to the US and this included UAV technology within its remit. The lead on UK defence export activities is the responsibility of MoD's Defence Export Services Organisation (DESO).

TREASURY

Cross-border Payments

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of compliance by banks in the United Kingdom with the Cross-Border Payments Regulation adopted by the United Kingdom on 1 July 2002. [136660]

Ruth Kelly: The Cross-Border Payments in Euro Regulations 2003 provide for civil proceedings and create criminal offences for breaches of the Regulation on cross-border payments in euro. The Association for Payment Clearing Services has produced compliance guidelines for the banking industry. My officials will contribute to the report on the impact of the Regulation which the European Commission is required to produce by 1 July 2004.

Advisers and Consultants

Dr. Cable: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much (a) HM Treasury, (b) Customs and Excise and (c) the Inland Revenue spent on (i) advisers and (ii) consultants in the last financial year; and if he will make a statement. [134223]

Ruth Kelly: HM Treasury expenditure in 2002–03 on consultants was £2.8 million (excluding VAT). Inland Revenue had in place four framework agreements, through which it obtained a range of advisory and consultancy services including on IT, human resources, market research, social and economic research, and learning services. Departmental spend on these services for 2002–03 was in the region of £35 million (excluding VAT). Customs and Excise expenditure for consultants and advisors was £29.3 million (excluding VAT).

Banking Ombudsman

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many cases were considered by the Banking Ombudsman in the last year for which figures are available; how many cases were (a) upheld and (b) rejected; what was the average time taken to consider cases; and what the average cost was per case. [137193]

Ruth Kelly: The Financial Ombudsman Service tell me that in the financial year ending 31 March 2000, the Office of the Banking Ombudsman received a total of 4,375 cases.

The table shows a breakdown of the outcome of all cases resolved during the period:

Breakdown of cases—year ended 31 March 2000

Outcome of cases	Percentage
Resolved by mediation or conciliation	66
Resolved after investigation by an adjudicator	20
Of which:
In favour of the consumer	50
In favour of the firm	50
Resolved by final decision of an ombudsman	14
Of which:
In favour of the consumer	50
In favour of the firm	50

The average time taken to resolve cases in the year ending 31 March 2000 was 162 days.

The unit cost per case (calculated by dividing the total expenditure—less financing costs by the number of cases closed) for the year ending 31 March 2000 was £730, the average unit cost per cases across all of the predecessor schemes.

Creative Industries/Tourism

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of (a) the United Kingdom's and (b) London's GDP was generated by (i) creative tourism and (ii) the tourism industry in 2002–03. [135835]

Mr. Caborn: I have been asked to reply.

(i) The term 'creative tourism' is not recognised.

(ii) (a) Tourism was estimated to have accounted for 4.4 per cent. of UK GDP in 2002.

(b) The Greater London Authority is currently leading a review of methodologies used to estimate London's tourism GDP in order to produce an agreed estimate.

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of gross domestic product was generated by the tourism industry in (a) the south east, (b) the south west, (c) the west Midlands, (d) the east Midlands, (e) the north west, (f) the north east and (g) Wales in 2002–03. [135837]

Mr. Caborn: I have been asked to reply.

(a)-(f) Reliable estimates of tourism GDP are not currently available for the English Regions. There is one exception, namely the north east. The report Tourism Impact—A pilot study for the North East estimated tourism to account for 3.5 per cent. of the north-east's GDP in 2000.

Plans for a Tourism Satellite Account project for the English regions are currently being considered. This will develop methodologies to calculate tourism figures including GDP. It is being conducted on behalf of, and being jointly funded by, all Regional Development Agencies in England, and it is anticipated that it will report in late 2004.

(g) Currently there are no official data available on the contribution of the tourist industry to Welsh GDP. The National Assembly for Wales is involved in Tourism Satellite Account development work, including a UK development project which is being co-ordinated by the Department, and which will report in Summer 2004.

Economy (York)

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the annual per capita GDP for York unitary authority area was in each year since 1995. [135948]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Colin Mowl to Mr. Hugh Bayley, dated 10 November 2003:

The National Statistician has been asked to reply to your recent question on annual per capita GDP for York unitary authority. I am replying in his absence. (135948)

The latest available data on Gross Domestic Product (GDP) for York unitary authority were published by the Office for National Statistics (ONS) in April 2001 and relate to the period up to 1998 and the area of York on the "NUTS3" area classification.

ONS published estimates of Gross Value Added (GVA) for the larger "NUTS2" area of North Yorkshire, of which York is a part, for the period 1995 to 2001, in October 2003. Both sets of estimates are shown in the table.

GDP per head in York, and GVA per head in North Yorkshire

At current basic prices, £ per head of population

	GDP per head in York (NUTS3 area)	GVA per head North Yorkshire (NUTS2 area)
1995	11,750	*10,077
1997	13,742	11,192
1998	14,305	11,719
1999	—	12,119
2000	—	12,585
2001	—	13,031

Notes:

1. All estimates are provisional except where indicated with an asterisk.
2. Estimates of workplace based GVA allocate income to the region in which commuters work.
3. GVA estimates are calculated using a five-period moving average.
4. GDP = GVA + taxes on products—subsidies on products.

Estimates of NUTS3 GVA, including for York, for the period 1995–01 are planned for publication by ONS in December 2003.

ECOFIN

Bob Russell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the outcome was of the ECOFIN held on 7 October; and if he will place in the Library the Government's position on the issues discussed, including its voting record. [137633]

Ruth Kelly: The Chief Secretary to the Treasury wrote to the Chairmen of the European Scrutiny Committees in both Houses on 20 October informing them of the outcome of the 7 October ECOFIN. Copies of the Chief Secretary's letter were deposited in the House of Commons Library.

Bob Russell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the outcome was of the ECOFIN held on 12 and 13 September; and if he will place in the Library the Government's position on the issues discussed, including its voting record. [137634]

Ruth Kelly: The ECOFIN on 12–13 September was an informal meeting. No formal conclusions or notes were taken and there were no votes taken.

Employment (London)

Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many (a) private sector jobs broken down by (i) agricultural, (ii) manufacturing and (iii) service sector and (b) public sector jobs there were in London in each year since 1997. [135163]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Simon Hughes, dated 10 November 2003:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your recent question about jobs in London. (135163)

Statistics of private sector jobs in the United Kingdom were published in the September 2003 issue of Labour Market Trends. However on a consistent basis figures for London are not available.

The Workforce Jobs series can provide a regional breakdown of jobs by industry. Table 1 shows jobs in agriculture, manufacturing and service industries in London for the three months to December of each year between 1997 and 2002. These figures include both public and private sector jobs.

The Labour Force Survey is an alternative source of information on public sector employment, although the public sector classification of employment is based on respondents' own perceptions and is not necessarily consistent with the official classification of the organisations they work for.

Table 2 shows the numbers of people in employment in the public sector in London for the Autumn quarters (September to November) of each year from 1997 to 2002. The figures are not directly comparable with those in Table 1.

Housing

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what economic instruments he has available to him to moderate the rise in house prices; and if he will make a statement. [137572]

Ruth Kelly: Developments in the housing market are part of the overall assessment in setting economic policy. In particular, the 2003 Budget announced the establishment of the Barker and Miles reviews to consider issues on housing supply and finance respectively. Both reviews will submit interim reports at the time of the pre-Budget report.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to increase the resources available for the expansion of the housing market renewal initiatives, with particular reference to initiatives in west Yorkshire. [136413]

Keith Hill: I have been asked to reply.

I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given on 5 November 2003, Official Report, column 679W.

Insurance Ombudsman

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many cases were considered by the Insurance Ombudsman in the last year for which figures are available; how many cases were (a) upheld and (b) rejected; what the average time taken was to consider cases; and the average cost per case. [137198]

Ruth Kelly: The Financial Ombudsman Service tell me that for the year ending 31 December 1999, the last year for which figures are recorded against it as a separate scheme, the Insurance Bureau received a total of 7,061 cases.

The table shows a breakdown of the outcome of all cases resolved during the period:

Breakdown of cases—year ended 31 December 1999

Outcome of cases	Percentage
Resolved by mediation or conciliation	26
Resolved after investigation by an adjudicator	59
Of which:
In favour of the consumer	31
In favour of the firm	69
Resolved by final decision of an ombudsman	15
Of which:
In favour of the consumer	47
In favour of the firm	53

The average time taken to resolve cases in the year ending 31 December 1999 was 140 days.

The unit cost per case (calculated by dividing the total expenditure—less financing costs—by the number of cases closed) for the year ending 31 March 2000 was £730, the average unit cost per case across all of the predecessor schemes.

Financial Services Authority

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he is taking to improve the procedure for (a) consumers and (b) businesses wishing to make a complaint against the Financial Services Authority. [137424]

Ruth Kelly: The Financial Services Authority (FSA) is required to establish a scheme to handle complaints against it and to specify the procedures to be followed when complaints are made. The FSA is also required to appoint an independent person, whose appointment or dismissal requires Treasury approval, to investigate complaints.

The FSA is reviewing the effectiveness of its complaints scheme including the scheme's procedures. The FSA is required to consult publicly on any proposed alterations to the scheme. I welcome the FSA's review.

Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act

Brian White: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what statutory investigatory powers the Department has; which ones will be superseded by use of the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act 2000; and what plans he has for removing these legacy powers. [136116]

Ruth Kelly: The Revenue Departments (Inland Revenue and Customs and Excise) have a wide range of investigatory powers to access communications data, as defined by the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act, (RIPA) Pt 1, Chapter 2, Section 21(4), within the following legislation: Taxes Management Act 1970, Drugs Trafficking Act 1994, Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984, Customs and Excise Management Act 1979, VAT Act 1994, Criminal Justice (International Co-operation) Act 1990 and Proceeds Of Crime Act 2002. The Treasury does not itself have investigatory powers to access communications data.

When Part One Chapter Two of RIPA, 2000 is implemented, the Revenue Departments expect in line with Home Office policy to use only powers contained in that Act to access communications data. The powers currently used are not exclusive to communications data and the Revenue Departments do not propose to seek their repeal.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH

Iraq

Linda Perham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to prevent tensions arising between Sunni and Shia Muslims in Iraq. [136583]

Mr. Rammell: The Government and Coalition Provisional Authority officials have had regular meetings with representatives of many Iraqi political and religious groups, including the Sunni and Shia communities, to hear their views and to encourage dialogue between them. The Iraqi Governing Council contains representatives from both communities.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consultations took place between Her Majesty's Government and (a) the UN, (b) the United States and

(c) the Coalition Provisional Authority prior to the signing of Order 39 by Mr. Paul Bremer in Iraq; and if he will make a statement. [136578]

Mr. Straw: Order 39 of the Coalition Provisional Authority is the product of consultations between the Government and the Coalition Provisional Authority, relevant Departments of the US Administration, the United Nations Secretary General's Special Representative, the International Financial Institutions and the Iraqi Governing Council. Such consultations, called for under the terms of UNSCR 1483, are a necessary and normal part of the preparation of legislation by the coalition.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give the (a) name, (b) rank and (c) role of the senior British personnel employed by the Coalition Provisional Authority; and if he will make a statement. [136579]

Mr. Straw: The senior British personnel seconded to the Coalition Provisional Authority (CPA) are: Andy Bearpark, Director of Operations and Infrastructure (formerly United Nations Deputy Special Representative of the Secretary General and Representative of the EU/EC, Kosovo); Sir Hilary Synnott, Regional Coordinator, CPA South (formerly High Commissioner, Pakistan); John Tesh, Senior Advisor to the Iraqi Defence Support Agency (formerly Director Balkans, MOD); Jim Daniell, Senior Advisor to the Ministry of Interior (formerly Director of Crime Reduction and Policing Policy, Home Office); Deputy Chief Constable Douglas Brand, Senior Police Advisor to the Ministry of Interior; Deputy Chief Constable Steve White, Senior Advisor, Law and Order, CPA South; Brigadier John Riley, Deputy Commanding General, Coalition Military Advisory Training Team (CMATT); and Brigadier Bruce Brealey, Senior Military Advisor, CPA South.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the remit of the UK's special envoy to Iraq. [136580]

Mr. Straw: As the British Government's Special Representative in Iraq, Sir Jeremy Greenstock, is the senior British official there. In that independent capacity, he is working with, and in full support of, ambassador Bremer to facilitate a political process aimed at the swiftest possible establishment of a sovereign, stable, respresentative and internationally recognised Iraqi government; and to ensure the interim administration, assistance and reconstruction which are necessary for that goal.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs pursuant to his answer of 28 October 2003, Official Report, column 186W, on the Iraq Survey Group, what role the Government played in (a) setting up and (b) drawing up the mandate of the Iraq Survey Group; and if he will make a statement. [136813]

Mr. Straw: Government officials were consulted from the outset on the establishment of the Iraq Survey Group (ISG). We were able to respond positively to a request for the United Kingdom to provide the Group's second in command.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps the Government are taking, other than through the work of the Iraq Survey Group, to find weapons of mass destruction in Iraq; whether the Government's assessment of Iraq's weapons programmes differs from that contained in the report of the Group; and if he will make a statement. [136814]

Mr. Straw: The function of the Iraq Survey Group (ISG) is to conduct the post-conflict audit of Iraq's weapons of mass destruction programmes. All the UK's effort on the audit of Iraq's WMD programmes is directed into support for the ISG, including by providing personnel in the field in Iraq. All UK elements in the coalition support the search for WMD as required.

Since the work of the ISG is ongoing, it would not be appropriate for the Government to make a full assessment of the interim results presented so far.

Democratic Republic of Congo

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports his Department has received on whether Rwandan troops remain in the Democratic Republic of Congo. [136381]

Mr. Mullin: Since the withdrawal of the Rwandan Defence Force (RDF) from the Democratic Republic of Congo (DRC) in October 2002 we have received several unconfirmed reports from a variety of sources about the continued presence of RDF personnel in eastern DRC. The UN Mission in the DRC (MONUC) has investigated these reports but has found no compelling evidence to support them. The Rwandan government, with whom we have raised these allegations, have denied they have forces in the DRC.

Tom Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Moray (Angus Robertson) of 28 October 2003, Official Report, column 184W, on the Democratic Republic of Congo, what reports his Department has received of Rwandan (a) military, (b) financial and (c) political support for armed groups operating within the DRC; and if he will make a statement. [136401]

Mr. Mullin: Since the withdrawal of the Rwandan Defence Force (RDF) from the Democratic Republic of Congo (DRC) in October 2002 we have received several unconfirmed reports from a variety of sources alleging continued presence of RDF personnel in eastern DRC and military and financial support for some armed groups there. The UN Mission in the DRC (MONUC) has found no compelling evidence to support such reports. The Rassemblement Congolais pour la Democratic, RCD-G, were politically allied to Rwanda during the conflict in DRC which preceded the formation of the Transitional National Government in Kinshasa.

Tom Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what mechanisms are available to (a) the Government and (b) the EU to put pressure on Uganda and Rwanda to stop their involvement in the internal affairs of the Democratic Republic of Congo; and if he will make a statement. [136402]

Mr. Mullin: From the outset of the conflict we urged all parties to bring an immediate end to hostilities and called for an immediate ceasefire. These calls were incorporated in Security Council Resolutions, EU statements and the EU Common Position on the Democratic Republic of Congo (DRC). Ugandan and Rwandan Defence Force personnel were withdrawn from DRC in May/June 2003 and October 2002 respectively.

Tom Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what support (a) the Government and (b) the EU is providing to the Transitional National Government in Kinshasa to enable them effectively to (i) disarm and (ii) demobilise the (A) Interahamwe militia and (B) ex-Forces Armées Rwandaises. [136403]

Mr. Mullin: Disarmament, demobilisation, repatriation, resettlement and reintegration (DDRRR) of the ex-FAR/Interahamwe is crucial to the future peace and stability of the Democratic Republic of Congo (DRC) and the Great Lakes region and is one of the key tasks of the UN Mission in DRC (MONUC). The UK is contributing $25million over five years to the World Bank's Multi-Country Demobilisation and Reintegration Programme, as well as supporting a wide range of other DDRRR-related and peace-building projects in the DRC, and the Demobilisation and Reintegration Programme in Rwanda.

The UK also supports diplomatic efforts to improve relations between the Governments of DRC and Rwanda, which include looking at how they can work together on tackling the problem caused to both countries by the ex-FAR/Interahamwe. This will help move DDRRR forward.

European Constitution

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Government's policy on extensions of co-decision in the draft Constitutional Treaty in articles concerning the European Union's budget. [136538]

Mr. Straw: As we set out in our White Paper on the IGC, we will seek to ensure value for money for UK taxpayers by working to strengthen discipline and proper accountability in spending from the EU Budget. In this regard, we welcome the European Convention's proposals for a legally binding Multi-Annual Financial Framework and a streamlined annual budget procedure. We also welcome the consensus proposals by ECOFIN Ministers regarding the budgetary provisions of the draft constitutional treaty and we will support these proposals in the IGC.

Kenny Richey

Mr. Carmichael: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations his Department intends to make to (a) the Governor of Ohio, (b) the President of the United States and (c) other US authorities in the event that the appeal on behalf of Mr.Kenny Richey to the 6th Circuit Court of Appeals is unsuccessful. [136815]

Mr. Mullin: The Government are opposed to the death penalty in all circumstances. The Ohio authorities are well aware of this. The Governor of the State of Ohio has the sole authority to grant clemency in death penalty cases in Ohio. The President has no role in the legal proceedings in Ohio. We are in touch with Mr. Richey's lawyers both in the USA and the UK. as well as with Ohio state officials. We continue to monitor his case closely to determine what representations we might make on his behalf, and we will do all we properly can to try to prevent his execution.

Richard and Enid Eyeington

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance his Department has (a) offered and (b) given to the Government of Somaliland in their investigation into the murder of Richard and Enid Eyeington; and if he will make a statement. [134723]

Mr. Mullin: Our consular staff in London, Addis Ababa and Nairobi are providing all proper consular assistance to the Eyeington family after this outrageous attack. Staff are also in contact with SOS Kindersdorf International. Our thoughts and condolences are with the family.

We welcome the commitment of the Somaliland authorities to track down the killers. We cannot undertake any direct investigatory work abroad. However, we are discussing with the Somaliland authorities the possibility of a visit by Scotland Yard detectives to assist with the investigation.

St Helena

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to what extent the Government provide air surveillance of St.Helena's 200 mile exclusive fishing zone to determine the number of fishing vessels fishing (a) legally and (b) illegally in this zone. [136972]

Mr. Rammell: The Government do not provide any air surveillance of St. Helena's fishing zone. Both the Government and St.Helena are looking at other methods of control of illegal fishing, including the possibility of using satellite surveillance to identify individual vessels within the 200 mile zone.

United Nations

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the remarks by Ambassador Jeremy Greenstock on identifying terrorism. [135464]

Mr. MacShane: During his address to the UN General Assembly debate on 1 October 2001 our then Permanent Representative, Sir Jeremy Greenstock, remarked that "what looks, smells and kills like terrorism is terrorism". An internationally agreed definition of terrorism would be beneficial and we are working in the UN to achieve one. But so deep is the controversy surrounding certain groups, an internationally agreed definition does not seem possible in the short term. Sir Jeremy Greenstock's formulation was a means to unite UN members—at a vital time—around practical steps to counter the threat, rather than on debating the definition of terrorism.

NORTHERN IRELAND

British-Irish/North-South Ministerial Councils

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many meetings of the (a) British-Irish Council and (b) North-South Ministerial Council have taken place since they were established; and what additional meetings of each have taken place in other sectoral formats. [121089]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The total number of meetings is as follows:

Institution	Type of meeting	Number of meetings
British-Irish Council	Summit	4
	Sectoral	6
North/South Ministerial Council	Plenary	4
	Institutional	1

The following sectoral meetings have taken place:

Institution	Sector	Number of meetings
BIC	Drugs	2
	Environment	3
	Transport	1
NSMC	Agriculture	7
	Education	4
	Environment	6
	Food Safety and Health	5
	Foyle, Carlingford and Irish Lights Commission	8
	Inland Waterways	5
	Language	4
	Special EU Programmes	7
	Tourism	5
	Trade and Business Development	7
	Transport	2

Mr. Dodds: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many staff are employed in the secretariat of the (a) North-South Ministerial Council, (b) British-Irish Council and (c) Civic Forum; and what the costs are in respect of such staff. [100724]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The information is as follows:

(a) North-South Ministerial Council:

There are 25.5 whole time equivalent staff employed in the Joint Secretariat of the North-South Ministerial Council drawn from the Northern Ireland Civil Service and the Irish Civil Service. The North-South Ministerial Council cannot meet during suspension. The staff employed in the Joint Secretariat are currently engaged in providing administrative support associated with the care and maintenance of the North-South Implementation Bodies, and a range of other duties.

The costs in respect of the staff drawn from the Northern Ireland Civil Service for 2002–03 were £412,929 (latest available figure). This figure includes salaries, travel and subsistence costs.

(b) British-Irish Council:

The British and Irish Governments provide the Secretariat for the British-Irish Council in co-ordination with officials from each of the other members. In addition to servicing the work of the Council, the officials are involved in carrying out a range of other duties. It is therefore not possible to identify detailed staff numbers and costings in respect of those functions which relate to the Secretariat.

(c) Civic Forum:

Funding for the Civic Forum ceased during suspension. As a result staff in the Civic Forum Secretariat have been redeployed on other duties. At the latest date for which costs are available, the figure for the staff costs of Civic Forum Secretariat for 2002–03 were £158,526. This figure includes salaries and travel costs.

Euro

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much has been spent in each year by his Department in preparing for UK entry to the euro; how much his Department plans to spend on preparations for UK entry to the euro for each year from the current financial year up to and including 2005–06; and what estimates he has made of the total costs to his Department of changeover to the European Single Currency. [131590]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I refer the hon. Member to the response given by my hon. Friend the Financial Secretary to the Treasury, on 14 October 2003, Official Report, column 142W.

Museums and Galleries

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the review of Museums and Galleries Northern Ireland's business management strategy. [137670]

Angela Smith: A report on the way the Museums and Galleries of Northern Ireland (MAGNI) conducts its business is currently with the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure for consideration. It would not be appropriate for me to make a statement about the outcome of the Review at this time.

Pensioners

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the average time taken in the last 12 months was to process assessments on low income pensioners' entitlements to an alternative to coal fired heating; and what plans he has to introduce targets to speed up the assessment process. [137663]

Mr. Spellar: The Warm Homes Plus Scheme provides the free installation of an oil or natural gas central heating system for low-income people over 60 years of age, living in owner occupied or privately rented accommodation, and who are entitled to certain passport benefits. In the last 12 months, the assessment process (from initial referral, to survey of the property) has taken, on average 31 days. This process is continually kept under review to ensure the optimum response time to the large number of applications for assistance from the Scheme.

The Housing Executive's heating replacement programme for its housing stock does not involve an assessment of the tenants' entitlements; work is carried out on the basis of the age and condition of the appliance which is to be upgraded.

Performance Targets

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the total cost was of (a) setting, (b) monitoring and (c) measuring the performance targets for his Department in 2002–03; and how many and what grades of civil servants monitor these targets. [137954]

Jane Kennedy: Performance targets for the department were agreed as part of Spending Review 2002. The monitoring and measurement of PS A targets forms part of departmental performance management. Performance management is an integral part of the day to day running of the department, and as such it is not possible to separate the specific costs out. The monitoring of progress towards and performance against, the department's PS A targets is undertaken by a wide variety of staff at all levels of the organisation.

Scottish Television

Mr. Gregory Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will take steps to introduce more Scottish television in Northern Ireland on the same basis as his commitment to help introduce greater availability in Northern Ireland of Irish language programmes. [134270]

Estelle Morris: I have been asked to reply.

The BBC Scotland television service and ITV Scottish, Grampian and Border services are already available to those consumers in Northern Ireland with digital satellite receiving equipment. The extension of Scottish region television services to other areas in the UK is not possible on terrestrial television because of technical and licensing constraints.

DEFENCE

Allenby Private Finance Initiative Project

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what requirements he proposes setting for the energy efficiency standards of homes to be constructed within the Allenby Private Finance Initiative project; and what penalties will be incurred by contractors should there be non-compliance with these standards. [136985]

Mr. Caplin: Project Allenby/Connaught will deliver major redevelopment of the Army estate on Salisbury Plain and at Aldershot, and includes the provision of around 11,000 single en-suite bed spaces for personnel living in barracks. These bed spaces will be provided through new and converted accommodation. The contract requires assessment of this accommodation in accordance with the Building Research Establishment's Environmental Assessment Method (BREEAM). This system scores a building against a wide range of sustainability criteria, including those relating to energy efficiency and results in a BREEAM grading for the building. The contract will require the highest grading, 'Excellent', for new accommodation and the next highest grading, 'Very Good', for the converted buildings. If these grades are not achieved the contractor's monthly payments for the accommodation will be abated throughout the life of the contract.

Armed Forces

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many women officers there are in the (a) Army, (b) Navy and (c) Royal Air Force, broken down by rank; [137340]

(2) how many women other ranks there are in the (a) Army, (b) Navy and (c) Royal Air Force, broken down by rank. [137341]

Mr. Caplin: I refer my hon. Friend to the Tri-Service Publication 9 'UK Regular Forces Rank Structure', a copy of which is held in the Library of the House.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last published the armed forces monthly manning state; and when it will next be published. [137729]

Mr. Caplin: I refer the hon. Member to Tri-Service Publication (TSP) 1: "UK Regular Forces Strengths and Changes", and Tri-Service Publication (TSP) 3: "UK Armed Forces Strengths and Requirements".

These are both available in the House of Commons Library and are updated on a monthly basis.

TSP 1 and 3 for 1 September 2003 were published on 10 October 2003. The 1 October 2003 issues are due for publication between 6 and 20 November 2003.

Breathalyser Tests

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what breathalyser equipment is issued to military police in Scotland; when the adequacy of this equipment was last reviewed; and if he will make a statement. [135799]

Mr. Caplin: Breathalyser equipment is not issued to the Service police in Scotland.

Chinook

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to relocate the Chinook helicopter fleet away from RAF Odiham. [137003]

Mr. Ingram: There are currently no plans to relocate the Chinook helicopter fleet away from RAF Odiham.

Colombia

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Portsmouth, South (Mr. Hancock) of 16 October 2003, Official Report, column 322W, what the mechanisms are for checking that UK military units are not implicated in human rights violations, internal repression or collusion with paramilitary organisations. [136306]

Mr. Ingram: The Government use the best information available at the time to assure themselves that Colombian military units benefiting from United Kingdom assistance are not engaged in activities that violate human rights, in internal repression or in collusion with paramilitary organisations.

Commonwealth Recruits

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people were recruited from Commonwealth countries into each of the three services in each year since 1999; and if he will make a statement. [136733]

Mr. Caplin: For the last five years, the intake of personnel from Commonwealth countries (excluding United Kingdom and UK dependent territories) into the Army was as follows:

Financial year	Number
1999–2000	445
2000–01	715
2001–02	1,115
2002–03	1,960

Figures for the Naval Service and Royal Air Force are not available, as this information is not held centrally.

Conventional Weapons

Norman Lamb: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what his Department's aims are at the Convention on Conventional Weapons negotiations in November; and if he will make a statement; [135859]

(2) whether his Department's representatives at the Convention on Conventional Weapons negotiations in November will seek agreement on a mandate for future negotiations on cluster munitions. [135860]

Mr. Ingram: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 4 November 2003, Official Report, columns 541–42W, by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office.

Dean Hill SSSI

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions Defence Estates has had with (a) the Wiltshire Wildlife Trust and (b) the Hampshire Wildlife Trust about the future of the Dean Hill site of special scientific interest. [137462]

Mr. Caplin: English Nature have nominated the Hampshire and Isle of Wight Wildlife Trust as a potential purchaser of land of high conservation value, including that part of Defence Munitions Dean Hill, which falls within the Brickworth Down and Dean Hill SSSI. Ministry of Defence officials have therefore had preliminary discussions with it and not with the Wiltshire Wildlife Trust.

Defence Budget (Wales)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much of the defence budget was spent in Wales in the most recent year for which figures are available (a) in actual terms and (b) as a percentage of the total defence budget; and if he will make a statement. [137310]

Mr. Ingram: This information is not held centrally in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Defence Export Contracts

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many defence export contracts have been approved to each of the member states of the Economic Community of Central African States in each year since 1997; and if he will make a statement. [136636]

Mr. Ingram: Government approval is not required for defence export contracts.

The Government do, however, control the transfer overseas of defence related goods through the export licensing system. Licence applications by country are reported in the Government's Annual Report on Strategic Export Controls. Reports covering the period from May 1997 to December 2002 are available in the Library of the House.

Defence Fire Service

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received on the future of the Defence Fire Service; and if he will make a statement. [136729]

Mr. Ingram: I have received a number of representations about the future of the Defence Fire Service from Members of Parliament, trade unions and members of the Defence Fire Service. These have been in the form of an Adjournment debate, an early-day motion, parliamentary questions, letters and face to face meetings. The future of the Defence Fire Service will be determined by the outcome of the Airfield Support Services Project and the recommendations of Fire Study 2000.

Departmental Budget

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what his Department's budget was in the (a) 1998–99 financial year and (b) 2003–04 financial year at 1998–99 prices, excluding expenditure from the contingency reserve. [136740]

Mr. Ingram: The figure for 1998–99 is £22,240 million. That is a cash figure as the Department was controlled on a cash basis until the end of financial year 2000–01.

From 2001–02 onwards, Resource Accounting and Budgeting became the basis for planning and controlling public expenditure. From that year the Defence budget has been set on a Resource basis, which includes accrued costs rather than cash. The Budget figures for 2003–04 are therefore set on a completely different basis to those for 1998–99, and the two sets of figures are not directly comparable. The 2003–04 Budget consists of two separate elements, a Net Resource Cost budget of £31,903 billion and a Capital budget of £6,128 billion.

These figures are at current prices as there is little merit in providing them at the 1998–99 price base.

Figures for both years are exclusive of Armed Forces Pension Scheme amounts.

Departmental Energy Use

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much (a) electricity and (b) other energy his Department has used in each year since 1997 (i) in total and (ii) per square metre; what the projected use is for each of the following years for which forecasts are made; what plans he has to reduce usage; and if he will make a statement. [135050]

Mr. Caplin: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him on 3 November 2003, Official Report, columns 403–08W, by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State.

The current cross-government target is an on-going one per cent. per annum reduction in greenhouse gas emissions from buildings, expressed in terms of carbon saving. Since the target was introduced in 2000, the MOD has exceeded the target year on year and I expect this trend to continue. New targets for energy use on the Government Estate are being developed under the Framework for Sustainable Development on the Government Estate. Once the new targets have been agreed, the MOD will publish an energy strategy outlining how they will be met.

Medical Discharges

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many female members of the (a) Army, (b) Royal Navy and (c) Royal Air Force received early discharges on medical grounds in each of the last five years; how many complained of sexual harassment or assault; what (i) pension and (ii) benefit they received on discharge; and if he will make a statement. [136514]

Mr. Caplin: Medical discharges for female members of the armed forces (both trained and untrained United Kingdom regular personnel) in each of the last five years are as follows:

Female medical discharges in the armed forces, 1998–2002

	Navy	Army	RAF	Total
1998	39	222	20	281
1999	52	259	35	346
2000	61	183	36	280
2001	52	160	29	241
2002[1]	56	130	28	214

[1] Figures for 2002 have not yet been finalised and may be subject to alteration.

Information on whether any of the individuals complained of sexual harassment or assault is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Members of the armed forces who are medically discharged after at least two years' Service for reasons not attributable to their Service are awarded a Service Invaliding Pension (SIP) and a lump sum payment. Where the Veterans Agency accept the reasons for discharge as attributable to Service and pay a War Disablement Pension (WDP) under the War Pensions Scheme, the Armed Forces Pension Scheme (AFPS) separately considers whether the injury or condition is due to Service. If this is accepted by the AFPS, the SIP is replaced by an enhanced Service Attributable Pension and an attributable lump sum is paid. These benefits are paid in addition to the Veterans Agency's WDP.

Expenditure

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the adjustments to in-year expenditure to remain within his Department's expenditure limits for the current year, showing in each case (a) what action is being taken and (b) what savings will be made. [137724]

Mr. Ingram: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence made clear in the debate on Defence Policy on 16 October 2003, Departments have to deal with fluctuating financial pressures while living within their budgets. This year the Ministry of Defence is facing, among other factors, better than expected recruiting and adverse exchange rate movements. The introduction this year of full Resource Accounting and Budgeting has also raised new issues. We are therefore making a range of mostly relatively small adjustments to previous expenditure plans across the Ministry of Defence's budgetary areas. These include reduction in training activities where this is not essential to sustain operations, and re-profiling some spending on new equipments and equipment support. These adjustments do not affect our commitment to operations in Iraq and elsewhere, the net additional costs of which are funded separately.

Halliburton (Contracts)

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the contracts (a) awarded to and (b) carried out by Halliburton since 1997, stating in each case (i) the nature of the work, (ii) the value of the contract and (iii) the duration; and if he will make a statement. [136576]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 6 November 2003]: The Ministry of Defence's business dealings have been with the Halliburton Brown and Root part of this company. Excluding a low value contract for the short-term lease of equipment, MOD has placed the following direct contract since 1997:

Contract No. CSVHC/04

Nature of Work: Provision of Heavy Equipment Transporter (HET) Services.

Duration: 2001 to 2021

Value: £290 million

In addition, the Halliburton company also performs a substantial amount of work for the MOD under joint venture arrangements, most notable are the operation of the Devonport Royal Dockyard and the multi activity contract at RAF Valley, Anglesey in North Wales.

Humanitarian Emergencies

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what programmes his Department is (a) running and (b) supporting aimed at (i) introducing the humanitarian community to the military and security technology available and (ii) familiarising the technology community with the scope and problems of those dealing with complex humanitarian emergencies and international refugee crises; how long these programmes have been running; and if he will make a statement. [136665]

Mr. Ingram: The Ministry of Defence research and technology programme is geared towards providing the UK armed forces with battle-winning technology. A number of technologies developed under the auspices of this programme may have humanitarian applications, though the development of the technology for humanitarian purposes would fall to the Department for International Development (DfID).

Where possible the MOD aims to make the results of its research available to industry, through technology transfer and technology spin-out, where commercial development of the technology is best carried out.

International Military Services

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how long the arbitration case involving International Military Services has been going on; and when he expects it to reach a conclusion. [137369]

Mr. Hoon: Proceedings in the arbitration case involving International Military Services Ltd. commenced in late 1992 and, depending on the appeals process, may not be concluded for about four years.

Iraq

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what amendments he will make to the Strategic Defence Review following operations in Iraq. [136768]

Mr. Hoon: The White Paper that I intend to publish later this year will build on the Strategic Defence Review (and the New Chapter to it published in 2002) and provide an updated statement of defence policy in light of operational experience since 1998.

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how regularly he holds discussions with the US Defense Secretary on the activities of coalition forces in Iraq. [132126]

Mr. Hoon: I am in frequent contact with the US Defense Secretary on Iraq and other matters.

Military Exercises

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the military exercises which have been cancelled in this financial year, setting out the (a) date, (b) purpose and (c) reason for cancellation in each case. [137728]

Mr. Ingram: The Ministry of Defence's Defence Exercise Programme lists some 350 planned exercises each year. These exercises range from smaller scale unit exercises, through to larger events involving joint inter-Service and/or international involvement. Inevitably, a larger number of those planned exercises have been cancelled so far this year than is usual: 72 per cent. owing to increased level operational activity, predominantly Operations Telic and Fresco, and 11 per cent. owing to decisions by host nations (other than the UK). A further 11 per cent. have been cancelled after being subsumed into other exercises or re-scheduled for the next financial year.

Information on tactical training exercises organised by the Front Line Commands, the Permanent Joint HQ, the Defence Logistic Organisation HQ and by individual units is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Military Exports

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the highest value deals of military exports from the UK were that were concluded and delivered in 2003; what the (a) manufacturer, (b) name of the export company, (c) official buyer and (d) equipment involved was in each case; whether any of the deals included offset arrangements; and if he will make a statement. [136307]

Mr. Ingram: The highest value contract for military exports from the United Kingdom signed so far this year is in respect of the sale of Typhoon to Austria. The aircraft is manufactured by the Eurofighter GmbH consortium, with the UK element contributed by BAE Systems. No delivery has yet taken place under the contract. Offset will be included.

The highest value delivery made this year of which the Ministry of Defence is aware, against a contract signed in the same year, is the Government-to-Government sale to Chile of the former HMS Sheffield. Regeneration work was undertaken by DML Plymouth on the ship built by Swan-Hunter Shipbuilders Ltd. No offset is associated with the contract.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list ministerial visits to Chorley in each of the last five years. [135808]

Mr. Caplin: From available information, Ministers have made no visits on official business to Chorley.

Munitions

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence from which countries munitions have been procured in the last five years, broken down by amounts paid. [135807]

Mr. Ingram: During Financial Year's 1998–99 to 2002–03 inclusive, munitions have been procured from the following countries at the values shown. It should be noted that complete data for Financial Year 1998–99 is not available. Consequently, these figures do not show the complete spend on munitions during the period.

Country	£ million
Austria	2.834
Belgium	0.979
Canada	6.463
Germany	3.382
Israel	6.802
Italy	4.594
Netherlands	4.228
Singapore	0.431
Spain	0.353
South Africa	1.408
Sweden	300.949
Switzerland	2.069
Norway	3.287
United Kingdom	2,476.321
United States	530.401

Northern Ireland

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the future size of the British Army garrison in Northern Ireland; and what plans he has to reduce the number of army personnel in Northern Ireland. [135394]

Mr. Ingram: As envisioned in the Joint Declaration, military force levels in Northern Ireland are dependent on the evolving, enabling security environment.

Pension/Compensation Schemes

Mr. Djanogly: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the level of in-Service death benefits is in the new Armed Forces (a) Pension Scheme and (b) Compensation Scheme. [135823]

Mr. Caplin: For those members that choose to join the new Armed Forces Pension Scheme (AFPS) and for new entrants after the date of its initial implementation, in-Service death benefits will be:

a death-in-service lump sum of four times pensionable pay to member's nominee;

a widow(er)'s (including partners in a substantial relationship) non-attributable pension normally worth 62.5 per cent. of the member's pension and paid for life, irrespective of marriage or cohabitation; and all dependent children will be eligible for a non-attributable pension below the age of 17 or until they complete full-time education.

For all in-Service deaths that are due to Service and caused after the date of the introduction of the new Compensation Scheme, benefits will be:

a Guaranteed Income Stream (GIS) for widow(er)s (including partners in a substantial relationship) payable for life and equating to 60 per cent. of the GIS calculation for the deceased, abated by 75 per cent. of any non-attributable pension (to avoid double compensation);

a GIS will also be payable to dependent children (abated by non-attributable pension); and a bereavement grant (currently set at £20,000) will be paid to those whose partner remained in the current AFPS, as they would not benefit from the improved death in-Service benefit under the new AFPS. However, there will be a bereavement grant guarantee set so that if three times pensionable pay and £20,000 is greater than the new AFPS death in-Service lump sum, the Compensation Scheme will pay the balance.

A non-attributable pension is the pension paid where a death is not caused or significantly hastened by Service.

Suez Canal Zone Medals

Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Suez Canal Zone medals will have been issued in time for this year's Remembrance Day services; how many applications have been made for the medal; when he expects that all will have been issued; and if he will make a statement. [135412]

Mr. Caplin: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 3 November 2003, Official Report, column 417W, to my hon. Friend the Member for Crawley (Ms Moffatt).

It is not possible to estimate when all the medals will have been issued because this will depend entirely on when veterans and their families decide to apply.

Territorial Army

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Territorial Army troops have refused to serve after being called up since 1 January; and if he will make a statement. [136608]

Mr. Ingram: No members of the Territorial Army have refused to serve after being called up since 1 January.

Members of the TA can appeal against their call-out order and the Reserve Forces Act 1996 provides the right to both Reservists and employers to seek revocation, exemption from or deferral of mobilisation. Where appeals have not been approved, no member of the TA has refused to serve.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations from employers he has received expressing concern about how often members of the Territorial Army and the Reserves are called up for military service; and what reports he has received of employers refusing to employ such people. [137725]

Mr. Caplin: To date, the Ministry of Defence has only received one representation from an employer expressing concern about how often members of the Reserve Forces are called-out for military service.

Our experience of Operation Telic has shown that employers are very supportive of the Reserve Forces. Only a very small number of employers have stated that they would not wish to employ reservists. Indeed, as a result of the call-out of reservists to support Operation Telic, the Supporting Britain's Reservists and Employers campaign team continues to be contacted by employers who wish to register as a supportive employer.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) where each unit of each (a) regular and (b) Territorial Army Royal Engineer Regiment is (i) based and (ii) deployed; and if he will make a statement; [136637]

(2) if he will list the units deployed in Iraq of each (a) regular and (b) Territorial Army Royal Engineer Regiment; where in Iraq they are deployed; what their mission goals are; and if he will make a statement. [136638]

Mr. Caplin: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Unmanned Air Vehicles

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment his Department has made of the future role of unmanned air vehicles in the UK armed forces; and if he will make a statement. [136938]

Mr. Ingram: We currently expect unmanned aerial vehicles (UAVs) to contribute significantly to future military capability in a number of areas. The WATCHKEEPER programme is on track to deliver a tactical UAV capability from 2006 which will provide UK commanders with accurate, timely and high quality imagery and support Network Enabled Capability. To explore the wider operational utility of UAV systems in the joint battlespace, we have established the Joint UAV Experimentation Programme (JUEP). Under the Future Offensive Air System programme, which is currently in its Concept Phase, we expect to look at a potential mix of platforms, including Unmanned Combat Aerial Vehicles (UCAVs), to meet our future strike capability from around the end of the next decade.

War Widows

Andrew Selous: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the cost has been for each year since 1997 of widows' pensions to war widows who became widows in (a) the Second World War, (b) from 1946 to 1973 and (c) since 1973. [136822]

Mr. Caplin: The information is not available in the format requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

A range of statistics on War Pensions, including an analysis by age of the numbers of widows receiving war widows' pensions, is published quarterly. A copy is available in the Library of the House.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Afghanistan

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment his Department has made of the security of people in Afghanistan; in what ways it is proposed that the rebels' opposition will be prevented; and if he will make a statement. [136557]

Hilary Benn: The security situation in Afghanistan continues to be a concern for both Afghans and the international community. There has been an increase in activity from Taliban insurgents in large areas of the south and east of the country, activity which the international coalition forces continue to counter.

On 13 October 2003, the United Nations Security Council passed Resolution 1510, authorising expansion, as resources permit, of the ISAF beyond Kabul. Additionally, there is an active programme of Security Sector Reform, including a new Disarmament, Demobilisation and Reintegration (DDR) Programme, which commenced with a pilot project in Kunduz on 24 October. Coupled with the four existing Provincial Reconstruction Teams (PRTs), and the additional four or five due to deploy in the coming months, these measures form a coherent package by which the international community is helping the Afghan people secure a stable and peaceful country for themselves.

Africa Forest Law Enforcement and Governance Process Conference, Cameroon

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if he will make a statement on the African Forest Law Enforcement and Government Ministerial Conference recently held in Cameroon. [136632]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: I represented the UK at the Africa Forest Law Enforcement and Governance Conference which took place in Yaounde, Cameroon, from 13 to 16 October. Officials from DFID, Defra and the FCO also attended. The UK private sector and British NGOs sent strong delegations.

The purpose of the Conference was to build commitment to improve governance and strengthen law enforcement capacity. There was a particular focus on illegal logging, associated trade and bushmeat.

Ministers from 40 countries adopted a Declaration that commits governments from Africa and those of trading and development partners to work together to address these problems. The Declaration contains a series of indicative actions to be taken forward by these governments together with the private sector and NGOs. Independent monitoring of forestry operations and greater transparency in the allocation of forest resources were identified as critical elements for improving governance and countering corruption. Participants concerned with wildlife and the trade in bushmeat were pleased with the attention given to this subject and acknowledged that it cannot be disassociated from wider concerns about the livelihoods of poor people.

There was considerable interest in the EU Action Plan on forest law enforcement, governance and trade that the European Council endorsed on 13 October. Several African countries are keen to discuss the development of voluntary partnership agreements with the EU. Officials from my Department, Defra and FCO will now take this up with colleagues from the EC, other Member States and the African countries concerned.

Child/Maternal Mortality

Mr. Best: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what progress has been made in meeting the Millennium Development Goal targets for reducing (a) child and (b) maternal mortality. [137657]

Hilary Benn: Assuming progress continues at the same rate as over the 1990s, the Millennium Development Goals 2015 targets of reductions in child and maternal mortality will not be met.

Child mortality is declining but on current trends will have fallen by only one quarter by 2015, far short of the two thirds reduction aimed for. There is considerable regional variation. Latin America is expected to meet the target but there has been much slower progress in south Asia and the Arab states, and virtually no progress in sub-Saharan Africa.

Maternal mortality is difficult to measure but the available data suggest that little progress has been made in reducing mortality in recent years, and show an increase in maternal mortality in parts of Africa. In developing countries the coverage of the proxy indicator, the proportion of women who give birth with the assistance of a skilled health worker, increased from 42 per cent. in 1990 to 52 per cent. by 2000. Coverage in east and south east Asia, and northern Africa rose significantly. Coverage is highest in Latin America, at 85 per cent. In contrast, there was little progress in sub-Saharan Africa.

DFID has put the achievement of the MDGs at the heart of its work, and is working with its partners to do all it can to meet these targets. The MDG targets for child and maternal mortality in Africa and Asia form part of DFIDs Public Service Agreement. Supporting progress in sub-Saharan Africa is a particular priority for DFID.

A more comprehensive assessment of progress towards the goals is provided in the UN Secretary General's 2003 report on the implementation of the Millennium Declaration: http://ods-dds-ny.un.org/doc/UNDOC/GEN/N03/481/57/PDF/N0348157. pdf?OpenElement.

Conventional Weapons

Norman Lamb: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what his Department's aims are at the Convention on Conventional Weapons negotiations in November; and if he will make a statement. [135851]

Hilary Benn: I refer the hon. Member the answer given by my right hon. friend the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office on 4 November 2003, Official Report, column 542W.

Norman Lamb: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development whether his Department's representative at the Convention on Conventional Weapons negotiations in November will seek agreement on a mandate for future negotiations on cluster munitions. [135852]

Hilary Benn: I refer the hon. Member the answer given by my right hon. friend the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office on 4 November 2003, Official Report, column 542W.

Deforestation

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what steps he is taking to assist the Brazilian Government in preventing deforestation in the Amazon rainforest. [136663]

Hilary Benn: DFID is an active member of the G7 Pilot Programme for the Conservation of the Brazilian Rain Forests (a joint undertaking of the Brazilian Government, Brazil's civil society and the international community). DFID's currently is helping to:

strengthen the capacity of the indigenous movement to protect themselves from illegal logging through land demarcation and support to pursue sustainable livelihoods; enhance the sustainable management of the Amazon Floodplains by local communicates and government; enhance the Ministry of Environment's research on how to improve the economic and regulatory environment for sustainable forestry management; design the transition of this Pilot Phase to a Programme that is more mainstreamed and rooted in Brazilian policies for the region.

The total contribution of DFID to the Pilot Programme for the Conservation of the Amazon Rain Forest is £16 million out of a total budget of US$410 million for the Pilot Programme.

DFID also supports other activities outside the G7 Programme including:

strengthening the ability of the Brazilian Agriculture Research Institute (EMBRAPA) to examine ways of improving sustainable forest management relevant to forest users and to improve the understanding by small farmers and disadvantaged groups of the benefits of sustainable forestry management; and giving a greater emphasis to forestry management for small scale farmers in agricultural extension courses provided by the Federal Agricultural University of Para.

Many of these programmes are scheduled to end in 2004–05. The future of those planned to continue into 2005–06 will have to be reviewed in the light of the reallocation of DFID resources within middle income countries for that year.

Democratic Republic of Congo

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions have been held with the Governments of (a) Rwanda and (b) Uganda concerning their involvement in the future of the Democratic Republic of Congo. [136344]

Hilary Benn: We have maintained a close dialogue with the Governments of Rwanda and Uganda, and indeed with the former government and now the Transitional National Government (TNG) in Kinshasa, on the need for good neighbourly relations as the basis for national and regional stability. We continue to do so.

Both Rwanda and Uganda have taken positive steps recently to normalise their relations with the TNG in DRC, including mutual ministerial visits and the signing in New York on 25 September 2003 of a Good Neighbourly Pact, which included commitments that all support for armed groups should end and that there should be no illegal exploitation of natural resources of the DRC.

Ghana

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what progress has been made with the privatisation of water supplies in Ghana. [136204]

Hilary Benn: I refer the hon. Lady to my answer of 3 June 2003 Official Report column. 270W. The Government of Ghana has made no further announcement in respect of private sector participation in urban water supply.

Guinea Bissau

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if he will make a statement on the recent flooding in the eastern regions of Guinea Bissau. [136528]

Hilary Benn: I understand that wide-spread flooding caused by very heavy rainfall (the wettest rainy season in the Sahel for 30 years) has destroyed vast areas of cropland in the east of Guinea-Bissau. Up to 80 per cent. of Guinea-Bissau's peasant farmers may have been affected. Large areas of rice planted along the banks of the Geba river have been destroyed. Elsewhere in Bafata and Gabu provinces fields of maize and beans were rotting underwater. The Guinea-Bissau Agricultural Minister is quoted as saying that an extra 60,000 tonnes of rice will need to be imported to make up for the expected shortfall in local food production.

A team from the UN World Food Programme (WFP) is evaluating the situation and preparing a response.

Iraq

Linda Perham: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans the Government have to aid the rebuilding of the Iraqi education system. [136589]

Hilary Benn: DFID is funding two education advisers who will assist the Coalition Provisional Authority southern regional office and three governorates assess educational needs in the south of the country, and to plan an appropriate response. DFID has also supported the recovery of the education system through assistance to UNICEF and the NGO Muslim Hands.

DFID is currently preparing an interim Country Assistance Plan. As part of this process we will explore how best to help the Iraqis meet their human development needs, taking into account the recent sector assessments prepared by the UN/World bank and the results of the donor conference in Madrid.

Kosovo

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many (a) casualties and (b) injuries in Kosovo were directly attributable to (i) mines, (ii) de-mining activities and (iii) cluster bomb submunition in each year since 1999; and if he will make a statement. [131794]

Mr. MacShane: I have been asked to reply.

The Government do not keep detailed records of this type of information. The figures in the following table have been provided by the UN Mine Action Co-ordination Centre (UNMACC) in Kosovo.

The UK was the first country to have de-miners on the ground in Kosovo. Their de-mining activities have included clearance of unexploded munitions such as cluster bomb submunitions. The Government have spent over £10 million on de-mining activities in the Balkans, over £5 million of which was spent in 1999–2000 on de-mining in Kosovo.

	Mines		Unexploded ordnance		Cluster bomb submunitions		Totals
	Killed	Injured	Killed	Injured	Killed	Injured	Killed	Injured
June 1999-December 2000	35	227	6	10	51	106		[1]476
2001	2	3	4	10	3	0	9	13
2002	0	1	5	7	3	0	8	8
2003 (1 January -30 September	0	3	1	9	2	0	3	12

[1] Collection of statistics began in 2000 and was backdated to June 1999. It is known that 101 persons were killed and 375 were injured between June 1999 and December 2000. However, of these 476 deaths or injuries, only 435, shown in the appropriate columns, can be attributed with certainty to a particular type of weapon, the remaining 13 deaths and 28 injuries having been caused by an unknown type. One deminer was killed by a cluster bomb submunition and 36 injured by mines between 1999 and 2001.

Lesotho

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment he has made of the impact of the current drought on the humanitarian situation in Lesotho; and if he will make a statement. [136526]

Hilary Benn: The 2003 winter cropping season has been seriously affected by drought. It is clear that vulnerable groups will continue to require humanitarian assistance. DFID will continue to work closely with the World Food Programme and other donors, and has already committed £3 million in assistance for feeding programmes and for agricultural recovery in Lesotho.

St. Helena

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State, Department for International Development, when he intends to re-negotiate the present three-year aid package for St. Helena; and when the last three-year package expired. [137226]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: Officials will visit St. Helena for this purpose early next year. The previous three-year aid package, which provided St. Helena with some £29 million, expired last March. This is being supplemented in the current (2003–04) Financial Year with further provision of over £10.5 million.

Mr. Anthony Steen: To ask the Secretary of State, Department for International Development, if he will make a statement on the progress with building the airport in St. Helena. [137228]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: Evaluation is continuing of the four expressions of interest, in response to the international invitation issued in April of this year, concerning possible private sector participation and potential investment in developing air access for St. Helena. I refer the hon. Gentleman to my written statement to this House on 16 September 2003, Official Report, column 43WS.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans he has to make an official visit to St. Helena in 2004; and when a Minister from his Department last made a visit. [136974]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: I have no plans at present to visit St. Helena, and St. Helena has never had a visit by a DFID Minister. But DFID staff visit regularly; and official visitors from the island are always welcome at DFID. For example, in addition to several calls this year by officials from St. Helena, I have held two meetings since June with representatives of St. Helena's Executive and Legislative Councils. I am expecting to host another such meeting next month, when our colleagues from the Overseas Territories gather in London for the annual Overseas Territories Consultative Council.

Sudan

Linda Perham: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans he has to help the refugees of the civil war in Sudan who have fled into Chad. [136582]

Hilary Benn: I refer my hon. Friend to my answer of 23 October 2003 to the hon. Member for Moray (Angus Robertson), Official Report, column 691W.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions (a) he, (b) members of his Department and (c) other representatives of the United Kingdom government have had with non-governmental organisations since the beginning of October concerning the humanitarian situation in West Darfur in Sudan; and if he will make a statement. [136642]

Hilary Benn: The British Embassy in Khartoum, which includes DFID staff, continues to liaise closely with non-governmental organisations operational throughout Darfur—including those in West Darfur, such as Medair. DFID staff in London have also been in contact with non-governmental organisations working in this region.

The situation in West Darfur, as across the region, is of paramount concern to the international community.

We continue to support the work of key humanitarian agencies throughout the region—including UN, Red Cross and NGOs—and to raise the issue of access and security for humanitarian workers throughout Darfur with the Government of Sudan.

WTO Ministerial Conference

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development when he will reply to the letter dated 6 October from the Member for Banff and Buchan regarding the World Trade Organisation Ministerial Conference. [137581]

Hilary Benn: Unfortunately, the Department has no record of having received this letter of 6 October. If the hon. Member would kindly re-send the letter I will ensure that he receives a prompt reply.

Zimbabwe

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if he will make a statement on the (a) effectiveness and (b) outcomes of the additional fund of emergency support to Zimbabwe announced on 23 October 2003. [136560]

Hilary Benn: On 23 October DFID pledged a further £5 million for food assistance in Zimbabwe, through the World Food Programme (WFP), and £1.88 million for essential childhood vaccines, through UNICEF. These pledges bring British Government assistance in addressing the current humanitarian crisis in Zimbabwe to over £62 million since September 2001.

I am confident that our financial assistance is being used effectively. The WFP has agreed a Memorandum of Understanding with the Government of Zimbabwe which clearly sets out the humanitarian principles governing the identification of beneficiaries for WFP's ongoing emergency operation. Distribution procedures have been agreed with Government which give WFP's implementing partners (NGOs) a clear role in ensuring that donor-funded food aid reaches only those for whom it is intended. UNICEF has similarly robust procedures for ensuring that vaccines are used effectively for protecting vulnerable children from potentially fatal diseases, including tuberculosis, pertussis (whooping cough), tetanus, diphtheria, polio and measles.

The DFID team based in Zimbabwe is closely monitoring both the effectiveness and the outcomes of UK humanitarian support. The UK's recent contribution to WFP includes a provision of £0.5 million to strengthen WFP's monitoring systems for donor-funded food distribution. This will enable WFP to produce comprehensive monthly reports on the processes and the impact of all food aid distributed by them, as well as providing a basis upon which to improve the design of future operations.

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what the outcome was of the contract awarded to Oxford Policy Management Ltd. for a Zimbabwe Trade Policy Capacity Project; and what action he took to ensure that none of this money went to the Government of Zimbabwe and its officials. [137732]

Hilary Benn: The contract was terminated in July 2001 due to the political situation in Zimbabwe. The total spend was £10,100, paid to Oxford Policy Management Ltd.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Digital Television

10. Mr. Carmichael: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions her Department has had with the Treasury concerning the free provision of the new viewing card to former Solus card users aged 75 and over. [137032]

Tessa Jowell: My Department has had no such discussions with the Treasury. While the Government appreciate the importance of television to many pensioners. the provision of a Solus "viewing card" is a matter for the broadcasters.

Film Initiatives (Schools and Colleges)

11. John Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what support her Department is giving to film initiatives in schools and colleges. [137033]

Estelle Morris: The UK Film Council, charged by the Government to support education about, and access to, film culture, runs the First Light initiative to help young people in schools and colleges make short films. The Creative Partnerships Programme has also run a number of film projects in schools, some in partnership with First Light.

The British Film Institute, funded by the UK Film Council, runs a number of education projects in schools and colleges across the UK about film and the moving image.

Amateur Sport

12. Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when amateur sporting clubs will be able to access rate relief. [137034]

Mr. Caborn: Clubs may register with the Inland Revenue for Community Amateur Sport Club status immediately. Registered clubs will receive mandatory rate relief from 1 April 2004.

Monuments (Preferential Charging)

13. Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment she has made of the number of cultural and historical monuments which set preferential charges for (a) local residents and (b) UK nationals; and whether it is her policy to continue to permit such preferences. [137035]

Estelle Morris: If such preferential charges exist at cultural and historic sites owned by or managed on behalf of the state, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will not permit their continuance as this would be in breach of EU law.

Casinos

14. Jeff Ennis: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what measures her Department will put in place to limit the proliferation of gaming in the planned liberalisation of casinos. [137036]

Tessa Jowell: Liberalisation of casinos must be controlled and balanced. We consulted about our proposals in August. We see real possibilities of using large resort casinos to secure regeneration benefits, but we do not want to see the proliferation of small casinos.

The consultation ended recently. We are considering the responses.

Tourism

15. Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many press releases her Department has issued since April that relate directly to tourism. [137037]

Mr. Caborn: The Department has issued four press releases since April relating directly to tourism.

We have also issued three press releases on the reform of the licensing system, which impacts directly on the tourism and hospitality sector.

Mr. Best: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans her Department has to improve the skills base in the tourism industry. [136653]

Mr. Caborn: The Hospitality, Leisure, Travel and Tourism sectors are working with my Department and the Sector Skills Development Agency to set up a Sector Skills Council (SSC) for the industry. The SSC will be industry led and will co-ordinate the sectors approach to reducing the skills gaps and shortages and anticipate future needs. It will provide a one-stop shop for advice on learning and skills and sign post employers to other sources of help. The SSC will investigate the needs of both large and small employers and develop tailored support to help them achieve business objectives.

BBC

17. Huw Irranca-Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will make a statement on the Office of Fair Trading report on independent productions transmitted by the BBC. [137039]

Tessa Jowell: I was very disappointed that the BBC failed to meet its 25 per cent. independent production quota for 2002–03. I take this extremely seriously and have written to the BBC Chairman, Gavyn Davies, to say so. In future, it will be a matter for Ofcom to enforce this quota and they will have powers to fine in cases of non-compliance.

20. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what recent discussions she has had with the BBC on using the licence fee to fund the future development of its on-line services. [137042]

Tessa Jowell: I have had no recent discussions with the BBC on this matter. The BBC's online service is currently the subject of an independent review by Philip Graf. The findings of this review will feed into the forthcoming review of the BBC's Charter, and as such, will have a bearing on the funding arrangements for the future developments of BBC online services.

School Sport

18. Mrs. Calton: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions she has had with the Department for Education and Skills about widening the range of (a) competitive and (b) non-competitive sports in schools. [137040]

Mr. Caborn: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State meets regularly with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Skills to discuss issues of mutual concern. These include the Public Service Agreement target, shared by both departments, to increase the percentage of school children who spend a minimum of two hours each week on high quality PE and school sport—both competitive and non-competitive—within and beyond the curriculum to 75 per cent. by 2006.

Regional Theatre

19. Mr. Cameron: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what steps she has taken to ensure that small theatres in the regions of England receive a larger share of support from funding organisations; and if she will make a statement. [137041]

Estelle Morris: As a consequence of the theatre review in 2001, Arts Council England is allocating substantially more funding to regional theatre across England. From April this year the total budget for theatre is, £100 million and will increase further by 2005–06. This is exceptionally good news and will lead to more and better theatre for audiences across the country.

Tote

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will make a statement on her plans to change the status of the Tote. [137038]

Tessa Jowell: We intend to bring forward legislative proposals when parliamentary time allows. These proposals will enable the Tote to be sold to a horse racing trust.

Lottery Grant (Telford)

David Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what level of Lottery grant money has been provided to organisations in Telford since 1997. [136882]

Estelle Morris: Since 1 January 1997, £14,163,229 has been allocated to 194 projects in the constituency of Telford.

This is derived from the Department's Awards Database, which is based on information supplied by the distributing bodies.

David Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what resources have been raised by the National Lottery for charitable purposes in Telford; and what money has been allocated to local projects there. [136883]

Estelle Morris: Since the start of the Lottery, £16,889,359 has been allocated to 214 projects in the constituency of Telford.

This is derived from the Department's Awards Database, which is based on information supplied by the distributing bodies.

Information about National Lottery ticket sales is not broken down by constituency, but the National Lottery Commission is able to provide information about sales broken down by postcode area. I shall write to my hon. Friend with it as soon as possible, placing copies of my letter in the Libraries both Houses.

There is only an indirect link between ticket sales and money available for charitable purposes. Unclaimed prizes and interest earned are two factors that influence the overall amount of money available to the good causes. For this reason it is not possible to specify money for good causes as having come from particular area, geographical or otherwise.

Overseas Visitors

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many overseas visitors she estimates visited (a) the North West, (b) Lancashire and (c) Chorley in the last 12 months. [136908]

Mr. Caborn: According to the North West Tourist Board, in 2002, an estimated 1.62 million overseas visitors visited the North West which includes Cumbria; an estimated 0.23 million overseas visits were made to Lancashire and approximately 6,380 overseas visits were made to Chorley.

Note:
The figures have been supplied by the North West Tourist Board and are based on a visit Britain survey of overseas visits called the International Passenger Survey which collates information at national level.

Racing

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions her Department has had with racing authorities about the preliminary conclusion by the Office of Fair Trading on British racing; and if she will make a statement. [137138]

Mr. Caborn: I met representatives of the Jockey Club on 5 November and will be meeting British Horseracing Board representatives on 11 November. Previously, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State discussed the matter with the racing industry at a seminar organised by the Department in July. Both the Jockey Club and the BHB have briefed my Department about the submissions which they have made to the Office of Fair Trading in response to the Rule 14 notice; but I cannot comment on a matter which is subject to a statutory process, yet to be completed, between the competition authorities and the parties.

School Sports Co-ordinator

Mr. Best: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) if she will make a statement on the School Sports Co-ordinator programme; [136644]

(2) how many school sports co-ordinators are in post; [136645]

(3) what steps she is taking to improve school sports facilities; [136646]

(4) what steps her Department is taking in conjunction with local authorities to strengthen school sports; [136647]

(5) if she will make a statement on recent progress in highlighting the importance of sport in schools. [136655]

Mr. Caborn: The Government is investing more than £1 billion in England to transform PE and school sport. This funding will help deliver an ambitious Public Service Agreement target, shared by DCMS and DfES, to increase the percentage of school children who spend a minimum of two hours each week on high quality PE and school sport within and beyond the curriculum to 75 per cent. by 2006.

Spearheading action is a massive expansion of the School Sport Co-ordinator programme. There are currently some 1,200 School Sport Co-ordinators and 6,000 Primary and Special School Link Teachers. This means that 30 per cent. of all schools in England now belong to one of the 222 School Sport Partnerships. We are working closely with local education authorities to ensure a continued strategic roll-out of this element of the national strategy for PE, school sport and club links.

The investment also includes expenditure of £581 million from the New Opportunities Fund over the period 2002–03 to 2005–06 to bring about a step change in the provision of sports facilities for young people and the community generally; £130 million from the Space for Sport and Arts programme since 2000–01 for new or modernised sports and arts facilities in primary schools in 65 deprived LEAs; and £10 million from the Sporting Playgrounds programme to enhance primary school playgrounds in 27 deprived LEAs.

Sports (One Stop Planning)

Kate Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will list the sports that will be given specific One Stop Planning support; and what criteria were used in selecting the sports. [137074]

Mr. Caborn: The following sports will be accorded UK-wide One Stop Planning support:

athletics
canoeing cycling equestrianism gymnastics/trampolining judo rowing sailing swimming/diving
triathlon

The primary criteria against which UK Sport selected these sports were: potential to deliver medals at the 2008 Olympic and Paralympic Games, track record of delivery against targets at previous Games, and capacity to provide high quality support for athletes. UK Sport's secondary criteria were public profile, and significance in contributing to wider sports participation targets. These criteria were agreed with the Home Nations Sports Councils.

Television Licence Fee

Mr. Peter Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what proportion of Freeview is paid for by the television licence fee. [135270]

Estelle Morris: Under the terms of the shareholder agreement which established Freeview (DTVS Ltd.), the BBC, BSkyB and Crown Castle each pay one third of the company's costs. These costs cover marketing and customer support for Freeview including the cost of liaising with manufacturers and retailers. In common with other broadcasters on the digital terrestrial platform, the BBC must also, separately, pay for the technical costs of broadcasting its channels, and make payments to the ITC for its multiplex licence, but these payments are not made to or through Freeview (DTVS Ltd.).

Work-related Stress

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many cases of work related stress have been reported in her Department in each of the last three years; how much compensation has been paid to employees; how many work days have been lost due to work related stress, and at what cost; what procedures have been put in place to reduce work related stress, and at what cost; and if she will make a statement. [136856]

Mr. Caborn: DCMS does not hold data which separately identifies work-related sickness absence. DCMS has a legal obligation to provide a safe working environment for employees.

The Department is committed to meeting targets for reducing the number of working days lost generally due to sickness absence and due to work related injuries and illness arising from the Government's Revitalising Health and Safety initiative. Guidance is available for all staff on how to manage stress effectively.

EDUCATION AND SKILLS

Sure Start

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many Sure Start programmes are running; and how many children are involved. [133908]

Margaret Hodge: There are now 521 Sure Start programmes up and running, providing services to around 390,000 children aged under four and their families in the most disadvantaged areas of the country.

Universal Children's Day

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will make it his policy to accept UN Resolution 836 and establish and promote a Universal Children's day in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [133731]

Margaret Hodge: The Government's commitment to children and young people has been demonstrated by the creation of the post of Minister for Children, Young People and Families, the pulling together within DfES, from across Government of a range of services for children and families, and the publication of the green paper "Every Child Matters", which sets out a comprehensive programme of reform and improvement for the care of children.

Both the Minister and officials work closely with children and young people themselves. A special edition of the Green Paper specifically aimed at children has been issued, and 50 separate consultation events are being held with children as a part in the consultation process, which lasts until 1 December.

We consider that these measures are likely to be of greater value to children and young people than a Universal Children's Day.

Breakfast Clubs

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many schools in the UK provide breakfast clubs, broken down by education authority. [136208]

Mr. Miliband: The Department does not keep a record of the number of breakfast clubs operating in any given area of the country. Breakfast clubs are available in a number of schools, and may form part of a school's study support or childcare provision for which Government funding is available. They can not only provide learning opportunities for pupils, but also help support the needs of working parents by offering food in a safe and stimulating environment for their children.

CAFCASS

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what plans he has to reform the management and organisation of CAFCASS. [137479]

Margaret Hodge: In response to one of the recommendations of the Committee on the Lord Chancellor's Department in their report on the Children and Family Court Advisory and Support Service (CAFCASS) (HC 614–1), I appointed Professor Sir Clive Booth to carry out a review of the skills required by the CAFCASS Board. I will consider his report before taking any decisions on the organisation of the Board.

Child Protection

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what response he has made to the letter of 3 November from the Chief Executive of Southend Borough Council relating to child protection. [137770]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: The Secretary of State has not received this letter.

Children and Young People's Unit

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the annual budget was for (a) staffing and (b) administering the Children and Young People's Unit in each year since it was established; and how much funding has been allocated by the CYPU to projects referred by the Children's Fund over the same period, broken down by region. [135028]

Margaret Hodge [holding answer 28 October 2003]: The information requested is as follows.

Staffing/Admin

The Children's and Young People's Unit had a combined staffing and administration budget over financial years 2001–02, 2002–03 & 2003–04 of:

Financial year 2001–02: £2.66 million

Financial year 2002–03: £4.43 million

Financial year 2003–04: £4.40 million

This equates to approximately 2.6 per cent. of the Unit's overall budget.

Children's Fund

There are 149 Children's Fund partnership areas in England and individual partnership allocations were based on a formula derived from the number of children in households claiming means-tested benefit/allowance (as defined by Income Support, income-based Jobseekers Allowance, Family Credit and Disability Working Allowance).

The Children's Fund was rolled out across England in three waves. £67.65 million was allocated to partnerships in 2001–02; £121.37 million in 2002–03; and £166.78 million in 2003–04. The attached table lists each of the 149 partnerships and their annual allocation since each partnership was implemented. Partnership allocations are the same for SR2000 and SR2002. Wave 1 partnerships began operating from 1 July 2001. Wave 2 partnerships began operating from 1 April 2002. Wave 3 partnerships began operating from 1 April 2003.

Child Protection

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what assessment he has made of the (a) need for and (b) costs of enabling children's services in refuges to meet the national standards for under eights day care; and if he will make a statement. [136394]

Margaret Hodge: Where refuges offer day care they will need to be registered and inspected by Ofsted, and the national standards for under eights day care would apply. Under an agreed protocol between Ofsted and the Women's Aid Federation of England (WAFE), the unique position of women's refuges is recognised and Ofsted's guidance to its child care inspectors indicates that their special circumstances should be taken into account in applying the national standards.

Local authorities are funded to promote growth in the number of child care places generally and to provide information, training and advice to providers to help them meet the national standards. They work in partnership with refuges where appropriate.

Mr. Liddell-Grainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what checks are carried out into private companies who run children's homes. [136545]

Margaret Hodge: The requirements of the Children's Homes Regulations 2001 and the Children's Homes National Minimum Standards must be complied with before an organisation can be registered with the National Care Standards Commission. A copy of the Children's Homes Regulations 2001 and the National Minimum Standards have been placed in the Library.

Mr. Liddell-Grainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what role social services departments have in setting up children's homes. [136546]

Margaret Hodge: Social Services departments no longer register and inspect children's homes in their area. Any residential children's homes that are provided by local authorities are registered and inspected by the National Care Standards Commission in the same way as any other private or voluntary organisation providing residential children's homes. Each service provider must comply with the Children's Homes Regulations 2001 and Children's Homes National Minimum Standards.

Mr. Liddell-Grainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what consultation in the local area is required to be carried out for a proposed children's home for three or fewer children. [136547]

Margaret Hodge: There is no requirement for the consultation of local residents in relation to a proposed children's home. The NCSC does not distinguish between small children's homes and large children's homes for the purpose of registration.

Mr. Liddell-Grainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many children were in privately-run children's homes in Somerset in the last year for which figures are available. [136548]

Margaret Hodge: The information requested is not available.

The National Care Standards Commission's records show that as of 3 November 2003 there are places for 229 children in total in privately run children's homes in Somerset.

Condover Hall School

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) what discussions his Department has had with the Royal National Institute for the Blind on the closure of Condover Hall School; [134358]

(2) if he will list the schools in England which provide the same education services as Condover Hall School for multisensory-disabled children; [134359]

(3) what discussion his Department has had with Shropshire county council LEA regarding the closure of Condover Hall School; [134360]

(4) how many children are taught at Condover Hall School; [134361]

(5) how many teachers he estimates will lose their jobs when Condover Hall School closes; [134362]

(6) what provision is being made to continue the education of the children taught at Condover Hall School when it closes. [134363]

Margaret Hodge: There are many schools in England, approved to make provision for pupils with profound and multiple learning difficulties and severe learning difficulties which are able to provide services for multi-disabled pupils. We understand from the Royal National Institute for the Blind (RNIB) that its school, Rushton Hall, provides education services very similar to those provided at Condover Hall. Other schools which provide services for mulit-sensory disabled children, but with different patterns of residential provision are: St. David's Unit at the West of England School, Exeter; and the Royal School for the Blind in Liverpool. Liden Lodge School in the London borough of Wandsworth is also developing support for multi-sensory disabled children.

Official at the DfES have had no discussions to date with Shropshire county council about the closure of Condover Hall School. We do of course stand ready to discuss the matter with any interested party, including local education authorities which currently make use of the school, if asked to do so.

Officials have however asked the RNIB to clarify its plans for the closure of Condover Hall School, and in particular to explain how the RNIB intends to ensure that appropriate and realistic plans for the placement of children currently attending the school are in place. We are currently awaiting a response.

Condover Hall School currently has 34 pupils of statutory school age. There are no primary age pupils. Six pupils are in year 13 and are due to leave school at the end of the summer term 2004. In addition there are 12 young adults, aged from 19–24, in the Adult Education Centre at Condover Hall School.

Condover Hall School currently has 11 teachers, including the Principal and Deputy Headteacher. Nine teachers are employed in the main school and two in the Adult Education Centre. RNIB has stated its intention of exploring opportunities for redeployment of staff currently employed at Condover Hall.

It will be for the home LEA of each child currently placed at Condover Hall to decide, based on the special educational needs of that child, the most suitable placement for them following the closure of the school.

Connexions

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many Connexions personal advisers were allocated to (a) information and advice in schools and colleges, (b) targeted preventative work in schools and colleges and (c) information and advice to those not engaged in education or training in (i) 2002–03 and (ii) 2003–04, in each Connexions region; and if he will make a statement. [134110]

Margaret Hodge [holding answer 23 October 2003]: Statistics relating to the specific areas listed in this question are not available from Connexions partnerships. Partnerships are required to show the percentages of total expenditure on both pre-16 and post-16 work. These figures include staff as well as other costs and give some indication of the balance of expenditure on young people during compulsory education and beyond. It can be assumed that the majority of pre-16 expenditure is devoted to young people wholly engaged in learning.

The role of the personal adviser is very broad, covering initial information and advice through to more in-depth support. The specific roles of personal advisers within schools and colleges are determined via a partnership agreement signed between each institution and the partnership. This is a further reason why it is not possible to supply information in the forms requested.

Departmental Energy Use

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how much (a) electricity and (b) other energy his Department has used in each year since 1997 (i) in total and (ii) per square metre; what the projected use is for each of the following years for which forecasts are made; what plans he has to reduce usage; and if he will make a statement. [135051]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: In response to parts (a) and (b) parts (i) and (ii) of this question, I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by Defra on 3 November 2003 (Official Report column 404W). Targets for future energy use on the Government Estate are being developed under the Framework for Sustainable Development on the Government Estate.

Recent and planned changes to our estate due to the rationalisation of the use of our headquarters buildings have meant that we cannot accurately predict our energy consumption in the near future. My Department remains committed to reducing energy use as part of our own sustainable development plan, and as part of the government-wide programme to improve performance in this area.

Domestic Violence

Ms Shipley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what plans he has to ensure that the findings of the Government's "Safety and Justice" consultation on domestic violence are included in the outcome of the "Every Child Matters" consultation process. [134911]

Margaret Hodge: Responses to "Safety and Justice: The Government's Proposals on Domestic Violence" are currently being analysed and will be considered by Ministers shortly. I shall ask for details of those responses to "Safety and Justice" which have a bearing on our proposals for improving services to children and young people, as set out in the Green Paper "Every Child Matters", to be considered together with the responses received to that Green Paper.

Ms Shipley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills whether issues relating to domestic violence will be included in the remit of the proposed Commissioner for Children. [134998]

Margaret Hodge [holding answer 28 October 2003]: The Government set out in the Green Paper 'Every Child Matters' our intention to legislate for the appointment of a Children's Commissioner as a new voice for all children and young people, especially the disadvantaged. The Commissioner would ensure that the views of children and young people are heard, and report to Parliament through the Secretary of State for Education and Skills on progress against the outcomes for children set out in the Green Paper. Further details on the remit and responsibilities of the Commissioner will be made available in the light of the consultation which runs until 1 December.

Ms Shipley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how cross-departmental policy implementation on issues relating to children and domestic violence will be organised. [135007]

Margaret Hodge [holding answer 29 October 2003]: Cross-departmental issues relating to domestic violence, including those affecting children and young people, are overseen by the Inter-Ministerial Group for Domestic Violence chaired by Baroness Scotland of Asthal. Baroness Ashton of Upholland represents the Department for Education and Skills on the Inter-Ministerial Group.

When necessary, issues relating to domestic violence and children and young people will be considered by the children, young people and family services Cabinet Committee MISC9 chaired by the Chancellor. The Secretary of State for Education and Skills has Cabinet-level responsibility for both policy and delivery of services for children and young people and is a member of MISC9. He is also chair of the Cabinet sub-Committee MISC9(D) which is responsible for ordinating the delivery of services to children, young people and families. I am a member of both MISC9 and MISC9(D).

Edexcel

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will make a statement on (a) the role of coursework in the GCSE examination and (b) the International GCSE qualification developed by Edexcel exam board. [136709]

Mr. Miliband: Coursework can be a valuable way of assessing achievement that cannot readily be demonstrated in an examination. The setting and assessment of coursework can help teaching and learning processes by measuring and encouraging the development of important skills not easily tested in timed written examinations, like the ability to tackle extended pieces of written work. The 14–19 Reform Group is considering the place of coursework in the 14–19 curriculum.

The concept of an IGCSE is not a new one. The University of Cambridge Local Examinations Syndicate has offered this type of examination since 1986. IGSEs have been designed as qualifications primarily for overseas candidates, with some take up in the independent sector. Unlike GCSEs they are not approved for use in maintained schools and are not subject to any regulatory mechanisms.

Education Formula Spending

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills in annex D of his Department's policy guidance note, School and local education authority funding in 2003–04, what increase in the education formula spending was indicated for local education authority budget forecasters to use for 2004–05; and how this was determined. [136886]

Mr. Miliband: The Department's guidance note, sent to local education authorities on 10 December 2003, included advice to authorities to help them in forecasting their budget over the period 2003–04 to 2005–06, so they could set indicative three-year budgets for schools.

Based on the outcome of the 2002 Spending Review, the guidance noted that Education Formula Spending was planned to increase between 2003–04 and 2004–05 by 5.5 per cent. in cash, and approximately 6.0 per cent. per pupil, based on pupil number estimates from the Department's pupil projection model. It also noted that the floor and ceiling arrangements, introduced in 2003–04, would continue to operate in future years.

The guidance explicitly recognised that the Department is unable to provide firm estimates of EFSS increases for future years for each authority.

Educational Psychologists

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what changes he has made to the work of educational psychologists in schools by grouping schools together; and if he will make a statement. [134991]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: Educational psychologists are employed by local education authorities. Decisions on their deployment and use are therefore matters for LEAs to determine in the light of local circumstances and available resources. The grouping of schools in federations should not significantly affect the role or responsibilities of educational psychologists.

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many educational psychologists are employed by each local education authority in London; and (a) how many were employed by, (b) how many retired (c) how many were recruited in and (d) what the vacancy rates were in each local authority in London for each of the last six years. [135149]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: The latest available information on the number of educational psychologists employed by local education authorities in London, and the number of vacant posts is given in the following table:

Annual form 618G surveys of teachers in service and teacher vacancies.

The Department does not collect information on the number of new recruits or retirements in any given period. Manpower planning issues fall to local education authorities, as employers, to determine in light of local circumstances and available resources. Data on vacancy rates are only available from 2001.

First Aid

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) if he will amend the OFSTED requirements of the first aid training standard for pre-school and nursery settings to ensure that there is a paediatric component in first aid courses; [136600]

(2) if he will set out for each setting inspected by OFSTED (a) the published standard for first aid training, (b) the length of training required and (c) the areas to be covered by the training. [136602]

Margaret Hodge: Ofsted registers and inspects pre-schools, day nurseries and childminders having regard to national standards set by the Department for Education and Skills. Revised national standards for under eights day care and childminding came into force in September 2003. For pre-school and nursery settings the standards specify that there is at least one member of staff with a current first aid training certificate on the premises or on outings at any one time, and that the first aid qualification includes training in first aid for infants and young children. The revisions make it clear that this training has to be consistent with any guidance issued by the Secretary of State to local authorities, who are responsible for making training available to settings.

We will issue guidance shortly, and this will include advice on the length of training and areas to be covered.

Foster Carers

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what plans he has to allow for short break provision to be granted to foster carers; what additional support can be given in cases where foster parents have allegations made against them; and if he will make a statement. [133124]

Margaret Hodge: Foster carers can already receive "short breaks" and the Fostering Services National Minimum Standards (March 2002) require the provision of independent support to foster carers during an investigation. The Green Paper, "Every Child Matters" contains a number of proposals to improve the recruitment and retention of foster carers. These include improving support for carers facing allegations and improved short break provision. The Green Paper is now out for consultation until 1 December 2003.

Graduate Tax

Paul Farrelly: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) for what reason it was stated in his circular, The Government's Higher Education Proposals Explained, of 5 November, that the proceeds of a graduate tax cannot be earmarked by statute for use in the funding of higher education alone; [137748]

(2) for what reason it was stated in his circular, The Government's Higher Education Proposals Explained, of 5 November, that a graduate tax is necessarily payable throughout a graduate's life; [137749]

(3) for what reason it was stated in his circular, The Government's Higher Education Proposals Explained, of 5 November, that a graduate tax would necessarily not have an earnings threshold below which no repayments are made; [137750]

(4) for what reason it was stated in his circular, The Government's Higher Education Proposals Explained, of 5 November, that a graduate tax would necessarily not recover the money for higher education funding for at least 20 years; [137751]

(5) for what reason it was stated that a graduate tax would have to run alongside the student loan system in his circular, The Government's Higher Education Proposals Explained, of 5 November. [137752]

Alan Johnson: The circular referred to is a party political document. I will write to my hon. Friend separately.

Licensed Deficit Arrangements

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will make a statement on how he estimates the granting of additional transitional funds to a local education authority will affect its obligations under the licensed deficit arrangements. [136888]

Mr. Miliband: Local education authorities which allow licensed deficits for schools have various obligations specified in their schemes, including the maintenance of limits on the repayment periods and adherence to a maximum proportion of total school balances used to underwrite the deficits. None of these obligations will be directly affected by transitional support grant announced on 29 October, except insofar as use of such grant is likely to produce less pressure on local resources since the transitional grant is to be targeted specifically at those schools facing the greatest difficulty in bringing their budgets back into balance, on the basis of costed plans produced by those schools.

National Healthy School Award

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) what the costs have been of setting up the National Healthy School Award; [136209]

(2) how many schools have signed up to the Healthy Schools programme; and how many of those schools have been accredited with the National Healthy School Standards, broken down by local education authority. [136210]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: The table shows the level of direct financial support for the National Healthy Schools Standard (NHSS) from central Government sources since its launch in 1999–2000. Information on any additional support from the local NHSS or from Local Education Authorities is not held centrally.

£ million

Year (allocations)	From the Department of Health	From the Department for Education and Skills	Total
1999–2000	2	2	4
2001–02	5.8	2	7.8
2002–03	5.5	2	7.5
2003–04	5.5	2	7.5

Over 14,000 schools have signed up to the Healthy Schools programme of which we expect 9,482 to be accredited as working at the most intensive level of involvement of level 3 by March 2004. The table attached shows the number of schools accredited with the standard and the breakdown by each local education authority.

Ofsted

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many people have been employed by OFSTED on a (a) part-time, (b) full-time and (c) contractual basis in each year since 1997. [137170]

Mr. Miliband: This is a matter for OFSTED. HM Chief Inspector, David Bell, will write to the hon. Member and place a copy of his letter in the Library.

Retained Funding

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will make a statement on his assessment of whether its proposed levels of retained funding for 2004–05 will leave local education authorities with sufficient funds to meet their obligations to provide universal support for all three-year-olds from April 2004. [136891]

Mr. Miliband: Draft Regulations placing limits on the sums that local education authorities can retain for central expenditure within their Schools Budget in 2004–05 were published, for consultation, on 29 October. A copy of the draft Regulations has been placed in the Library of the House.

The draft Regulations recognise that some authorities will need to increase their central expenditure in order to deliver universal three year-old nursery provision, and, in placing limits on central expenditure, specifically allow for such increases.

School Meals

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what steps he is taking to ensure that the content and quality of school meals is regularly monitored and evaluated. [136735]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: It is the responsibility of the local education authority or, where a budgetary element for school meals has been delegated to them, a school's governing body to ensure that the statutory nutritional standards for school lunches are met. The Department for Education and Skills, in partnership with the Food Standards Agency, has commissioned research by Kings College London to assess whether food provided for and consumed during school lunches in a sample of maintained secondary schools in England complies with statutory nutritional standards and associated guidance. We expect that the findings of this survey will be available in spring 2004.

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will make it his policy to prevent school meals providers from advertising or promoting food or drink with a high fat or sugar content; and if he will make a statement. [136736]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: It is the responsibility of the governing body to decide what food and drink products should be available or promoted on school premises.

The Department in conjunction with the Incorporated Society of British Advertisers and the National Consumers' Association has published 'Commercial Activities in Schools: best Practice Principles'. The purpose of this guidance is to identify best practice and to ensure that educational benefits are not compromised by commercial considerations.

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what training is provided for school governors on (a) their responsibility for ensuring that school meals meet the required standards and (b) the methods to be used for evaluating the quality of school meals. [136737]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: The Department for Education and Skills has produced the 'Healthy School Guidance' to help governors and caterers implement the nutritional standards.

The October 2002 newsletter for governors contains a section on nutrition and further information on food related programmes operated by this Department and other organisations. A copy of the governors newsletter can be viewed on the website—www.dfes.gov.uk/governor.

In the publication 'A Guide to the Law for School Governors', chapter five contains information on support and training for governors. This can also be viewed on the website.

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what steps he is taking to promote the use of new technology to provide a menu assessment tool for primary school meals. [136738]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: The Department for Education and Skills has no plans to introduce a menu assessment tool for school meals.

In the Department's Healthy School Lunches guidance for school caterers on implementing the national minimum nutritional standards, there is an example of a self monitoring checklist for compulsory requirements. The guidance includes enough information to monitor the nutritional standards. The guidance can be viewed on the Department's website—www.dfes.gov.uk/schoollunches.

School Funding

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills whether it is his policy to adhere to the 2002 spending review increase in the national control total for 2004–05. [134671]

Mr. Miliband: Yes.

Skills for Life Survey

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what assessment he has made of the finding in the recent Skills for Life survey carried out by his Department that the expansion to access in higher education has not led to marked improvements in literacy and numeracy. [136716]

Alan Johnson: The Skills for Life survey shows that education is highly correlated with literacy and numeracy skills—both in terms of age of completing full time education and the highest qualification. The vast majority of those with degrees have Level 2 or higher literacy and numeracy, and the converse is true for those with low level or no qualifications.

The survey provides the first national profile of adult literacy and numeracy skills and demonstrates the need for the Government to continue its sustained drive to improve adult basic skills training and school standards. To date over 1.8 million adults have started basic skills courses as part of the Government's 'Skills for Life' programme.

Student Finance

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how much will be spent by his Department on maintenance grants for students at university in financial years (a) 2004–05 and (b) 2005–06. [137164]

Alan Johnson: The Higher Education Grant is being introduced for new students starting in the 2004/05 academic year and the cost will build up cohort by cohort. We estimate that the cost will be between £63–£75 million in the 2004–05 financial year and £146–£177 million in the 2005–06 financial year, depending on the actual number of students entering higher education in those years and their precise income distribution. We expect the steady state cost of the higher education grant to be around £300 million.

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what assessment he has made of the average income from part-time or full-time work of students studying in higher education. [137201]

Alan Johnson: The Department has conducted a Student Income and Expenditure Survey (SIES) for the 2002–3 academic year. It will provide up-to-date information on students' employment patterns and their income from paid work in the 2002–03 academic year for full-time, young, single, childless, English and Welsh domiciled students who are undertaking an undergraduate degree at publicly funded Higher Education Institutions in England and Wales in 2002–3.

The Department will announce a date for publication once the research report has been finalised. Once published, the Department will use the data for further analysis of students' income and employment.

Teenage Pregnancy

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what research has been conducted into the cost of the morning-after pill and its affordability in (a) disadvantaged areas and (b) areas where the incidence of teenage pregnancy is higher than average. [134642]

Margaret Hodge [holding answer 6 November 2003]: Research into the affordability of emergency contraception is unnecessary because it is available free to all women from a number of services including General Practice, community family planning clinics, youth advisory clinics and community pharmacists working to Patient Group Direction's under NHS arrangements. All areas are looking at improving the accessibility of free emergency contraception particularly those where the incidence of teenage pregnancy is higher than average. In addition, women age 16 plus can buy emergency contraception as a pharmacy product. The price of emergency contraception is set by the manufacturer.

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what his policy is on the over the counter provision of the morning-after pill free of charge, in areas where levels of teenage pregnancy are higher than average, to young people who have not received prior counselling on birth control. [134643]

Margaret Hodge [holding answer 6 November 2003]: There are three routes for the supply of emergency contraception: on prescription through a medical practitioner, as a prescription only medicine under a patient group direction (PGD) or as a pharmacy product.

Emergency contraception is only provided to young people under 16 under medical supervision. This includes the supply by other health professionals, such as school nurses and community pharmacists, working to PGDs. A Patient Group Direction is a written instruction for the supply or administration of medicines to groups of patients without an individualised doctor's prescription.

All health professionals providing emergency contraception are trained to ensure that young women are informed about and encouraged to visit local services that provide regular forms of contraception and condoms to protect against sexually transmitted infections.

Services aimed at improving early access to emergency contraception should be seen in the context of a much wider programme of the Government's Teenage Pregnancy and Sexual Health and HIV Strategies. This includes helping young people to resist pressure to have early sex through improved sex and relationship education, improving knowledge of risks of unprotected sex, increasing early uptake of contraceptive and sexual health advice by sexually active young people and involving parents and the wider community.

Training Links

Linda Perham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what plans he has to develop stronger (a) links and (b) partnerships between higher education, training providers and the small business community. [136614]

Alan Johnson: Our plans for strengthening partnerships between higher education institutions, training providers and industry, including small business were set out in The future of higher education' published in January this year and also in '21st Century Skills: Realising Our Potential' published in July.

Our plans include expanding Foundation Degrees which are designed with employers to meet their needs; support via the Higher Education Innovation Fund (HEIF) which includes setting up a network of Knowledge Exchanges to benefit local business communities; and, New Technology Institutes (Nils) to provide advanced technology skills.

We are also establishing Sector Skills Councils which will address sector skills needs and are also developing stronger arrangements at regional level between Regional Development Agencies (RDAs), business and education and training providers to develop strategies for tackling local and regional skills needs.

Transitional Funding

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will (a) list the criteria that were used to determine which authorities should receive additional transitional funding for 2004–05, (b) set out the basis on which the amounts were calculated and (c) make a statement on why Lancashire did not receive an allocation of these monies. [136890]

Mr. Miliband: Details of the transitional support package for 2004–05, including details of the formula for calculating which local education authorities will be eligible, will be published at the time of the provisional Local Government Finance Settlement later this month.

On 29 October the Government published indicative figures for the targeted grant in 2004–05, which have been placed in the Library of the House. These assumed that grant would be available to authorities whose increase in Education Formula Spending and relevant DfES grant between 2002–03 and 2004–05 would otherwise be less than 12 per cent. per pupil. The increase in Lancashire LEA is expected to be above 12 per cent. per pupil over the relevant period, which means it would not be eligible for the targeted grant.

However, if Lancashire or any other LEA is able to put forward a compelling case that additional, transitional funds are needed in the short term—above and beyond those already available to the LEA—my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will be prepared to consider bringing forward grant payments from my Department, so that the LEA will have funds available in 2004–05 for this purpose, with the expectation of a consequential reduction to what they will receive in future years. The maximum amount that might be made available in this way would be £300,000 per authority, or 0.2 per cent. of the authority's total education resources in 2004–05, if that is higher. For Lancashire, 0.2 per cent. of its education resources would be over £1.2 million.

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the indicative allocation of targeted transitional grant 2004–05 is for Surrey. [137525]

Mr. Miliband: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced, in his statement to the House on 29 October, that targeted transitional grant will be made available to about one third of local education authorities next year, so that the total increase in education resources for every authority, over the two year period between 2002–03 and 2004–05, will be a minimum of 12 per cent. per pupil.

Final allocations of targeted transitional grant will be announced at the time of the provisional Local Government Finance Settlement. The indicative allocations published on 29 October made no allocation to Surrey, whose total increase in education resources between 2002–03 and 2004–05 was estimated to be above 12 per cent. per pupil. A list of indicative allocations has been placed in the Library of the House.

Tuition Fees

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills whether after the introduction of variable tuition fees in 2006, those higher education institutions wishing (a) to charge fees not exceeding the current standard flat-rate fees and (b) wishing to charge top-up fees for only some of their courses will be required to conclude a (i) full and (ii) partial access agreement. [136707]

Alan Johnson: As we set out in Widening participation in higher education, any higher education provider wishing to charge variable fees for any of its courses above the standard rate from 2006, will need to have an access agreement approved by the Office for Fair Access (OFFA). Institutions which do not charge fees above the standard rate for any of their courses will not be required to have an access agreement.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what estimate he has made of the public expenditure impact of including the income of cohabiting partners and new spouses in the assessment of residual income for tuition fee exemption from 2004–05; and what estimate he has made of the net change in the numbers paying full tuition fees which will result from the change. [137134]

Alan Johnson: We estimate that the change resulting from including the income of cohabiting partners and spouses will produce steady state savings of approximately £30 million on funding of tuition fees by 2007–08. The change is to be introduced for new students entering HE from 2004–05 onwards.

This estimate has been derived using income-data from a number of sources and is indicative. Our best indication is that it could account for an increase of approximately three percentage points in the proportion of dependent students paying full tuition fees. We cannot give a precise estimate at this stage since some families will benefit from other aspects of the new household income definition, such as the new £1000 disregard for children financially dependent on the household.

Paul Farrelly: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills, from (1) how many universities he has received representations on allowing them to charge tuition fees of more than £5,000 per annum; [137158]

(2) which universities have indicated they wish to charge tuition fees above £3,000 a year; [137159]

(3) if he will list the universities which have made representations to him on the level of tuition fees they wish to be free to charge, broken down by level. [137160]

Alan Johnson: I have received numerous representations on a number of matters from universities, both by means of formal correspondence and in meetings with Vice Chancellors. The level of fee has been covered in general terms in a number of these discussions.

Paul Farrelly: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how much of the money raised by universities from variable tuition fees he estimates will be invested in (a) teaching, (b) research, (c) bursaries for poorer students and (d) other categories if his proposals are implemented. [137211]

Alan Johnson: It will be for universities to decide how to invest their income in teaching and in research. We are considering and discussing how access to higher education can be safeguarded—for example through bursaries for poorer students—at institutions which decide to charge tuition fees above the standard rate.

Paul Farrelly: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many universities he estimates will charge the proposed maximum annual tuition fee in respect of courses covering up to (a) 10 per cent., (b) 20 per cent., (c) 30 per cent., (d) 40 per cent., (e) 50 per cent., (f) 60 per cent., (g) 70 per cent., (h) 80 per cent., (i) 90 per cent. and (j) 100 per cent. of their projected student intake within (i) one year, (ii) two years, (iii) three years and (iv) more than three years of the implementation of his proposals. [137217]

Alan Johnson: It will be up to universities themselves to set their fee levels, provided that they have an access agreement approved by the Office for Fair Access.

University Funding

Mr. Paul Farrelly: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what estimate he has made of the funding gap faced by universities in 2003–04. [137162]

Alan Johnson: The White Paper The future of higher education' highlighted studies showing that there was a need for some £8 billion of investment in infrastructure and referred to the continuing concerns about the ability of higher education institutions to recruit, retain and reward the best researchers. The funding announced in the White Paper and in the annual grant letter to the Higher Education Funding Council for England provides annual increases in higher education funding in England of 6 per cent. above inflation in each of the years to 2005–06.

Paul Farrelly: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what representations he has received from businesses on their preferred methods of contributing to more funding for teaching in universities. [137298]

Alan Johnson: None.

University Medical Schools

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills pursuant to his answer of 21 October, Official Report, column 502W, on university medical schools, if he will break down the sum of £126,092 by individual institution in receipt of such funding; how many of the full-time medical students were on a course that leads to registration with the General Medical Council and subsequent clinical practice as a doctor; and if he will break down such students on courses leading to registration with the GMC by university. [136730]

Alan Johnson: The sum referred to was allocated by the Higher Education Funding Council for England (HEFCE) which does not, as a matter of policy, publish sensitive student data at course level for individual institutions. Of the 480 full-time students under 21 in medical schools, only 81 are on a course that leads to registration with the General Medical Council and subsequent practice as a doctor.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Abuse

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many offences of child abuse there were in Romford in each year since 1997; [133479]

(2) how many muggings there were in Romford in each year since 1997. [133517]

Paul Goggins: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 14 October 2003, Official Report, column 18W.

ADD/ADHD

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what research his Department has commissioned into ADD/ADHD in young offender institutions; [136229]

(2) what meetings have been held between his Department and the Departments for Health and Education and Skills on ADD/ADHD among inmates of young offender institutions; [136230]

(3) what steps his Department has taken to assess the implications on behavioural difficulties of ADD/ADHD in young people in young offender institutions; [136231]

(4) how many young people were diagnosed with (a) ADD, (b) ADHD and prescribed Ritalin in (i) young offender institutions and (ii) secure training centres in each of the last five years. [136232]

Paul Goggins: The Youth Justice Board (YJB) has commissioned Manchester University to undertake research at six sites, four of which are young offenders' institutions, into the prevalence of mental ill health, including Attention Deficit Hyper Activity Disorder (ADHD), and effective mental health practice. The YJB has developed a Mental Health Screening Tool and guidance on effective mental health practice. It is also developing a mental health awareness training pack for use by teams working with young people who come into contact with the criminal justice system.

Officials in the Home Office and the Department of Health regularly discuss the whole range of health care issues in prisons and young offender institutions. The extent to which Attention Deficit Disorder (ADD)/ADHD may be a significant problem in individual prison establishments would be expected to emerge from the regular health needs assessments undertaken jointly by prisons and their national health service partners.

The Department of Health, the Prison Service and the YJB have created a new post of Programme Manager for Juvenile Health. This post will enable a greater focus on health issues such as ADD/ADHD, which are of potentially great significance in young offender institutions. The Government are investing significant additional resources, rising to around an extra £46 million in England by 2005–06, in prison health services over the next three years. Information is not collected centrally about the number of young people in young offenders' institutions and the juvenile secure estate who have been diagnosed with ADD/ADHD or the particular treatments prescribed for them.

Administrative Staff (Police)

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much of the budget for personnel within the London borough of Havering Police Force was spent on administrative employees in 2002–03. [136480]

Ms Blears: The Commissioner of the Metropolis informs me that £1,630,520 was spent on police staff in Havering in the financial year 2002–03. This was 12 per cent. of the total pay bill for the year.

Antisocial Behaviour

Clive Efford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent discussions there have been between his Department and the Office of the Solicitor General regarding the involvement of the Crown Prosecution Service in local antisocial behaviour strategies. [136165]

Ms Blears: My officials have liased directly, and have worked closely with the Crown Prosecution Service on the Anti-Social Behaviour Bill and the development of Anti-Social Behaviour Prosecutors.

Child Abuse

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent meetings he has held with the Association of Chief Police Officers on safeguards for historical child abuse investigations. [136261]

Ms Blears: In June 2003, following the debate on the Home Affairs Committee (HAC)'s report on "The Investigation of Past Cases of Abuse in Children's Homes," Discussions should be held between the Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO) and the Home Office to determine whether further safeguards could be built into the dip sampling process and to reconsider the issue of recording witness statements in video in these cases.

I am corresponding with ACPO regarding these matters.

Cognitive Skills Programme (Offenders)

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the Home Office Research Study on cognitive skills programmes and two-year reconviction rates for offenders. [136259]

Paul Goggins: The latest evaluation of prison-based cognitive skills programmes was reported in Home Office Research Finding 206 published in July 2003. The study found no difference in two-year reconviction rates for offenders who participated in programmes and a matched comparison group for the period 1996 to 1998. This study contrasted with Home Office Research Finding 161 published in 2002, which found a statistically significant reduction in two-year reconviction rates for programme participants between 1994 and 1996 compared to a matched comparison group. Both studies involved adult male prisoners.

The latest findings relate to a period when programmes were rapidly expanded and this may have affected their delivery and outcomes. Further research is needed to determine in greater detail which programmes are suitable for particular offenders. A third Home Office study of cognitive skills programmes in prisons for the period 1998 to 2000 is expected to be published before the end of the year. A Home Office study evaluating cognitive skills programmes in the community between 2000 and 2001 is expected to report reconviction outcomes before the end of 2004.

Compensation

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much compensation has been paid by (a) the police, (b) the Prison Service and (c) his Department in each year since 1990. [132737]

Ms Blears: The information requested is set out in the following table. However the information is available only for the last five years because the cost of interrogating records beyond that would be disproportionate.

The Home Office does not collate and hold information regarding compensation paid by individual police authorities and forces.

Police

The Police do not hold detailed information centrally and each area is responsible for its own compensation reporting.

Corporate Killing

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set out his timetable for introducing legislation to tackle corporate killing. [130923]

Paul Goggins: The Government has made a commitment to publish firm proposals for reforming the law on corporate manslaughter before the end of the year. A Bill will be introduced as soon as Parliamentary time allows.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to publish the draft Bill on corporate manslaughter; and if he will make a statement. [132581]

Paul Goggins: A Bill will be introduced as soon as Parliamentary time allows. The Government have made a commitment to publish draft proposals for reforming the law on corporate manslaughter before the end of the year.

Correspondence

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has received a copy of a letter dated 25 September from UK Visas, concerning the case of Jaswinder Singh,(ECR88274102S); and when he will inform the Foreign Office of the outcome of this case. [134922]

Mr. Mullin: I have been asked to reply.

UK Visas's letter of 25 September was not passed to my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary since this referred to an entry clearance matter, which is primarily a Foreign and Commonwealth Office matter.

It is not our practice to disclose details of individual entry clearance cases in a public forum. I am withholding the information requested about the outcome of this case under exemption 5 of Part 2 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information. However, I will shortly write to my hon. Friend with regard to this matter.

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will reply to the letter sent to him by the hon. Member for Yeovil on 7 October. [136571]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 5 November 2003]: My hon. Friend the Member for Slough (Fiona Mactaggart) wrote to hon. Member on 4 November 2003.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will reply to the letter of 2 September from the Member for Banff and Buchan to the hon. Member for Stretford and Urmston regarding his constituent, Mrs. N. Cook, of Ash Recruitment Services. [136758]

Beverley Hughes: I apologise to the hon. Member that he was not kept informed of progress in replying to his letter. Initially it was unclear whether the response should come from the Home Office, or the Foreign and Commonwealth Office (FCO). However, this letter has since been accepted by the FCO who will reply shortly.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will reply to the letter of 9 September from the Member for Banff and Buchan to the hon. Member for Stretford and Urmston concerning HIV testing of asylum seekers. [136760]

Beverley Hughes: My hon. Friend the Member for Slough (Fiona Mactaggart) wrote to the hon. Member on 6 November 2003.

Mr. Grieve: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will reply to the letters of 25 October 2001 and 17 July 2002 from the hon. Member for Beaconsfield. [137094]

Beverley Hughes: I replied to the hon. Member on 15 August 2002.

Crime Statistics

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the reasons for trends in robbery in Nottinghamshire between December 2001 and 2002. [136245]

Ms Blears: There was an increase in robbery across England and Wales in 2001–02, which occurred principally in urban areas. Nottinghamshire was one of the areas affected. According to Home Office research, the increase in robbery over this period is attributable to several factors, in particular, the rise in the number of young people robbing other young people allied to the sharp increase in mobile phone ownership providing easy targets for offenders. While Nottinghamshire was not one of the areas that the research drew data from, it aimed to consider a sufficiently large sample to gain an impression of the nature of robbery in different areas of England and Wales. On 14 October 2002, the Home Office published figures for the first six months of the Street Crime Initiative (April to September 2002), which showed that there had been 19 per cent. more robberies in Nottinghamshire in the six-month period April to September 2002 compared to the same period in 2001. By the end of the year, the increase had reduced to 3 per cent. (comparing the 12-month period with the previous year).

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what trends there have been in the level of street crime in the areas targeted by the Street Crime Initiative since December 2002. [136246]

Ms Blears: The Home Office Statistical Bulletin, "Crime in England and Wales: Quarterly Update to June 2003", published on 16 October 2003, shows that recorded robbery fell by an estimated seven per cent. in April to June 2003 compared with the same period in the previous year. This quarterly update does not give figures for individual forces. Data for individual forces will be available in the Home Office Statistical Bulletin for the financial year 2003–04, expected to be published in the summer of 2004.

The latest published figures for individual forces relate to 2002–03, published in July. I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave on 16 September 2003, Official Report, column 674W.

Crime Victims

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to develop a list of services to victims of crime which are available from the (a) probation and (b) prison service. [135489]

Paul Goggins: General information about the National Probation Service's (NPS) statutory victim contact scheme is already available on the probation service website at www.probation.homeoffice.gov.uk and in the Home Office leaflet: "Release of Prisoners: Information for victims of sexual or other violent offences". The leaflet is free and is available in a range of languages and is given, by the police, to victims who are eligible for the statutory scheme. The leaflet also contains information about the Prison Service Victims' Helpline and the services available from Victim Support. More detailed information about probation service work with victims can be obtained from local probation area offices. There are no plans to develop or publish a separate list of services for victims of crime available from either service as this information is already in the public domain.

Criminal Records Bureau

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department pursuant to his answer of 1 September 2003, Official Report, column 961W, how many disclosures were issued each month; and what the average length of time was it took each month to issue them. [129438]

Paul Goggins [holding answer 11 September 2003]: The information requested is shown in the table:

[1] No data

The figures show the Criminal Records Bureau's steadily improving performance in recent months as regards turnaround times and output. The increase in July's turnaround time figure can be attributed to a surge in applications during the last two weeks in June in advance of the increase in fees taking effect.

The Criminal Records Bureau received approximately 50,000 more applications than its usual intake during this period. While this increase in applications temporarily increased the turnaround times for applications, the Criminal Records Bureau has continued to meet its standard of service targets.

Custody (Deaths)

Chris Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what steps he is taking to ensure that families whose children have died in custody are informed of developments in investigations; [135788]

(2) what measures are in place to prevent death of young people in custody. [135790]

Paul Goggins: All deaths in prison custody are subject to a police investigation and a coroner's inquest before a jury, in which the family can be involved. The Prison Service conducts an internal investigation and is currently trialling new guidelines designed to incorporate independence and ensure greater participation of the family, for example, by commenting on the terms of reference of the investigation and having discussions with members of the investigatory team.

In the case of a juvenile death (15–17 year-old) it is the practice to invite the Youth Justice Board (YJB), social services and either the Chief Inspector of Prisons or the Prisons and Probation Ombudsman to advise the investigation. More generally I am considering whether from a future date the Prisons and Probation Ombudsman should provide independent scrutiny of all deaths in prison custody. Families may interact more readily with an independent investigator.

The Prison Service, in conjunction with the Youth Justice Board, Social Services Inspectorate, the Chief Inspector of Prisons and Social Services has just completed a review of "safeguarding" arrangements within the Juvenile Estate. Safeguarding is an inclusive approach to the care of juveniles in custody and includes suicide prevention and self-harm management anti-bullying, child protection, anti-discrimination and an overall holistic approach to care in custody. This Child Protection and Safeguards Review also considered the role of other statutory agencies in light of the High Court judgement by Lord Justice Munby in November 2002, which judged that the Children's Act 1989 applies to children in custody. The results of the review, which will include considerations and recommendations at strategic and local levels to further improve the service which can offered to juveniles in custody, are to be published in the New Year, and a copy placed in the House Library.

As you will be aware from my earlier Answer (133050 and 133052), the YJB has fully embraced the Prison Service safer custody strategy (which is applicable to all prisoners, regardless of gender and age). This strategy includes a series of inter-related projects to improve pre-reception, reception and induction arrangements; inter-agency information exchange; prisoner care; or the Prisons and Probation Ombudsman to advise the investigation. There is also a programme piloted in six establishments, including Feltham young offender institution which holds young offenders and juveniles, which has invested £21.69 million over the three year programme from April 2001 on improvements to areas such as reception and induction.

Chris Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will establish a departmental investigation into each death in custody of a young person in prison in the past ten years. [135789]

Paul Goggins: I have no current plans further to review these deaths. More generally I am considering whether from a future date the Prisons and Probation Ombudsman should provide independent scrutiny of all deaths in prison custody.

All deaths in prison custody are subject to a police investigation and a coroner's inquest before a jury. From August 1998 there has been a mandatory requirement for an internal investigation to be commissioned into all apparent self-inflicted deaths in custody or "non-natural" causes. A clinical audit is undertaken in respect of a natural causes death in custody. It is now the practice in respect of juvenile death (15–17 year olds) in prison to invite the Youth Justice Board and social services to participate in the investigation.

Custody Plus

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to implement Custody Plus, as outlined in the Criminal Justice Bill. [135996]

Paul Goggins: Final decisions about implementation have not been made.

Cyclists

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many pedal cyclists were prosecuted for failure to stop at traffic signals in the most recent 12 month period for which data are available. [136391]

Paul Goggins: There were 38 pedal cyclists proceeded against in England and Wales in 2001 for the offence of neglect of traffic directions (which will include failing to stop at traffic signals).

David Blaine

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the total cost was to (a) the Metropolitan Police and (b) the local authority of policing Mr.David Blaine's recent activities near Tower Bridge; and if he will make a statement. [134096]

Ms Blears: I understand from the Commissioner of Police for the Metropolis that the additional policing cost is currently estimated at £64,135. The final day's costs have still to be calculated. Over half the cost will be offset by income from a television company.

Southwark Council have informed me that all their costs, for parking, cleaning etc. will be met by income from the television company.

Departmental Energy Use

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much (a) electricity and (b) other energy his Department has used in each year since 1997 (i) in total and (ii) per square metre; what the projected use is for each of the following years for which forecasts are made; what plans he has to reduce usage; and if he will make a statement. [135055]

Fiona Mactaggart: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Under Secretary of State for the Environment, Food and Rural Affairs on 3 November 2003, Official Report, columns. 403W, which answers the first part of the question.

The Home Office is covered by the Government's target of reducing carbon emissions from buildings on the Government estate by 1 per cent. per annum. However, the prison service is anticipating that its energy consumption will rise over the next few years due to an increase in the prison population with a consequent increase in the size of the estate and the rollout of new IT systems throughout the prison service. They are also anticipating that increased education, training and other regime opportunities for prisoners and more intensive use of existing facilities will also cause consumption to rise.

Although the prison service is anticipating a rise in total consumption for the reasons outlined above, they are aiming at reducing their consumption per inmate. They have set emission targets for each establishment using benchmarks. Efforts to improve energy efficiency are concentrated on those establishments with the worst benchmarked energy performance with a view to all establishments achieving the best practice benchmark.

The core Department is currently planning a publicity campaign aimed at encouraging its office based staff to switch off lights, IT and office machinery when not in use. Environmental Management Systems are also being introduced across the estate and these will address issues such as energy efficiency. The new Home Office headquarters building includes a contractual requirement to achieve energy consumption at least 10 per cent. below the best practice benchmark for headquarters buildings in the Government's energy efficient best practice programme energy consumption guide.

Drug Addiction Treatment

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what funding is available for drug addiction treatment of (a) prisoners and (b) ex-prisoners in 2003–04; and what change has been recorded in reoffending rates for those who complete their treatment. [136057]

Paul Goggins: In 2003–04 £136,617,000 has been allocated to provide drug treatment for prisoners in England and Wales. It is not possible to differentiate between funding provided to treat ex-prisoners and others who access treatment in the community. The following table details the funding allocations for treating prisoners and those leaving custody. Research evidence shows that intensive drug treatment linked to good aftercare can result in reductions in reoffending of upto 11 per cent. compared with expected levels of offending.

Department	Funding	Usage
Prison Service	118,117,000	Detox, Rehab, TCs[1], Short Programmes, CARATs[2]
Department of Health	3,500,000	Improving Clinical Detoxification outcomes
Home Office	5,000,000	CJIP Throughcare and Aftercare of prisoners[3]
Youth Justice Board	10,000,000	ASSET[4], treatment, throughcare, aftercare
Total	136,617,000

[4] ASSET: generic assessment tool call to identify the factors that contribute to a young persons offending.

Drugs

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of (a) male and (b) female prisoners have been imprisoned for reoffending for drugs offences on more than three occasions in the last five years. [135654]

Paul Goggins: There is no information held centrally by the Home Office.

Female Rape

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what factors underlie the increase in female rape in the year leading up to March 2003. [136243]

Beverley Hughes: Sexual offences are significantly under-reported to the authorities. Police and Government action to support the victims of sexual assaults is likely to have increased the number of such incidents being brought to the attention of the police and therefore recorded by them. The introduction of the new National Crime Recording Standard (NCRS) for all forces in April 2002 has further increased the recording rate because it requires the police to record all reported offences even if there is insufficient evidence to prosecute. Trends in the number of recorded sexual offences does not, therefore, necessarily reflect the real experience of such crimes. The Government are taking action on a variety of fronts to reduce the actual incidence of rape.

Football (Policing Costs)

Kate Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the total cost was of policing football matches in the 2002–03 season; and how much of the total cost was paid by football clubs. [135751]

Ms Blears: This information is not collected centrally by the Home Office.

Kate Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects the working group on policing at football matches to report; and if he will list the membership of the working group. [135752]

Ms Blears: The working group set up to consider matters associated with the resources deployed, and cost of, policing football is still considering a range of complex issues. The group has met on a number of occasions but has not concluded its deliberations. It would be premature to speculate on the outcome but a final or interim report will be sought early next year.

The group's core membership is Home Office, Department for Culture, Media and Sport, Association of Chief Police Officers, Association of Police Authorities, Football Association, Football League, Premier League and Football Licensing Authority.

Football Matches (Policing)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the total cost of policing football matches in the 2002–03 season was in Lancashire; and how much of the cost was paid for by football clubs. [136981]

Ms Blears: This information is not collected centrally by the Home Office.

Foreign National Prisoners

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people held in Her Majesty's Prisons (a) are non-EU foreign nationals, (b) are seeking leave to remain in the United Kingdom and (c) have been a United Kingdom resident for less than 10 years. [136425]

Paul Goggins: At 30 April 2003, the population in Prison Service establishments in England and Wales who were known to be non-EU nationals was 4,513.

Information on the number seeking leave to remain in the United Kingdom or the number who have been a United Kingdom resident for less than 10 years is not held centrally.

Frozen Assets (Charities)

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the total value is of the accounts frozen by the Charity Commission on the basis of possible links of these charities to terrorist organisations. [136426]

Fiona Mactaggart: This is a matter for the Charity Commission as the Department responsible for the regulation of charities in England and Wales. The Chief Charity Commissioner will write to my hon. Friend and a copy of his reply will be placed in the Library.

Information Technology

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much the Prison Service spent on purchasing and upgrading IT equipment (a) in 2003 and (b) in 2002; and what this cost per prison employee. [135897]

Paul Goggins: The Prison Service entered into a contract with EDS in 2000 for the provision of a fully managed information technology and telephony service. Payment is based on the number of personal computers supported under the contract. The cost of the IT element only of the contract, together with the cost of non-IT activities, amounted to £32,094,111 in 2001–02 and £47,471,074 in 2002–2003. This is equivalent to £728 per average full time equivalent employee in 2001–2002 and £1,045 in 2002–2003.

Lancashire Constabulary

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what central Government spending was on the Lancashire Constabulary in each year since 1992. [134901]

Ms Blears: The information available is set out in the tables.

[2] Before 1995–96, when most Police Authorities became independent local authorities, revenue support grant and non-national domestic rates were paid as part of respective county council grant funding.

[3] The grant figures for 2001–02 and 2002–03 are not directly comparable, as the National Crime Squad and the National Criminal Intelligence Service became centrally rather than locally funded from 2002–3. Based on the new arrangements, the comparable grant figure for 2001–02 would have been £168,818,571.

In addition, Lancashire received the following funding in capital grant, including Airwave and the Premises Improvement Fund.

Leyhill Prison

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what changes have been made to the criteria for allocating inmates to HMP Leyhill; and if he will make a statement. [136450]

Paul Goggins [holding answer 4 November 2003]: Leyhill prison is an open training prison. Sentenced prisoners may be assessed for categorisation and allocation to open conditions either on initial categorisation following sentencing or during their sentence following a review of their security category.

Initial categorisation procedures consider: current offence, sentence length, previous offending, previous escapes or absconds and previous breaches of non-custodial disposals. For prisoners indicated for category D, consideration is also given to issues such as: current drug use: any previous breaches of bail; the circumstances of the offence and vulnerability to bullying or coercion.

Prisoners have their security category reviewed at regular intervals. Prisoners must be able to demonstrate that their risk is reduced sufficiently to warrant recategorisation to conditions of lower security. Where category D is indicated, consideration is given to any other issues which might suggest that the prisoner is otherwise unsuitable for open conditions.

Revised initial categorisation and recategorisation forms were introduced in April 2003 and their use is being monitored. However, the procedures detailed above remain unchanged. No changes have been made locally to the acceptance criteria at Leyhill prison.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the visits within the UK made by Ministers in his Department in each of the last five years, broken down by constituency. [136951]

Fiona Mactaggart: Detailed information for all Ministers in respect of UK travel is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. All travel is undertaken fully in accordance with the rules set out in the Ministerial Code and Travel by Ministers, copies of which are in the Library.

Mobile Phone Theft

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of reported street crime involved the theft of mobile phones in each of the London boroughs in 2002–03. [136473]

Ms Blears: The Home Office does not centrally collect or collate national statistics on the numbers of mobile phone thefts as mobile phone theft is not a separate crime category. Mobile phone theft crime figures are included within the crime categories of robbery, snatch theft and theft from the person.

Home Office Research ("Mobile Phone Theft", HORS 235) published in January 2002 estimated that mobile phones were stolen in 28 per cent. of all robberies in 2000–01. The Metropolitan Police Service estimate that around 50 per cent. of street crime in London involved the theft of a mobile phone.

National Probation Service

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many probation staff were in post on 30 June, broken down by grade; and how many vacancies there were in the National Probation Service on the same date. [135998]

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which probation areas in England and Wales expect a budget deficit for the current financial year; and what staffing consequences he expects as a result. [136000]

Paul Goggins: The following probation areas in England and Wales are currently forecasting a budget deficit in excess of one per cent. of the budget allocation:

Cumbria, Gloucestershire, Lancashire, Northamptonshire, Staffordshire, Surrey, Teesside, London and South Wales.

The National Probation Directorate is currently in discussion with these areas and they are being asked to explain the reasons for the forecast budget deficits in order that action can be taken to reduce or eliminate the deficits.

Other areas, which are currently forecasting a deficit below one per cent. of their budget allocation, will be expected to manage their operations in such a way that any deficit is avoided.

Overall, the probation areas are expected to spend within budget.

No staffing consequences are expected.

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many trainee probation officers were appointed in each of the last five years; and how many left (a) less than 12 months after appointment, (b) between one and two years after appointment and (c) between two and three years after appointment. [136003]

Paul Goggins: In the last five years a total of 3,269 trainee probation officers have been appointed with a further 159 due to start in January 2004 as part of the 2003 recruitment process. This will make a total of 3,374.

A total of 268 trainees were recruited in 1999; 282 in 2000; 931 in 2001; 780 in 2002; 1,113 will be the final total of the 2003 recruitment of which 954 have already commenced training.

Of the 3,269 trainees who have so far commenced or completed the training a total of 125 (3.8 per cent.) left less than 12 months after appointment and 45 (1.4 per cent.) left between one and two years after appointment.

Within the past five years a total of 1,481 trainees have completed the programme and become newly qualified officers: the most up to date information shows that of these 35 (2.4 per cent.) left the probation service between two and three years after appointment.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what resources he will provide to the National Probation Service to help it meet its obligations in the new sentencing plans under the Criminal Justice Bill. [136256]

Paul Goggins: Final decisions about both the timing of implementation of the sentencing measures in the Criminal Justice Bill, and the allocation of supporting financial provision to the National Probation Service (NPS) beyond the current financial year, have not yet been made.

The major resource demand for the NPS will arise from the implementation of custody plus. The NPS has begun recruiting additional trainee probation officers to its two-year training programme. We have allocated £11.5 million in this financial year to support this capacity building.

New Prisons

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has obtained funds from the Treasury to enable him to commence the construction of new prisons. [135994]

Paul Goggins: The Treasury have provided funding to acquire at least two sites in 2004–05 for the future development of large multi-function prisons.

A further 1,290 prison places will also be provided through the new prisons currently under construction at Ashford (near Heathrow) and at Peterborough.

Passport Charges

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, (1) when it was decided to change the date of the recent increase of passport charges; [136744]

(2) how many people have complained about the earlier than advertised rise in passport charges; [136745]

(3) Department how much he estimates will have been generated in extra revenue from the rise in passport charges on 2 October rather than 1 November. [136747]

(4) how many people he estimates have been affected by the earlier than advertised rise in passport charges. [136748]

Beverley Hughes: The new fees that became effective on 2 October 2003 were set by the Consular Fees Order 2003, a statutory instrument which was approved by the Privy Council on 17 July and approved by Parliament on 18 July 2003.

Since the announcement was made, 774 complaints have been received at United Kingdom Passport Service (UKPS) Headquarters and the seven Regional Offices via telephone, fax, letter, e-mail and complaint forms submitted at our counters.

The effect of implementing the rise in passport fees on 2 October as opposed to 1 November is estimated to be £2.6 million additional revenues.

Unfortunately we have no data which enables us to determine how many people have been affected by the earlier than advertised rise in passport charges;

Between 2 October 2003 and 2 November 2003, UKPS has issued 407,800 passports. The number of complaints received therefore represent approximately 0.189 per cent. of the total of all passports issued since the fee increase.

Persistent Offenders

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his Department's initiatives for tackling persistent offenders. [136244]

Paul Goggins: The Persistent Offender Scheme came into effect in April 2003. It is an obligatory component of Local Criminal Justice Boards' action plans to increase the number of offences brought to justice, aimed at targeting a small group of prolific offenders who are responsible for a disproportionate amount of crime. Areas have devised their own premium service protocols which include elements of proactive policing, improved investigations and case management, priority court listings, and strategies for rehabilitation. As well as targeting core persistent offenders, who are over 18 and have been convicted of six or more recordable offences in the last year, as part of their wider crime reduction strategies areas are also using the scheme flexibly to target persistent offenders defined on the basis of local intelligence.

The scheme is supported by an information system which is shared between criminal justice agencies, enabling persistent offenders to be tracked as their cases progress through the criminal justice system, and attrition points in the system to be identified and targeted for intervention.

In addition, the Government have given the courts new secure remand and tagging powers for 12 to 16-year-olds who repeatedly offend on bail, funded the Youth Justice Board's intensive supervision and surveillance programmes for the most prolific young offenders and renewed its commitment to maintain the time from arrest to sentence for persistent young offenders at or below 71 days.

Police

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police (a) constables, (b) sergeants and (c) inspectors transferred from the Kent Police Force to the Metropolitan Police Force in 2003–04. [135795]

Ms Blears: I am told by the Acting Chief Constable Kent (Mr. Robert Ayling QPM) that, between April and November 2003, 26 constables and two sergeants transferred voluntarily from Kent Constabulary to the Metropolitan Police Service.

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much was spent by the police in each of the last three years on (a) stationery and (b) IT equipment. [135869]

Ms Blears: The information is as follows:

(a) Information on police authority stationery purchases is not held centrally.

(b) Expenditure by police authorities on IT equipment is set out in the following table.

Capital expenditure on information communication and technology[1] (England and Wales)

2001–02	87,655
2003–04	203,826

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will increase the budget for Surrey Police for financial year 2004–05. [137119]

Ms Blears: I shall announce details of the provisional police funding settlement for 2004–05 later this month. It is for Surrey Police Authority to determine its budget for next year.

Police

Mr. Flook: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers there were in each basic command unit of Avon and Somerset constabulary in each of the last five years. [134553]

Ms Blears: Avon and Somerset Constabulary had 2,989 officers on 31 March 1997, which has increased by 315 to 3,304 in August this year, a record number.

Information on police officer numbers for each Basic Command Unit (BCU) is only available for March 2002 and 2003 and is set out in the table.

Avon and Somerset Constabulary—Number of officers allocated to Basic Command Units

Bath and North-east Somerset	228	224
Central Bristol	367	378
North Bristol	263	255
North Somerset	203	213
Somerset East	255	257

Mr. Djanogly: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what in-service death benefits are payable to members of the Police. [136195]

Ms Blears: Death in-service benefits include a lump sum ranging from a death grant for all in-service deaths to a death gratuity for any death as a result of an injury in the execution of duty, where death occurs within one year of the injury. The lump sum death grant is twice the annual value of the officer's pensionable pay. The death grant will be the lesser of either five times the annual value of the officer's pensionable pay or four times his total remuneration during the last 12 months as an officer and his or her total pension contributions for that period.

These lump sums are payable in addition to a widow or widower's pension and any other dependant's benefits where applicable. The surviving spouse's pension will range from half the officer's pension, had he or she been medically retired and not died in service, to a special award of 45 per cent. of the officer's average pensionable pay where death is as a result of an injury in the execution of duty. The special award will be augmented to 50 per cent. where death occurred in particular circumstances such as in the course of trying to save another's life.

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to improve the performance of the police forces that have come bottom of the league tables. [136414]

Ms Blears: The police performance monitors, which were published on 21 October 2003 are not league tables, but show performance across key areas of policing for each force in England and Wales, and show a comparison with similar forces.

Our regular monitoring of police performance enables us to identify those forces whose performance needs to be improved. Her Majesty's Inspector Constabulary (HMIC) and the Police Standards Unit are currently working with a number of forces, whose performance is significantly below the average for their most similar forces, to help them address performance issues. This can involve assistance with performance management systems, improved use of forensics processes across a force, or more targeted assistance. This could take the form of the establishment of a policing priority area, or specific projects targeting an individual crime, such as burglary.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what his policy is on (a) audio and (b) visual recording of police interviews. [136262]

Ms Blears: The information requested is as follows:

(a) Section 60 of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 provides for the mandatory (audio) tape recording of interviews of persons suspected of the commission of criminal offences. Code E of the Codes of Practice issued under the above mentioned Act dictates the procedures through which the police should carry out this task. It became mandatory to tape record interviews in police stations in England and Wales using the procedures outlined in Code E on 1 January 1992.

The Terrorism Act 2000 makes separate provision for a Code of Practice for the tape recording of interviews of those arrested under Section 41 or detained under Schedule 7 of the Act.

(b) A pilot has been undertaken in five police forces (Metropolitan, Essex, Hampshire, Kent and West Mercia) to test all aspects of visually recording suspects' interviews. The pilot started in May 2002, except in Essex who started in October 2002, and they all finished on 31 October 2003. A team of Evaluators, from London School of Economics (LSE) and the University of Kent, are preparing a report on the project but this will not be with the Home Office till the end of December. However, from 1 November 2003 visual recording may be undertaken on a discretionary basis and it is a matter for each force (including those not involved in the pilot) to decide which types of cases should be recorded in this way. Police officers have been told that regard should still be paid to Code F (Visual Recording of Suspect Interviews) of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984, when such interviews are undertaken.

Guidance on conducting interviews with vulnerable or intimidated witnesses (VIWs) is set out in 'Achieving Best Evidence: Guidance for Vulnerable or Intimidated Witnesses, including Children'. This guidance is intended to assist those conducting video recorded interviews with VIWs as well as giving guidance to those who are tasked with preparing and supporting such witnesses throughout the criminal justice process. The document can be found at www.homeoffice.gov.uk/justice/legalprocess/witnesses/index .

Paddy Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers there were in (a) England and (b) Nottinghamshire on (i) 1 April 1997, (ii) 1 April 2003 and (iii) 30 September 2003. [135622]

Ms Blears [holding answer 3 November 2003]: On 31 August (latest date for which figures are available) there was record police strength in England of 126,949, an increase of 8,490 since March 1997. Nottinghamshire Constabulary also had record police strength of 2,468, an increase of 145 since March 1997.

In England and Wales on 31 August there were 136,386 police officers, again a record.

In England alone there was also 59,403 police (support) staff on 31 March 2003 (latest date available), an increase of 8,847 since 1997. In Nottinghamshire there was 1,180, an increase of 177 since March 1997. Additionally Nottinghamshire had 10 Community Support Officers (CSO) at the end of August with plans for 45 CSOs by March 2004.

The table sets out the figures for the years requested.

Dan Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many police officers there were in (a) Avon and Somerset constabulary and (b) Bath and North East Somerset Basic Command Unit in (i) 1997, (ii) 2002 and (iii) 2003; [136320]

(2) how many burglaries there were in (a) Avon and Somerset constabulary and (b) Bath and North East Somerset Basic Command Unit in (i) 1997, (ii) 2002 and (iii) 2003; [136321]

(3) how many vehicle crimes there were in Avon and Somerset in (a) 1997, (b) 2002 and (c) 2003; [136322]

(4) how many robberies there were in Avon and Somerset in (a) 1997, (b) 2002 and (c) 2003; [136323]

Beverley Hughes: The available information is given in the tables.

Number of police officers in Avon and Somerset Police Force Area (PFA) as at 31 March:

	Number
1997	[1]2,989
2003	3,149

[1] Excludes staff on career breaks or maternity/paternity leave (comparable with previously published figures).

Details on the number of police officers at Basic Command Unit (BCU) are not available centrally.

BCD data are available from the financial year 1999–2000, onwards. Details on the number of total burglary, and other burglary offences, at BCD are not available centrally.

Number of vehicle crime[1] offences recorded by the police:

Avon and Somerset PFA

	Number
1997	41,715
2001–02	40,791
2002–03	36,249

Number of robbery offences recorded by the police:

Avon and Somerset PFA

	Number
1997	1,562

There was a change of counting rules for recorded crime on 1 April 1998, which had the effect of increasing the number of crimes counted. Numbers of offences for years before and after this date are therefore not directly comparable.

The National Crime Recording Standard (NCRS) was introduced across England and Wales in April 2002. Some police forces adopted the standard prior to this date. Avon and Somerset police force introduced the standard in October 2000. Broadly, the NCRS had the effect of increasing the number of crimes recorded by the police. Therefore, following the introduction of the standard, numbers of recorded crimes are not comparable with previous years.

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many vehicles are owned and used by the police within the constituency of Romford. [136479]

Ms Blears: The Commissioner of the Metropolis informs me that the information requested is not available for solely the constituency of Romford. In the borough of Havering, which covers Romford, the police service has a total of 31 vehicles.

Prisons

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the number of prisoners who share a cell designed for one person. [133865]

Paul Goggins: As at 30 September 2003, 22.5 per cent. of the prisoner population were sharing two to a cell designed for one. This Equates to 16,552 prisoners. The data are provisional and subject to validation by establishments.

The Prison Service keeps the impact of population pressures—including overcrowding on prisoners in all prisons—under careful review. The Government's programme of building and refurbishment will increase the Prison Service's capacity to 78,700 by 2006, including the provision of around 3,000 additional places in existing prisons by 2006. In addition, a new unit opened recently at Birmingham prison, six months ahead of schedule, and this will offer a further 452 places.

A further 1,290 places will be provided by the new prisons currently under construction at Ashford (near Heathrow) and Peterborough, scheduled to open in June 2004 and March 2005 respectively.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners were in (a) open and (b) closed prisons in each of the last five years, broken down by sex. [135653]

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the effect of the Prison Service's strategies to reduce suicides in reducing the number of self-inflicted deaths. [136257]

Paul Goggins: Reducing the rate of self-inflicted deaths in prison establishments is an essential part of the Prison Service's decency agenda and a priority for Ministers. The three-year safer custody strategy to develop policies and practices to reduce prisoner suicide and manage self-harm in prisons, implemented from April 2001, is currently under review. Account is being taken of emerging findings from practitioners and in-house and external researchers, and the views of a wide range of practitioners and external interests. I will be announcing the results of this work and next steps in spring 2004.

A team from the University of Cambridge is measuring the impact of the Safer Locals Programme (essentially in six pilot establishments) on the quality of prison life, and investigating possible links between these measures and rates of suicide and self-harm. Interim results indicate that the focus of the strategy on the early period in custody, on local prisons, on high-risk prisoners with mental health and drug problems in particular, are the right ones.

A team from Manchester and London Universities is also evaluating elements of the Safer Locals Programme, particularly a workstream called the Care of At-Risk Prisoners project, health care provision, and detoxification services. Additionally, researchers from the Jill Dando Institute of Crime Science were commissioned to evaluate the impact of safer cells on suicide and self-harm. The evaluation included observations, interviews and focus groups with prisoners and staff in six prisons. The report, presented in August 2003, concluded that the safer cells programme has much to commend it and recommended that the programme continue.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of reasons other than overcrowding for the suicide rate in prisons. [136258]

Paul Goggins: The rate of self-inflicted deaths in prisons was 147.4 per 100,000 prisoners (at the end of 2002–03). This high rate appears to be mainly a product of two factors: greater throughput of prisoners at a time of population increase and greater (but not easily quantifiable) numbers of prisoners in high risk categories. The effects of overcrowding and throughput include more prisoners being located further from home, thereby affecting their access to familial/social support; prisons handling large and variable numbers of prisoners, often arriving late in the day, which reduces the time staff can spend with individual prisoners on care and risk assessment; and an increase in the length of time prisoners are locked in their cells, rather than engaged in purposeful activity.

Emerging research from the evaluation of the Prison Service's safer custody strategy suggests that the suicide rate in an establishment may correlate with levels of psychological distress. This distress is affected by prisoners' perceptions of safety, their experiences of entering custody and their level of psychological, emotional and physical well-being upon entry to the establishment.

The general prison population contains a very large number of prisoners who, when they enter custody, are struggling to cope with a wide range of difficult issues, including drug and/or alcohol abuse, family background and relationship problems, social disadvantage or isolation, previous sexual or physical abuse, and mental health problems. Studies suggest that 90 per cent. of all prisoners have shown evidence of at least one of the following: personality disorder, psychosis, neurosis, alcohol misuse and drug dependence. These factors increase their likelihood of self-harm. It has been found that 27 per cent. of men and 44 per cent. of women on remand report having attempted suicide in their lifetime.

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the estimated expenditure for the (a) prison and (b) probation services will be for financial year 2004–05. [135995]

Paul Goggins: The budgets for 2004–05 have not yet been finalised. Table two and three in section 6 of the Home Office Annual Departmental Report 2003 provide details of the Home Office resource and capital spending plans, which include figures for both the prison and probation services in 2004–05.

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners were held in the north west in each year since 1992. [134900]

Paul Goggins: The population held in Prison Service establishments in the north west region from 1992 to 2003 is given in the following table.

Total prison population, north west region, as at 30 June

	Number of prisoners
1992	5,397

Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act

Brian White: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what statutory investigatory powers the Department has; which ones will be superseded by use of the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act 2000; and what plans he has for removing these legacy powers. [136119]

Beverley Hughes: Immigration officers have powers of arrest and search under the Immigration Act 1971 as amended by Immigration and Asylum Act 1999. These powers will not be superseded by the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act 2000 (RIPA) which provides for the regulated use by public authorities of specific investigatory powers including the acquisition of communications data (disclosure of information about communications). Subject to approval by Parliament of the Regulation of Investigatory Powers (Communications Data) Order 2003 the Immigration Service will use RIPA to acquire communications data.

Riot (Damages) Act

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what payments were made to each police authority in each year since 1997 under the Riot (Damages) Act 1886. [136544]

Ms Blears: Liability for payments under the Riot (Damages) Act 1886 (RDA) rests with police authorities. Police authorities normally pay claims made under the RDA from within their existing resources. Police authorities may request special grant from the Home Office to help meet the cost of payments made under the RDA. There have been no payments of special grant for this purpose since 1997.

Information about the settlement by police authorities of claims made under the RDA has not been regularly collected centrally. The 'Consultation Document on Options for the Review of the RDA', which was published in July, estimated that £928,000 had been paid by police authorities since 1995. This is not a comprehensive figure as some RDA claims are still under negotiation by police authorities.

Further details of claims settled since 1995 are set out in Annex A to the Consultation Document, copies of which have been placed in the Library.

Road Safety

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many convictions there have been of people using a mobile telephone while driving in each year since 1997. [130750]

Paul Goggins: Currently there is no specific offence of driving a motor vehicle while using a mobile telephone. Such conduct may however amount or contribute to another offence. In the main prosecutions and convictions in such circumstances are likely to be for driving without due care and attention or not being in proper control of a vehicle.

From 1 December 2003 the specific offence of driving while using a hand-held mobile telephone will be introduced under a new regulation to be added to the Road Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations 1986.

Romford Police Station

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many police officers are based at Romford police station; [136482]

(2) how many administrative workers are employed by the Metropolitan Police within the constituency of Romford. [136483]

Ms Blears: Romford is part of the borough of Havering. I am told by the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis (Sir John Stevens) that at the end of August Havering had 353 police officers and 74 police (support) staff.

The deployment of police personnel within the borough is an operational matter for the Borough Commander. Information about the number of officers and police staff deployed at Romford police station or the Romford constituency is not collected centrally. Deployment of resources will reflect operational pressures across the borough.

Rural Policing

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on rural policing in (a) North Yorkshire and (b) New Earswick. [134843]

Ms Blears: We need effective policing arrangements in all areas, urban and rural. The annual £30 million Rural Policing Fund has been specifically provided to increase the visibility and accessibility of police in rural areas. North Yorkshire Police receive over £2 million or 6.7 per cent. of the fund. I understand that this has been used to fund 60 additional officers as well as additional scenes of crime staff and support staff. North Yorkshire now has 37 Community Support Officers who patrol across the force area. They help to tackle low-level crime, public disorder and to provide public reassurance in both urban and rural communities.

The policing of New Earswick is a matter for the Chief Constable. The force have drawn valuable lessons from a recent report evaluating a community policing initiative in New Earswick (Great Expectations: Contracted community policing in New Earswick).

Sentencing Guidelines Council

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what powers he has to give directions to the Sentencing Guidelines Council. [136260]

Paul Goggins: Subject to the successful passage of the relevant provisions in the Criminal Justice Bill, the Home Secretary of State will have the power, at any time, to propose to the Council that sentencing or allocation guidelines be framed or revised by the Council.

Special Branch

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Special Branch constables were employed by Humberside police on 1 September in each of the last three years. [136470]

Ms Blears: It is not our policy to disclose details of Special Branch deployments at force level in the interests of national security, as to do so could compromise operations.

Special Constables

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many special constables there are in England and Wales. [136415]

Ms Blears: The latest police service strength figures for the year ending 31 March 2003 were published on 1 October 2003 in Home Office Statistical Bulletin 11/03. The number of special constables in England and Wales was 11,037.

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many special constables there were in London in each year since 1997. [136523]

Ms Blears: The number of special constables in the Metropolitan Police Service and the City of London Special Constabularies since 1997 are set out as follows:

31 March	Metropolitan Police Service	City of London	Total for both London Forces
1997	1,714	86	1,800
1998	1,282	76	1,358
1999	1,138	64	1,202
2000	758	56	814
2001	774	43	817
2003	692	42	734

We are working with stakeholders to increase the size and effectiveness of the Special Constabulary. In particular, we are rolling out Home Office/Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO) 'Good Practice Guidance'; we are also arranging a second national specials weekend to help raise the profile of specials and the invaluable work they do; and we are assisting forces to boost their capacity to recruit and manage specials effectively.

Staff Turnover

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what his policy is on the turnover rate among senior staff within the Department. [136239]

Fiona Mactaggart: Senior positions in the Home Office are filled through either open competition or internal promotion boards. The Department's policy is to attract, develop and retain good senior staff. That increasingly means providing development opportunities for senior staff within and outside Whitehall. This will increase the turnover of such staff but the overall impact of this policy on the Department's business will be overwhelmingly positive.

Thames Valley Police

Tony Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans his Department has to provide funding for Thames Valley Police Force to boost retention and recruitment including (a) the offer of free travel and (b) to reduce the pay differential between that force and the Metropolitan Police Force. [136022]

Ms Blears: Government policy is to support the recruitment and retention of public servants in the South East through the Communities Plan announced by my right hon. friend the Deputy Prime Minister (John Prescott) on 21 October, with generous provisions for key worker housing.

Free travel is a matter for the Thames Valley Police Authority.

There are no plans to change the system of regional allowances for officers in the South East and London.

Television Licence/Motor Insurance

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many successful prosecutions there were of people resident in (a) Sunderland and (b) Tyne and Wear for (i) non-payment of the television licence fee and (ii) driving without motor insurance in each year since 2000; and what penalties were handed out in each case. [136517]

Paul Goggins: The available information is contained in the table.

Statistics for 2002 will be published in December.

Wine

Mr. Liddell-Grainger: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the total holding of wine of the Department is; and what the total value is. [136489]

Fiona Mactaggart: Ministers and the Permanent Secretary maintain drinks cupboards for official hospitality only. There is no other holding of wine in the Department.

Witness Intimidation

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps are being taken to ensure that witnesses to crime are able to give evidence without fear of intimidation. [134053]

Paul Goggins: The Government recognise that the intimidation of witnesses is an important issue that needs to be addressed. Witness intimidation in criminal proceedings is an offence under section 51 of the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 and intimidation in civil proceedings is an offence under the Criminal Justice and Police Act 2001. The Home Office has advised the police to take immediate action against offenders in cases of intimidation or harassment of witnesses.

The Government published "Tackling Witness Intimidation—An Outline Strategy" on 15 May 2003. It was issued to all Local Criminal Justice Boards and Crime and Disorder Reduction Partnerships and is available on Criminal Justice System online. A copy has been placed in the Library.

The police, the Crown Prosecution Service and the judiciary have all received specialist training to help them be more responsive to the needs of intimidated witnesses. The guidance on anti-social behaviour orders stresses the importance of offering support to witnesses and victims when applications for such orders are made.

There needs to be adequate protection for witnesses in the courtroom to ensure that they can give their best evidence. Most courts now have separate waiting rooms for witnesses, reducing the possibility of their coming into contact with the defendant, or those closely acquainted with him or her, and thus reducing the risk of intimidation. Increased funding for Victim Support has enabled its Witness Service to be extended to all Crown court centres and magistrates courts in England and Wales. This means that there should always be someone at court to support witnesses who may feel intimidated or worried.

The Government have also introduced a range of special measures to assist intimidated witnesses to give their evidence in court, including the use of TV links, screens around the witness box and clearing the public gallery so that evidence can be given in private. The Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 provides the legislative framework for these measures and a phased implementation programme began on 24 July 2002.

In exceptional cases, where there are real and substantial grounds for fear and the Crown would not be able to proceed without the witness's evidence, the judge may allow the identity of a credible witness to be concealed entirely from the defendant. In taking this decision, the court must balance the need for protection of the witness against the risk of unfairness to the defendant and must satisfy itself that the interests of the accused would not be unduly prejudiced.

These court-based measures are complemented by community-based measures, ensuring that support is available to witnesses where they live. Co-ordinated action by a number of agencies, for example in carrying out an initial risk assessment of a witnesses' vulnerability to intimidation, is key.

The Government, in conjunction with the Housing Corporation and the Mayor of London, are today launching a scheme which will give intimidated witnesses the option of fast track relocation within the social housing sector. The Government recognise that, while the aim should be that perpetrators of crime and anti-social behaviour should be those who are moved, there will be instances where the risk to the witness is so great that this option needs to be available.

Young Offenders

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the most recent two-year reoffending rate was for offenders leaving young offender institutions. [135865]

Paul Goggins: Reconviction is used as a proxy measure for reoffending. The latest two-year 'un-adjusted' reconviction rates for young offenders discharged from custody was 73 per cent., for those released in 1998. The rates in the preceding years were 71 per cent., 70 per cent., 71 per cent., 72 per cent., 72 per cent., 71 per cent., 74 per cent., 75 per cent., 76 per cent., 75 per cent. and 75 per cent. between 1987 and 1997 respectively. These rates are published in "Prison Statistics—England and Wales 2001".

Ian Lucas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many young offenders from North Wales below the age of 15 years who were sentenced to custody were not immediately placed in a local authority secure community home in the last three years for which figures are available. [136017]

Paul Goggins: The Youth Justice Board is responsible for the commissioning and purchasing of secure accommodation for under 18s and for the placement of individual offenders.

In the three years to 31 October 2003, all sentenced young offenders of under 15 years of age were immediately placed either in a local authority secure children's home or in a secure training centre.

Ian Lucas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department where young offenders below the age of 15 from North Wales are placed if sentenced to custody and no local authority community home place is available. [136019]

Paul Goggins: The Youth Justice Board for England and Wales is responsible for the commissioning and purchasing of secure accommodation for under 18s and for the placement of individual offenders in the juvenile secure estate. Where no place is available in a local authority secure children's home, a sentenced young offender from England or Wales below the age of 15 is placed in any of the three Secure Training Centres—Rainsbrook, Medway or Hassockfield.

Mr. Grieve: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons are detained in young offenders' institutions claiming to be aged between 15 to 17-years-old whose age has not been independently verified; and if he will make a statement. [136251]

Paul Goggins: The courts are responsible for establishing the ages of young people who appear before them. Custodial establishments do not repeat the checks courts make. We are not aware of any sentences inappropriate to a person's age having been passed; if such a case was found it would be referred to the court.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many under 18s were in gaol in each year since 1997; and how many were in youth detention centres and other correctional establishments. [132939]

Paul Goggins: The information on the number of under 18s who were in Prison Service establishments, Local Authority Secure Children's Homes and Secure Training Centres is given in the table.

CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

Domestic Violence

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what assessment the Government has made of whether to develop a systematic mandatory training scheme on domestic violence for (a) judges and magistrates, (b) expert witnesses, (c) CAFCASS and (d) police officers; and if he will make a statement. [136395]

Mr. Leslie: The information is as follows:

Judges and Magistrates

My Department continues to work closely with the Judicial Studies Board (JSB) to develop training for judges and magistrates that takes account of the growing body of knowledge about domestic violence.

All judges on first appointment to part-time judicial office and all judges newly authorised to hear family cases are required to attend a relevant JSB residential induction seminar. Both full-time and part-time judges attend residential continuation seminars every three years in each jurisdiction they exercise. All induction and continuation seminars include discussion of domestic violence issues. Family law induction and continuation seminars include such issues in virtually every session within the seminar programmes.

Many judges in addition attend locally organised seminars. In 2002 the topic for the one-day Circuit Criminal Seminars, which are attended by all full and part-time judges sitting in the Crown court, was Domestic Violence.

The training of Magistrates is the statutory responsibility of individual Magistrates courts committees. Recently, the JSB in conjunction with the Magistrates Association produced a training package for magistrates, specifically on domestic violence. The objectives for the pack are that by the end of the course delegates will: be able to define domestic violence; recognise when domestic violence features in a case; and describe how that recognition of domestic violence will impact on the conduct and disposal of a case and the treatment of any vulnerable individuals involved.

The programme of training for trainers began at the end of October. Magistrates courts committees will be encouraged to train their magistrates and legal advisers as soon as possible.

Expert Witnesses

The Home Office supports, and part funds, the work of the Council for the Registration of Forensic Practitioners (CRFP). The CRFP has rigorous procedures to ensure those persons admitted to the register have appropriate training, experience and expertise to act as experts. Currently there is no training, or requirement for training, in domestic violence involved in CRFP registration as it is not of direct relevance to the majority of registered practitioners.

CAFCASS

CAFCASS's training programme for Family Court Advisors includes a module on domestic violence. This will be put into operation for the first time in November and December 2003. CAFCASS is also currently developing a policy on domestic violence, which will include guidance and procedures for staff. This will be available in 2004 and CAFCASS will review staff training needs with regard to the finalised policy.

Police

The Centrex 'Policing Responses to Domestic Violence' modular training programme was launched in 2002 and has been substantially developed and updated. The training programme was distributed to police force training managers and nominated domestic violence officers in August 2003. The Policing Responses to Domestic Violence E-learning material CD-Rom was launched in March 2003.

We will continue to identify and respond, as a matter of priority, to the needs of those suffering from domestic violence.

Cleveland Coroner

Vera Baird: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs when the Department expects to announce the outcome of the inquiry into the conduct of the Cleveland Coroner. [136570]

Mr. Leslie [holding answer 4 November 2003]: His Honour Judge Milford QC, who is conducting the investigation into Coroner Sheffield's conduct, has informed the Department for Constitutional Affairs that he expects to submit his report by the end of November 2003. My noble Friend the Secretary of State and Lord Chancellor will wish to give the report his detailed consideration.

While my noble Friend will be keen to bring this matter to as swift a conclusion as possible, it is not possible to set a timetable for announcing the outcome at this stage.

Court Buildings

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs if he will make a statement on the future of the court buildings in (a) Lancashire and (b) Chorley. [136980]

Mr. Leslie: In Lancashire, as elsewhere, it is our intention to make better use of the joint estate (Court Service and Magistrates' Court Service). Where county court operations can be moved from unsatisfactory buildings into more modern magistrates courts they will be, so improving facilities for users and making efficiency savings. It is too early to say specifically where in Lancashire this will happen until feasibility studies have been completed but Chorley may be affected. The Lancashire Magistrates' Courts Committee has no plans to close any of the courts for which it is responsible.

A new court complex is being considered for Blackpool to house the county court and possibly the Magistrates' Court. The current buildings have inadequate facilities, are in poor condition and Blackpool County Court could benefit from additional court rooms.

The current buildings that house Blackburn County Court and Blackburn Magistrates' Court are recognised to be outdated. There are proposals to provide a new building in Blackburn to house both courts.

Fatal Accidents

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what plans he has to change the level of damages payable for bereavement in fatal accident claims; and if he will make a statement. [136827]

Mr. Lammy: The level of bereavement damages was increased from £7,500 to £10,000 with effect from 1 April 2002. The Government are currently considering how best to provide for further changes in future.

HEALTH

Residential Care

Mr. John Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether self-funded residents in care homes whose income is above the maximum amount that qualifies for pension credit will receive a flat rate of savings credit. [137133]

Dr. Ladyman: Self-funders in care homes do not receive any savings disregard. The savings disregard only applies to council supported residents. Self funders in care homes would receive the exact level of pension credit to which they were entitled.

Age-related Macular Degeneration

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people in the United Kingdom have been diagnosed with age-related macular degeneration in the last 12 months. [136043]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Information on the number of people with age related macular degeneration is not collected centrally. However, a study sponsored by the Macular Disease Society in 2001 estimated that there were 182,000 people with age related macular degeneration with a best eye visual acuity below that judged appropriate for certification as blind or partially sighted.

Ambulance Services

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the most recent ambulance response times within the constituency of Romford are; and what the figures are for (a) nearby population centres in Essex and (b) other London boroughs. [136481]

Mr. Hutton: Information on response times is collected on a national health service trust basis. A copy is available in the Library and at http://www.doh.gov.uk/public/sb0313.pdf.

Angiogram Patients

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what differences there are in the guidance for admission of angiogram patients in cases where the patient is (a) already hospitalised and (b) not hospitalised. [135759]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Patients that are hospitalised are likely to be prioritised for angiography for a range of clinical reasons. Most commonly, they will be experiencing severe or recurrent pain or they may have suffered some myocardial damage already. We would expect each hospital to have local protocols in place for managing such patients.

Arthritis

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to his Answer of 8 September 2003, Official Report, column 163W, how much funding has been allocated for the period (a) 2003-04 and (b) 2005-06 to primary care trusts for the implementation of the National Institute for Clinical Excellence guidelines on TNFa therapy. [133918]

Mr. Hutton: The funding made available in primary care trust allocations for 2003-04 to 2005-06 to meet recommendations of the National Institute for Clinical Excellence was not separately identified.

Asperger's Syndrome

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many current residents at secure mental hospitals have been assessed as having Asperger's syndrome. [136952]

Ms Rosie Winterton [holding answer 6 November 2003]: Information about the number of current residents in secure mental hospitals who have been assessed as having Asperger's syndrome is not available. However, in 1999 the National Autistic Society published the results of a study of 1,305 residents of the three special (now high security) hospitals in England, which was funded by the Department through the Section 64 scheme of grants to voluntary organizations. This identified that there were then 31 people with an autistic spectrum disorder, of whom 21 had Asperger's syndrome.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will hold an inquiry into the misdiagnosis and mistaken treatment of patients in secure mental hospitals who have Asperger's syndrome. [136953]

Ms Rosie Winterton [holding answer 6 November 2003]: We have no plans to commission an inquiry into services for people with Asperger's syndrome in secure hospitals. However, services for people who have Asperger's syndrome have been included in the specialised services national definition set (SSNDS), with a view to improving the collaborative commissioning arrangements necessary to provide them with a seamless service. Inclusion in the SSNDS provides a basis for service reviews and strategic planning and enables commissioners to establish a broad base-line position and make initial comparisons on activity and spend.

Breast Feeding

Mrs. Brooke: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress is being made towards achieving national targets on breast feeding. [133579]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 22 October 2003]: Through the NHS Priorities and Planning Framework 2003-06, a target has been set to increase breast feeding initiation rates by two percentage points per year focusing especially on women from disadvantaged groups.

Figures are not yet available but are being collected from primary care trusts in 2003 to provide a baseline for monitoring future performance.

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on progress with the target to increase breast feeding, with particular reference to the target for women from disadvantaged groups. [133907]

Miss Melanie Johnson: I refer the hon. Member to the response I gave the hon. Member for Mid Dorset and North Poole (Mrs. Brooke) today.

Care Homes

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many care home places were available in Sussex in each of the last six years, broken down by (a) local authority run, (b) independent private and (c) independent charity and other not for profit organisation. [134777]

Dr. Ladyman: The table shows the number of care home places by type of accommodation available in Sussex as at 31 March for the years 1998 to 2001.

Figures for later years have been collected by the National Care Standards Commission but comparable details broken down by local authority are not available.

Children's Homes

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children's homes in England are (a) open and (b) closed and which are under investigation for possible child abuse. [118923]

Margaret Hodge: I have been asked to reply

As of 30 September 2003, there are 1,141 children's homes registered with the National Care Standards Commission and an additional 920 applications to register are being processed. 57 children's homes have been de-registered.

Information is not collected centrally on the number of children's homes in England that are under investigation for possible child abuse.

Dentistry

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps the Government are taking to promote dental health among children. [135282]

Ms Rosie Winterton: In England, primary care trusts are responsible for oral health promotion and currently they attach particular importance to ensuring that oral health is covered in initiatives like Sure Start, health action zones and healthy living centres.

In August 2001, to complement this work, we launched our "Brushing for Life" scheme which targets families with young children in the 31 areas where dental decay is highest. There are currently 32 schemes running nationally. When carrying out developmental checks, health visitors demonstrate good tooth brushing practice and give the families a free pack containing a tube of fluoridated toothpaste, a toothbrush and a leaflet on oral hygiene. In 2003, the "Brushing for Life" scheme has been extended to Sure Start schemes in order to ensure more parents are given the opportunity to improve the oral health of their children, particularly in more deprived areas of the country.

Diabetes

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much was spent by his Department on research into diabetes in each year since 1997. [134395]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Department has consistently supported research into diabetes but has not in the past collected information on its total expenditure in this field. The greater part of the funding meets the service costs to the national health service of research funded by research councils and charities, including Diabetes UK. This funding was identified for the first time from the NHS trust annual research and development reports for 2001–02, and the Department's total spend on diabetes research in that year has been estimated as £14.1 million.

Available estimates of Medical Research Council spend on diabetes research are shown in the table.

£ million

	Amount
1999–2000	6.5

Judy Mallaber: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to his answer of 29 October, Official Report, column. 234W, on diabetes, which companies have confirmed that they will continue to supply animal insulin for diabetics; and what written commitments they have made. [136779]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Novo Nordisk and CP Pharmaceuticals market animal insulins. Novo Nordisk informed the Department that they would be continuing to supply animal insulins to the United Kingdom market for the foreseeable future. CP Pharmaceuticals issued a press release in July this year confirming that they would be continuing to supply animal insulins. Both companies have recently confirmed that their position remains unchanged.

Diet

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps the Government is taking with regard to the adulteration of processing food with fats and sugars. [130120]

Miss Melanie Johnson: There is NHS Plan (2000) commitment to work with industry to improve the overall balance of the diet, including salt, fat and sugar in food. The Department of Health and the Food Standards Agency are in discussions with the food industry on reducing the level of salt in processed foods and work on added sugars and fat will follow through 2003–04.

There is wider on-going action to help address the overall balance of the diet. The Department is leading the development of a comprehensive Food and Health Action Plan, working across Government and with the food industry to establish a coherent and effective programme of activities on nutrition in order to achieve a healthier diet for people in England. The plan will pull together all of the issues that influence what we eat and will address:

production—including the manufacture and preparation of food which contribute most to a healthy diet supply—including access to healthier food information for consumers about healthy eating and nutrition.

Disabled People (Financial Assistance)

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how much has been allocated to the Families Fund since 1997; what the average grant to a family with a disabled adult or child was in the last 12 months; and by how much this has risen since 1997; [136146]

(2) if he will make a statement on the Families Fund; how it has helped disabled people and their families; and what the grants are most commonly used for. [136147]

Margaret Hodge: I have been asked to reply.

The Family Fund was set up by the Government in 1973 to give practical help to families with severely disabled and seriously ill children under the age of 16. Since 1998 the charity has received separate funds from the Governments of England, Northern Ireland, Scotland and Wales. Taking these together, the following amounts have been allocated to the Family Fund:

	£ million
1997	21.7
1998	22.0
1999	23.2
2000	24.2
2003	27.8

The FF uses these funds to provides grants direct to families for items which the statutory sector does not provide. The most popular types of grants are for: holidays or leisure facilities so everyone in the family can have a break; bedding and clothing to cover the expense of wear and tear because of the child's disability; additional hospital visiting costs; play equipment if this is related to the child's special needs; washing machines and other 'white goods' that provide practical help to ease the physical burden of carers for disabled children. 90 per cent. of the funds go direct to families. All administrative and other costs are met from the remaining 10 per cent. The average grant made to a family in 1997 was £466.00. The average grant made to a family in 2003 was £560.00. This represents an average increase of 20.17 per cent. since 1997. The Family Fund has been evaluated as "providing a good level of value for money" (Secta report 1999). In 2002–03 The Family Fund supported 44,800 families. Through the use of a network of visiting advisers The Family Fund are able to respond flexibly and imaginatively to the different needs of each family. Over the last 30 years they have helped improve the quality of life for tens of thousands of severely disabled children and their families.

EU Directive 2001/20/EC

John Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what estimate he has made of the additional cost to the Medical Research Council of implementing EU Directive 2001/20/EC; [135586]

(2) what assessment he has made of the impact of EU Directive 2001/20/EC on the non-profit-making sector. [135587]

Ms Rosie Winterton: As part of the consultation on the draft United Kingdom regulations, a partial regulatory impact assessment (RIA) was provided and universities, national health service trusts and charities were invited to submit estimates on recurring and non-recurring compliance costs for non-commercial trials. The comments received will be taken into account in preparing the final legislation and the final RIA.

In another initiative designed to reduce the impact, the Department and the Medical Research Council have announced a joint project to work with experts to find practical solutions to the issues identified in the impact assessment. Details of the project can be found on www.ncchta.org/eudirective/index.asp. Furthermore, the Government have taken steps to attempt to influence the Commission in its consideration of a Commission Directive on good clinical practice and also in reviewing guidance that the Commission published earlier this year with a view to avoiding any unnecessary costs.

Further information on the partial RIA and the proposed UK implementing regulations is available at http://medicines.mhra.gov.uk/inforesources/publications/mlxpub.htm.

Fluoridation

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on his plans to add fluoride to water. [133787]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 23 October 2003]: The Government has no plans to add fluoride to the water supply on a national basis. Clause 61 of the Water Bill, if enacted, will enable strategic health authorities to undertake local consultations about whether the populations that they serve are in favour.

Health Care (York)

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) consultants and (b) junior hospital doctors there were in each clinical specialty at (i) York district hospital and (ii) York Primary Care Trust in each year since 1992. [135952]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information requested has been placed in the Library.

Health Care Providers

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to his Answer of 9 October 2003, Official Report, columns 343–44W, on health care providers, if he will list foreign-owned private health care providers who provide services to the NHS whose names are held centrally. [134498]

Mr. Hutton: United Healthcare is providing administrative health services to 10 primary care trusts (PCTs). Kaiser Permanente is engaged with eight PCTs as part of a non-contractual mutual learning arrangement.

Both these arrangements involve the provision of support around redesigning health services rather than the direct provision of health services.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what factors led to the initiation of the recent discussions between his Department and United Healthcare; who took the initiative in setting up the discussions; and by what means his Department is accountable to Parliament for the contract with United Healthcare. [134499]

Mr. Hutton: In Delivering the NHS Plan, published in April 2002, the Government set out its intention for the national health service to work with international organisations to develop and test models of integrated health care.

In August 2002 my right hon. Friend, the Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) asked Departmental officials to enter into discussions to explore the potential for and feasibility of adapting and applying United Healthcare's Evercare model in a number of primary care trusts (PCTs).

The framework agreement between the Secretary of State and the United Healthcare provided for United Healthcare to undertake scoping work with ten PCTs. Under this agreement, individual PCTs that wished to take the work further then contracted with United Healthcare for administrative healthcare services.

Funding from a Vote 1 central budget has been transferred to each PCT as a contribution to the overall cost of the pilot. The accounting officer for the Department (the chief executive) is responsible to Parliament for the expenditure of the Vote.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many foreign-owned private health care providers are providing services to the Transformational Change Programme managed by the National Primary and Care Trust Development Programme. [134500]

Mr. Hutton: Two foreign-owned private healthcare providers are providing support to primary care trusts through the national primary and care trust development programme's transformational change programme.

Nine primary care trusts (PCTs) have contracted with United Healthcare Group for assistance in redesigning services for vulnerable elderly people. One has contracted for support in predicting demand for health services.

Eight PCTs are also participating in a non-contractual mutual learning arrangement with Kaiser Permanente as part of the transformational change programme.

Health Inequalities

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the extent of inequality of (a) health, (b) access to health and (c) accessibility of health services; and if he will make a statement on the extent to which these inequalities have changed since 1997. [134874]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 29 October 2003]: The health gap between those at the top and bottom ends of the social scale, remains large and in some areas continues to widen, despite overall improvements in health. We have set a national target to reverse this trend and, in July, published a Programme for Action. The latest available data shows that while the gap between the infant mortality rate for routine and manual groups and the whole population widened slightly, there was no significant change for male or female life expectancy for the same period. This data refers chiefly to the period before targets were set. We will be publishing a first annual report on health inequalities in 2004. Other inequalities in access to services and accessibility of services are not readily measurable in a nationally comparable way. We have asked primary care trusts to undertake a health equality audit to identify and tackle important health inequalities in their area. The first results are due in 2004.

Long-term Care

Mr. Horam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will standardise the procedure for closing NHS care homes. [134069]

Dr. Ladyman [holding answer 5 November 2003]: It would not be appropriate or practical for the Government to try to impose a standardised closure procedure on care homes. This is because care home closures may occur for a wide variety of reasons, such as a fall in the local demand for care home places or the rising value of property.

Also, the overwhelming majority of care homes are private businesses and the Government cannot intervene in a decision by the owner of that business to cease trading as a care home. However, providers are required under the Care Homes Regulations 2001 to give residents a reasonable period of notice when closing the home. The period of notice should be set out in the residents' contracts or statement of terms and conditions.

Local councils should have contingency plans, drawn up in consultation with service providers, for dealing with the closure of homes. Local councils have a responsibility for making alternative arrangements for anyone that they place in a home which subsequently closes.

Lung Cancer

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department has undertaken into combining CT scans and radioactive trace PET scans to detect lung cancer. [133921]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Department has not funded research into combining computed tomography scans and radioactive trace positron emission tomography scans to detect lung cancer. The Medical Research Council (MRC) would consider applications for research in this specific area. The MRC always welcomes high quality applications for support into any aspect of human health and these are judged in open competition with other demands on funding.

Lymphoedema

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information his Department collates relating to the number of persons living within the East Kent Health Authority catchment area suffering from lymphoedema. [135409]

Ms Rosie Winterton [holding answer 5 November 2003]: The Department does not routinely collect statistics on the prevalence of individual conditions like lymphoedema. However, we do have data on admissions to national health service hospitals for patients whose primary diagnosis is lymphoedema. Information on the number of admissions based on those people who live in the East Kent Health Authority area is shown in the table. Admissions are defined as the first period of in-patient care under one consultant within one healthcare provider. These figures for not represent the number of in-patients as a person may have more than one admission within the year.

	Admissions
1996–97	15
1997–98	13
1998–99	17
1999–2000	10
2000–01	9
2001–02	4

Notes:
1. The primary diagnosis is the first of up to 14 (seven prior to 2002–03) diagnosis fields in the HES data and provides the main reason why the patient was in hospital.
2. Figures are grossed for both coverage and missing/invalid clinical data, except for 2001–02, which is not yet adjusted for shortfalls.

Mental Health Services

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the total funding for mental health services has been in the NHS in London in each of the past five years. [133738]

Mr. Hutton: The table shows data on mental health expenditure from 1998–99 to 2002–03, which is the latest year for which figures are available.

Mental Illness expenditure

(£ thousands)

	London Regional Office Area
1998–99	667,408
1999–2000	763,238
2000–01	861,671
2001–02	961,549
2002–03	1,074,817

Notes:
2002–03 data remains provisional. Figures are provided for health authorities and primary care trusts within the NHS London Regional Office area for 1998–99 to 2001–02 and for those organisations within the five London strategic health authority areas for 2002–03. Expenditure relates to the commissioning of secondary care mental illness only. Figures are not available for mental illness expenditure for primary care nor mental illness expenditure within personal social services.

Multiple Sclerosis

Phil Sawford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients receiving a disease modifying treatment for multiple sclerosis are included within the formal monitoring arrangements of the risk-sharing scheme; and what assessment he has made of whether the estimate of 7,000 patients by November will be reached. [135766]

Dr. Ladyman: Up to the end of August, around 6,300 patients were receiving treatment with a disease modifying treatment for their multiple sclerosis. Around 300 patients each month are being initiated on treatment. Sheffield University's School of Health and Related Research is collecting scheme data and we are discussing with them how best to publicise a breakdown of patients currently being treated to show the subsets being treated under the scheme and those subject to detailed monitoring. As yet, we have no precise estimate of the likely date on which full recruitment of the cohort of patients subject to detailed monitoring will be achieved.

NHS Estate

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to his answer of 14 October 2003, Official Report, column 52W, on the NHS Estate (Health and Safety), what percentage of patient-occupied floor area was below (a) health and safety compliance and (b) fire safety standards in (i) England, (ii) each strategic health authority and (iii) each NHS trust in each year since 1997. [133430]

Mr. Hutton: Nationally, figures for the proportion of patient occupied floor area that is not compliant with statutory health and safety and statutory fire safety regulations, including compliance with the National Health Service Firecode Standards, [illegible].71 per cent. and 7.31 per cent. in 2002–03, a reduction from the 2001–02 figures.

Data collection began in 2001–02 and the information requested has been placed in the Library. Owing to trust mergers in 2002–03, direct comparison with data for 2001–02 is not possible in all cases.

These figures reflect the proportion of the estate that is not fully compliant. Non-compliance covers a wide variety of conditions, including that which is just below standard. Therefore, the figures do not indicate levels of risk. Trusts make every effort to remedy any concerns from local enforcement bodies as quickly as possible. This is reflected in the very small numbers of injuries and deaths arising as a result of fires and reportable health and safety incidents in NHS hospitals in England, despite the very high numbers of people who use healthcare premises.

NHS Staff

David Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many staff are employed by the Shropshire and Staffordshire Strategic Health Authority. [136885]

Dr. Ladyman: Shropshire and Staffordshire Strategic Health Authority (SHA) reports that it currently employs 120 permanent members of staff. That includes Shropshire and Staffordshire Workforce Development Confederation, which joined with the SHA on 1 October 2003.

Nurse Practitioners

Vera Baird: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he intends to allow nurse practitioners to run medical practices. [136466]

Mr. Hutton: The Government are committed to widening career opportunities for nurses and increasing recognition of the role nurses play in delivering primary care.

Under personal medical services arrangements, nurses may already run medical practices.

We intend to continue these arrangements, and carry them over into the new general medical services contract so that nurses may be co-signatories to the contract.

Prescribed Drugs

Nick Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what steps he is taking to reduce the waste of prescribed drugs through their not being used; [133044]

(2) if he will estimate the annual value of prescribed drugs not used. [133045]

Ms Rosie Winterton: It is estimated that unused medicines returned to pharmacies are probably worth £100 million per year. The Department is concerned about the wastage of unused medicines and has introduced a number of initiatives to address this.

These include, the medicines management collaborative schemes that demonstrate innovation and good practice in medicines management. Reducing the volume of unwanted medicines is one of the local objectives being pursued by some of the primary care trusts participating in the programme.

Repeat dispensing makes it possible for patients to get their repeat medicines for up to a year from their community pharmacy without having to contact their general practitioner's surgery. At each repeat dispensing episode, the community pharmacists checks that the medicines are still needed and being used appropriately by the patient.

The first wave of 30 pathfinder sites is no under way, with another 50 or so coming on stream early nest year, ahead of national roll-out by end of 2004. Evidence from previous pilot studies has shown that repeat dispensing helps reduce waste.

In the Government statement of 17 July on the proposed framework for a new community pharmacy contract, disposal of medicines would form one of the essential services for all national health service pharmacies. Discussions on this front continue with the Pharmaceutical Services Negotiating Committee and the NHS Confederation. We aim to start implementing by April 2004. www.doh.gov.uk/pharmacyframework

Modernising hospital pharmacy services, where patients can now continue to use their medicines when admitted to hospital, together with dispensing medicines at the outset sufficient for discharge, has also been shown to reduce waste.

Prescriptions

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the average amount paid to Her Majesty's Government from each prescription charge was for financial year 2001–02; and if he will make a statement. [136867]

Ms Rosie Winterton: For the financial year 2001–02, the amount of each prescription charge was £6.10.

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the estimated cost of wastage caused by patients returning unused prescription medicine to chemists was in the last year for which figures are available; and what steps the Department is taking to reduce such wastage. [136713]

Ms Rosie Winterton: While the Department regularly obtains information on the extent of local national health service schemes for the collection and disposal of unwanted medicines, and these are available across the country, this does not include the cost of medicines returned. The latest estimate is that unused medicines returned to pharmacies are probably worth £100 million per year.

The Department is concerned about the wastage of unused medicines and has introduced a number of initiatives to address this. These include the medicines management collaborative schemes that demonstrate innovation and good practice in medicines management. Reducing the volume of unwanted medicines is one of the local objectives being pursued by some of the primary care trusts (PCTs) participating in the programme.

Repeat dispensing makes it possible for patients to get their repeat medicines for up to a year from their community pharmacy without having to contact their general practitioner's surgery. At each repeat dispensing episode, the community pharmacist checks that the medicines are still needed and being used appropriately by the patient. The first wave of 30 pathfinder sites is now under way, with another fifty or so coming on stream early next year, ahead of national roll-out by end of 2004. Evidence from previous pilot studies has shown that repeat dispensing helps reduce waste.

We are funding a joint task force, based at the Royal Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain, to lead implementation of a national strategy to spread better understanding of and partnerships between patients and health professionals on taking their medicines. This will promote the benefits of helping patients to take a more active role in managing their own care.

In the Government statement of 17 July on the proposed framework for a new community pharmacy contract, available at www.doh.gov.uk/pharmacyframework, it was highlighted that disposal of medicines was expected to form one of the essential services normally provided by all NHS pharmacies. Discussions on this front continue with the Pharmaceutical Services Negotiating Committee and the NHS confederation. We aim to start implementing from April 2004.

Modernising hospital pharmacy services, where patients can now continue to use their medicines when admitted to hospital, together with dispensing medicines at the outset sufficient for discharge, has also been shown to reduce waste.

Primary Care Trusts

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the three most (a) advantaged and (b) disadvantaged primary care trusts, giving their respective distance from their funding target allocation in percentage terms for 2003–04 to 2005–06; and if he will make a statement. [136037]

Mr. Hutton: As a result of the 2003–04 to 2005–06 revenue allocations all primary care trusts in England will make progress towards their target shares of resources as determined by the weighted capitation formula.

Information on distances from targets for primary care trusts in England for 2003–04 to 2005–06 is available in the Library.

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much money was allocated to each primary care trust to pay for the new consultant's contract. [131637]

Mr. Hutton: Primary care trust allocations for 2003–04, 2004–05 and 2005–06 include 0.3 per cent., 0.4 per cent, and 0.5 per cent, of main allocations for the new consultants' contract.

Private Hospitals

Nick Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of private hospitals do not have 24 hour cover from qualified doctors. [133046]

Mr. Hutton: Establishments registered as independent hospitals, with the National Care Standards Commission under the Care Standards Act 2000, that have overnight beds for in-patients undergoing medical treatment or surgery are required as a national minimum standard to have a resident medical officer available on immediate call at all times to manage urgent care if a consultant under whom a patient has been admitted is absent or unavailable. Information on the proportion of private hospitals that have such beds is not collected centrally.

Public Service Contracts

Brian Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many public service contracts were awarded by his Department (a) in total and (b) to SMEs in each year since 1997; and if he will make a statement. [127800]

Ms Rosie Winterton: This information is currently not held centrally and could not be obtained without disproportionate cost.

Teeth

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of the adult population had no natural teeth in (a) 1983, (b) 1993 and (c) at the latest date for which figures are available. [134609]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The proportion of the adult population with no natural teeth in 1978, 1988 and 1998 is shown in the following table. This data are available from the Adult Dental Health Survey, which is carried out every 10 years and covers adults aged 16 years and over in the United Kingdom.

WORK AND PENSIONS

Council Tax Benefit

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (1) what proportion of those eligible for council tax benefit claimed the benefit in (a) Chorley, (b) Lancashire and (c) the North West Region in 2002–03; [135753]

(2) what proportion of pensioners received council tax benefit in 2002–03; and what proportion of pensioners in Chorley who were eligible claimed the benefit. [135754]

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will estimate the percentage of households wholly comprised of those aged over 60 years who were (a) wholly and (b) partially relieved of payments of council tax in 2002–03. [136542]

Mr. Pond: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Southwark, North and Bermondsey (Simon Hughes) on 4 November 2003, Official Report, column 610W.

Back-to-work Support (Over-50s)

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what back-to-work support is available for people aged over 50; and how many people over 50 have been put back into work through Government initiatives since 1997. [132948]

Mr. Browne: We are providing a wide range of services through Jobcentre Plus to help people aged over 50 looking for work. This includes job-search help and advice, training, and claiming in-work financial support. Well over 120,000 people aged over 50 have been helped back to work through Government programmes, such as New Deal 50 plus, since they began to be introduced in 1998. These programmes have helped to increase the employment rate of older workers by 5.4 per cent. from 64.7 per cent. in the spring of 1997 to 70.1 per cent. in the spring of 2003.

Benefit Claimants (Somerset)

Mr. Liddell-Grainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many young people from other counties who are 16 or over are claiming benefits in Somerset. [136549]

Mr. Pond: Details of a person's place of birth or origin are not routinely collected when they make a claim to benefit. Therefore, it is not possible to supply details of how many young people claiming benefits in Somerset come from outside the county.

Benefit Payments

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many of the people who have received a letter about direct payment of benefits have begun to receive benefits by automated credit transfer, broken down into those who have opted to have their benefits paid into (a) a Post Office card account, (b) a basic bank account and (c) a regular current account. [114414]

Mr. Pond: We are unable to supply the information in the format required.

Key figures on the progress of conversion to Direct Payment are available in the Library updated every four weeks.

We do not distinguish between existing or basic bank accounts.

Carers' Allowance

Sir Archy Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will estimate the cost of abolishing the overlapping benefits rule for the payment of carers' allowance. [134645]

Maria Eagle: The overlapping benefit rules are a fundamental feature of the social security system. They prevent the payment at the same time of two or more benefits intended for the same purpose.

The estimated gross cost of abolishing these rules for the payment of carers' allowance would be around £330 million a year[1]. After adjusting for offsets in income-related benefits[2], the estimated net cost would be about £195 million a year. These figures do not take account of the behavioural effect of carers presently not claiming carer's allowance who would be induced to do so by a change in the rules.

[1] Gross costs are calculated from data taken from a 100 per cent extract of CA claims on the CA computer system for May 2003. They allow for cases where an underlying entitlement exists but records are not currently held on the system.

[2] Offsets are calculated from a 5 per cent. extract of claims on the Income Support computer system in 2003 and a per cent. extract of the Housing Benefit/Council Tax Benefit claims of May 2001.

Child Maintenance Bonus

John Thurso: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will estimate the value of accrued entitlements to the child maintenance bonus among lone parents in receipt of income support in Scotland; and if he will make it his policy to preserve accrued entitlements to the child maintenance bonus once the new child support rules are applied to all families. [135935]

Mr. Pond: I refer the hon. Member to the written answer I gave the hon. Member for Northavon (Mr. Webb) on 23 October 2003, Official Report, columns 703–04W.

Child Support Agency

Huw Irranca-Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what guidelines are used by the Child Support Agency in dealing with cases where automatic deductions from pay have been made by an employer, but have not been passed on to the CSA; and what plans he has to review these guidelines. [132281]

Mr. Pond: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mr. Doug Smith. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Mike Isaac to Mr. Huw Irranca-Davies, dated 10 November 2003:

In replying to your recent Parliamentary question about the Child Support Agency the Secretary of State promised a substantive reply from the Chief Executive. As he is currently on leave I am replying on his behalf.

You asked what guidelines the Child Support Agency uses in dealing with cases where automatic deductions from pay have been made by an employer, but have not been passed on to the Agency.

Where a deduction from earnings is made the employer is required to pay it to the Agency by, at the latest, the 19th of the month following that in which the deduction was made. The Agency will contact the employer soon after the 19th of the month if a payment is not received. While non-receipt of payment from an employer is rare we will also contact the non-resident parent and inform them that payment has not been received from their employer.

Mr. Tynan: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (1) how many liability orders were granted in the last 12 months following enforcement action by the Child Support Agency; [135644]

(2) whether priority is given by the Child Support Agency to enforcement action in cases (a) where the parent with care is in receipt of income support and other similar benefits and (b) where the parent with care is not; [135645]

(3) what the maximum acceptable timescale is for the Child Support Agency to complete an enforcement action from its commencement; what proportion of cases met these targets in 2002–03; and what procedures are in place to monitor compliance with these targets. [135755]

Mr. Pond: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mr. Doug Smith. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Mike Isaac to Bill Tynan, dated 10 November 2003:

In replying to your recent Parliamentary questions about the Child Support Agency the Secretary of State promised a substantive reply from the Chief Executive.

You asked:

How many liability orders were granted in the last 12 months following enforcement action by the Agency;

Whether the Agency gives priority to enforcement action in cases where the parent with care is in receipt of income support and other similar benefits;

What the maximum acceptable timescale is for the Agency to complete enforcement action, what proportion of cases met such targets in 2002–03, and what procedures are in place to monitor compliance with these targets.

From the 1 October 2002—30 September 2003 the Agency was granted 3,169 Liability Orders by the courts in England, Scotland and Wales.

Where a non-resident parent refuses to pay the assessed maintenance for their child(ren) we always consider appropriate enforcement action. For employed non-compliant parents the Agency would usually seek to implement deduction from earnings orders from their earnings. For those who are self-employed, or who have other forms of income, we have to take action through the courts. We always seek to give equal priority to those parents with care who are in receipt of benefit and to those who are not.

Currently, there are no set timescales for the completion of enforcement action. The time taken varies according to the circumstances of the case, the availability of court dates, the non-attendance of the non-resident parent in court, etc. We are looking to include targets for the different processes that comprise our enforcement action next year.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions when he expects that existing cases will be migrated to the new system of operating the Child Support Agency. [136011]

Mr. Pond: I refer my hon. Friend to the written answer I gave the hon. Member for Moray (Angus Robertson) on 16 September 2003, Official Report, columns 696–97W.

Correspondence

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions when he will respond to the letter of 14 August from the hon. Member for Totnes concerning Mrs. J. Duffy of Kingsbridge, Devon. [136970]

Mr. Andrew Smith: I replied to the hon. Member on 4 September. I am forwarding a copy of my letter to him.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions when he will respond to the letter of 18 August from the hon. Member for Totnes concerning Mr. Guy Pannell of South Brent and the winding-up of pension schemes. [136973]

Malcolm Wicks: I regret we have no record of the hon. Member's letter. If he would like to forward a copy I will arrange for it to be considered urgently.

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions why he has not yet replied to the letter to him dated 18 September from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton with regard to Mr. J. Meehan. [136983]

Mr. Andrew Smith: I replied to my right hon. Friend on 13 October. I am forwarding a copy of my letter to him.

Disability Handbook

Mr. Carmichael: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions pursuant to the Answer of 17 September 2003, Official Report, column 758W. on the Disability Handbook, when the Government will start a programme to revise the Disability Handbook; what plans the Government has to consult the National Autistic Society during this review; and when the Government anticipates this work will be completed. [136505]

Maria Eagle: The Department is continuing to work on determining the final format for the information technology based guidance, which will eventually replace the Disability Handbook. The new guidance will be rolled out in phases. Detailed plans for its development and implementation have not yet been decided. Officials have already had meetings with the National Autistic Society and will take into consideration their comments on the current section in the Disability Handbook, in addition to information on the autistic spectrum disorder provided by them. The Department would welcome their comments on the revised draft guidance when developed.

EDS

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will list payments made to EDS in respect of (a) the Child Support Agency and (b) the Accord project in each of the last five financial years; and if he will make a statement. [134232]

Mr. Pond: The information is not available in the format requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate costs.

Employment (Wansdyke)

Dan Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (1) how many people were in employment in Wansdyke constituency in (a) April 1997 and (b) October 2003; [136329]

(2) how many people were unemployed and claiming benefits in Wansdyke constituency in (a) April 1997 and (b) October 2003. [136330]

Mr. Pond: In 1997, 86 per cent. of the working age population in Wansdyke were in employment. An equivalent figure is not available for 2003.

In April 1997 there were 1,333 people unemployed and claiming Job Seeker's Allowance (JSA) in Wansdyke. Latest information from the claimant count is for September 2003, when there were 405 people claiming JSA.

Fireworks

Mr. Tynan: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what the total capacity of facilities in the United Kingdom licensed by the Health and Safety Executive to store greater than one tonne of fireworks or related explosives was at 1 October. [134587]

Mr. Browne: The total licensed storage capacity for fireworks at sites licensed by the Health and Safety Executive is 19,177 tonnes. This figure represents the net mass of the explosive contained in the fireworks. This storage capacity is sufficient to hold fireworks with a gross weight in excess of 76 thousand tonnes.

In addition, local authority licensed stores holding more than one tonne (gross) have an estimated capacity of 5,000 tonnes (gross).

Explosives licensing in Northern Ireland is a matter for the Northern Ireland Office.

Mr. Tynan: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many explosive storage sites, capable of storing what quantity of explosives, were licensed by the Health and Safety Executive and other appropriate bodies in respect of Global Fireworks Ltd. (a) prior to 5 April 2002, (b) between 6 April 2002 and 5 April 2003 and (c) from 6 April 2003 to date. [135639]

Mr. Browne: Global Fireworks Ltd. did not have HSE-licensed storage facilities during any or these periods.

Licensing of explosives stores in Northern Ireland is a matter for the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland. We understand that there were no explosives storage facilities licensed or registered in the name of Global Fireworks Ltd. during this period.

Smaller explosives stores are licensed or registered by local authorities. Registers of these storage facilities are maintained by local authorities. There is no central database of licensed stores and this information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Tynan: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what steps are taken by the Health and Safety Executive to ensure that consignments of fireworks entering the United Kingdom are taken to a licensed storage site. [135640]

Mr. Browne: The storage of fireworks is regulated by HSE in partnership with local authorities under the Explosives Act 1875. Anyone storing fireworks illegally will be liable for be prosecution.

HSE works with local authorities and Customs and Excise to verify whether firework importers have licensed storage facilities in Great Britain. The evidence from these checks is that the overwhelming majority of fireworks imports declared to Customs and Excise are being imported by firms with licensed storage available to them.

Mr. Tynan: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many prosecutions were commenced by the Health and Safety Executive for illegal (a) transportation and (b) storage of explosives in each of the last five years. [135641]

Mr. Browne: The information is in the following table. All the prosecutions were successful with the exception of the two prosecutions in the current year which are pending. This table does not include cases in the current year that are still under investigation. Prosecutions by HSE for illegal transport or storage of explosives

	Transportation	Storage
2000–01	2	—
2001–02	1	—
2002–03	—	—
2003–04	1	1
Total	4	3

Mr. Tynan: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what quantity of fireworks was seized by the Health and Safety Executive in each of the last five years. [135642]

Mr. Browne: The Health and Safety at Work Act only provides powers to seize fireworks in cases where there is imminent danger. There have been no such cases in any of the last five years.

Where the fireworks do not present an imminent danger the Health and Safety Executive will serve an enforcement notice requiring the owner to arrange for the fireworks to be removed to a legal storage place. The information in the table gives the number of enforcement notices issued over the last five years.

Where there are concerns over the safety of the fireworks HSE will work with the local authority to arrange for the fireworks to be dealt with safely and where necessary for enforcement action to be taken by the local authority under the Firework Safety Regulations 1999.

In addition to requiring the removal HSE will also prosecute where there is sufficient evidence of illegal storage (or other breaches of the legal requirements).

Fostering and Adoption

Mr. Peter Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions when he last met fostering and adoption groups to discuss benefit payment levels. [136502]

Mr. Pond: The ministerial team of the Department of Work and Pensions meet with a wide range of groups to discuss and further the work of the Department. However, none of the Ministers have met recently with fostering and adoption groups to discuss benefit payment levels.

Health and Safety

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many (a) enforcement notices have been served and (b) prosecutions have been initiated by health and safety inspectors under Health and Safety at Work legislation in each of the last 12 months. [135822]

Mr. Browne: The number of (a) improvement and prohibition notices served, and (b) the number of prosecutions initiated by the Health and Safety Executive, Field Operations Directorate inspectors, in each of the last 12 months for which information is available, are shown in the table:

2002–03[1]	Improvement and Prohibition notices issued	Separate offences prosecuted

Notes:

1. Figures for improvement and prohibition notices served, and prosecutions started by local authorities on a month-by-month basis, are not available except at disproportionate cost.
2. The number of notices are those issued by HSE in Great Britain.
3. In England and Wales, HSE inspectors initiate prosecutions. In Scotland, the Procurator Fiscal decides whether to bring a prosecution; HSE recommends prosecution when this is justified following an investigation.

Minimum Income Guarantee

David Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many pensioners in the Midlothian constituency received the minimum income guarantee on the latest date for which figures are available. [137126]

Malcolm Wicks: As at May 2003, the number of Minimum Income Guarantee recipients in Midlothian was around 1,700.

Notes:

1. Figures have been rounded to the nearest hundred.
2. Figures are based on a 5 per cent. sample, and are therefore subject to a degree of sampling variation.
3. Parliamentary Constituency is assigned by matching postcodes against the relevant ONS postcode directory.
4. MIG recipients are defined as Income Support benefit units where the claimant, and/or partner is aged 60 or over.

New Deal

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many 18 to 24-year-olds have left the New Deal for Young People with unknown destinations; and what percentage of these he estimates subsequently found full-time employment. [133164]

Mr. Browne: The New Deal for Young People (NDYP) is a success—by the end of June 2003, just over three-quarters of a million young people had participated in the programme, nearly 450,000 of whom had been helped into jobs.

However, 264,770[1] people have left NDYP to unknown destinations. A survey in 1999 (Employment Service Research Report: 21 August 1999, Jon Hales and Debbie Collins) reported that 57 per cent. of those recorded as leaving NDYP for unknown destinations between April and August 1998, went into paid employment.

We are currently conducting a study to provide further information on New Deal unknown destinations.

We expect to publish the report on this survey next year.

Note:

[1] Includes people who may have left the programme more than once.

Dan Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many people in the Wansdyke constituency have benefited from each of the New Deal programmes since 1997. [136331]

Mr. Browne: The available information is in the table.

Numbers of people in the Wansdyke constituency helped by the New Deal programme[3]

Programme[1]	People starting	People gaining a job
New Deal for Young People	460	310
New Deal 25 plus	130	40
New Deal for Lone Parents	360	200
New Deal 50 plus[2]	90	90

[1] All figures are up to the end of June 2003 apart from New Deal 50 plus which is up to the end of March 2003.

[2] People in receipt of the New Deal 50 plus Employment Credit.

[3] Information on the other New Deals is not available broken down by constituency.

Occupational Pension Schemes

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many company occupational pension schemes, covering how many workers, have been closed since 1 December 2002. [137622]

Malcolm Wicks: Information on pension schemes is held by the Pension Schemes Registry that is maintained by the Occupational Pensions Regulatory Authority (OPRA). Some data on the number of occupational pension schemes, and number of recorded members in these schemes, recorded by the registry as having closed to new members between 1 October 2002 and 30 June 2003 are provided in the table. The figures relate to the position as at September 2003.

Number of occupational schemes, and number of members in occupational schemes, recorded on Pension Schemes Registry as becoming closed between 1 October 2002 and 30 June 2003

Date	Number of schemes	Number of members
1 October 2002–31 December 2002	113	46,172
1 January 2003–31 March 2003	122	122,283
1 April 2003–30 June 2003	78	44,924

Notes:
1. The Pension Schemes Registry (PSR) is not designed or intended to provide a comprehensive or continuous statistical record of the status of schemes. The PSR registers schemes for tracing purposes and collects the levy from pension schemes, including those in the process of winding-up. New scheme data are being reported to the PSR on a continuous basis. Therefore, the figures are subject to continuous revision. When a scheme has changed status, the previous status of the scheme is not recorded on the registry. Schemes have up to 12 months to notify OPRA of any status change. The data in the table do not include any schemes that may have changed their benefit type (money purchase, salary related or hybrid) but not their status code (from open to closed).
2. A closed scheme is a registerable scheme to which no new members may be admitted, but existing members can continue to make contributions and accrue benefits. The data above do not contain any schemes that are either frozen, winding up or wound up.
3. The data in the table relate to private sector occupational pension schemes. In addition to data on occupational schemes, the registry also collects data on personal pension and public sector schemes. These schemes are not included in the table

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions whether local authority housing benefit departments are being automatically supplied by his Department with details of the pension credit receipt of pensioners for the purpose of reassessing housing benefit entitlement; and if he will make a statement. [135908]

Mr. Pond [holding answer 3 November 2003]: We automatically supply local authorities with information about pension credit awards to enable them to determine entitlement to housing benefit and council tax benefit.

There were some initial technical problems encountered in transmitting information about pension credit awards to local authorities, which affected only a small number of cases and were largely resolved within two weeks. Local authorities have been kept informed of any difficulties, and every effort is being made to resolve remaining minor issues.

David Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what the take-up rate of the pension credit is in the Midlothian constituency. [137127]

Malcolm Wicks: The information is not available in the format requested.

Approximately half of all pensioner households across Great Britain are eligible for Pension Credit and stand to gain on average £400 a year. Around 1.9 million Pension Credit awards have already been made to pensioner households across Great Britain as a whole (helping more than 2 million individuals).

The Government has a target for at least 3 million pensioner households to be in receipt of Pension Credit by 2006. We want all those eligible for Pension Credit to take up their entitlement.

We intend to publish monthly reports on the progress of Pension Credit take-on, which will include information on the number of applications. The first such report will be published later this month.

Poor Households

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will estimate, on the basis of the Households Below Average Income data set, the number and percentage of (a) all dependent children and (b) dependent children under five who are (i) children of lone parents in full-time employment or self-employment, (ii) children of lone parents in part-time employment or self-employment, (iii) other children of lone parents, (iv) children of two parent families where both parents are in full-time employment or self-employment, (v) children of two parent families where one parent is in full-time work and one in part-time work, (vi) children of two parent families where one parent is in full-time work and one not working, (vii) children of two parent families where no parent is working full time but one or more is working part-time and (viii) other children of two parent families in (A) 1979, (B) 1990 and (C) 2001–02. [136448]

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Affordable Housing

Mr. Drew: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will list the authorities that (a) met their targets for (i) affordable and (ii) social housing in the last year for which figures are available and (b) did not meet their targets. [136752]

Keith Hill: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister does not set annual targets centrally for local authorities on either affordable or social housing.

Planning policies for affordable housing are set out in Planning Policy Guidance note 3, 'Housing', and in Circular 6/98, 'Planning for Affordable Housing'. They advise that where local planning authorities are able to demonstrate a lack of affordable housing to meet local needs, based on up-to-date surveys and other data of local need, they should indicate in their local plan how many affordable homes need to be provided throughout the plan area, and set indicative targets for specific suitable sites (expressed either as numbers of homes or a percentage of the homes on the site).

Local planning authorities should be monitoring their performance against their local plan policies and targets, but this information is not held centrally, and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Census 2001

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what action his Department will take in response to the recent Statistics Commission report on the accuracy of the 2001 census for the Westminster city council area. [136992]

Mr. Raynsford: Accurate census and population statistics are an important issue for the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister, particularly for financial allocation and as the basis for population and household projections which underpin a range of policy needs for housing and community support. We look to the Office for National Statistics (ONS) to supply these to the highest standard achievable, and in response to the statistics commission report the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister and other Central Government Departments will engage with ONS to ensure that this is achieved.

The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has also noted the recommendation to make progress on the creation of an accurate address register. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister agrees with the need for this and will be working with ONS and other relevant bodies to improve national address information.

Computer Fraud

Dr. Cable: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how much has been (a) budgeted and (b) spent by his Department since April 2002 on (i) combating computer fraud, (ii) preventing theft of computers and (iii) safeguarding the security of information held on computer; and if he will make a statement. [128797]

Yvette Cooper: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister manages the security of its information, including information held on its computer system, in accordance with the guidance given in the Manual of Protective Security, a comprehensive body of policy and interdepartmentally agreed security standards that is issued by the Cabinet Office.

Over the period referred to, many of the services involved in managing our security, were provided jointly to Department for Transport (DfT)as well as the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister . In addition, the services are provided as part of the overall provision of Information Technology, Audit and other security related service. It is therefore not possible to provide an accurate breakdown in the way requested without incurring disproportionate cost.

The overall staff costs across both Departments for some of the areas contributing to the management of our security are:

	£ thousand
IT Audit Services:	224.5
IT Security Office:	122.3
Internal Firewall Management:	216.2
Other IT Security Services:	158.3

As part of the commitment to information security, the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister is currently moving to compliance with BS7799 for corporate ICT services for DfT and the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister. The budget for this project is £300,000 for 2002-04.

Council Tax

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what the (a) average and (b) average band D council tax was in (i) Sedgefield borough council and (ii) Durham county council in each year since 1997. [136593]

Mr. Raynsford: The information requested is tabled as follows:

[1] Including parish and town council precepts

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what the average council tax was in England in each financial year since 1995-96. [136595]

Mr. Raynsford: The information requested is tabled as follows:

2003-04	1,102	908

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many properties there were (a) in 1997 and (b) on 1 April 2003 in each council tax band in (i) England and

(ii) each council tax collecting authority in England; and what the proportion of total properties was in each case. [137221]

Mr. Raynsford: Information on the number of properties in council tax bands as at 1 April is not available. Figures are available, however, as at 16 October. Those as at 16 October in the previous year have been provided for England are given in the following table. A table giving figures for individual billing authorities is available in the Library of the House.

Council Tax Benefit

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what proportion of those eligible for council tax benefit took up the benefit in 2002–03. [135357]

Mr. Pond: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested is presented in the DWP annual report, "Income Related Benefits-Estimates of Take-Up", which is available in the Library.

Cumbria

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will restore Cumbria to the Northern Region; and if he will make a statement. [137125]

Mr. Raynsford: Cumbria is part of the North West Region and will remain so.

Housing (Seller's Pack/Overcrowding)

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister (1) in relation to the draft Housing Bill, how many surveyors will be required to fulfill the requirement of the seller's pack proposals; how these will be trained; and over what timescale they will be available; [R] [136895]

(2) what plans the Government have to amend the Overcrowding Standard as defined in the Housing Act 1985. [136939]

Keith Hill: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister's initial estimate is that between 7,500 and 8,500 Home Inspectors will be needed to carry out home condition reports but this figure may be revised in the light of consultations and further work with the industry. Research indicates that there is a substantial pool of labour that could meet this potential demand, including the 4,500 people who are carrying out residential surveys now.

Home Inspectors will have to be certified and trained to National Occupational Standards. An awarding body will be appointed by the certification scheme to accredit the training courses and qualifications for home inspectors. Academic institutions, professional institutions and major employers are likely to run courses and training will take account of differences in prior knowledge and skills. Work on this has already started and we expect this will accelerate once the proposed new legislation is in place. Any requirement for sellers to provide a home condition report will not be brought into force until the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister is satisfied that there are sufficient trained Home Inspectors in place.

The Government recognises that the statutory overcrowding standards in the Housing Act 1985 are now out of date, and is considering whether they should be reformed in the light of the arguments presented during the Westminster Hall Debate on 29 October 2003, Official Report, column 105WH.

Housing Capital Receipts

Mr. Beith: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister whether, under transitional provisions relating to the Local Government Act 2003, housing authorities currently repaying debt from housing capital receipts will have the transfer of these receipts to Central Government fully offset in the calculation of housing subsidy for the next two years. [135915]

Keith Hill: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister will publish the proposals for the Housing Revenue Account (HRA) subsidy for 2004–05 shortly.

Housing Market Renewal Pathfinders

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what representations he has received about turning the housing renewal pathfinders into urban development corporations; and if he will make a statement. [136994]

Keith Hill: None.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many housing market renewal pathfinders have websites; and whether it is his policy to encourage this. [136995]

Keith Hill: Market Renewal Pathfinders communication strategies are determined by them to reflect local circumstances. Currently as part of their communication strategies two pathfinders have websites. These are Merseyside at www.newheartands.co.uk and Newcastle Gateshead at www.newcastlegateshead pathfinder.co.uk.

Housing Refurbishment

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister whether the capital funding allocated to Arm's Length Management Organisations for housing refurbishment is treated in the same way in Government Accounts as capital supplied for the same purposes by local authorities. [136969]

Keith Hill: Capital resources for housing refurbishment investment is currently provided to Arms Length Management Organisations and local authorities through credit approvals, a permission to borrow up to a certain limit. These approvals are supported, as required, by subsidy payments through the Housing Revenue Account (HRA).

Credit approvals are not shown within central Government Accounts as they do not reflect cash transactions between Central and local Government. Subsidy paid within the HRA is shown within the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister's Resource Accounts.

Capital resources that are secured through borrowing, or provided for separately, by local authorities would be identified within their own accounts.

Housing Statistics

Mr. Drew: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many (a) house starts and (b) overall house sales there were in (i) 1980, (ii) 1990, (iii) 2000 and (iv) the last year statistics were available, broken down by region. [136751]

Keith Hill: The information requested is as follows.

(a) The latest available statistics for total house starts by region for 1980, 1990, 2000 and 2002 are tabled as follows:

Local Elections

Dr. Pugh: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many allegations of electoral fraud in the North West Region have been investigated in the last 10 years. [134290]

Mr. Raynsford: The information requested on electoral fraud at elections is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Local Government Finance

Phil Sawford: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister which local authorities received a grant settlement that was limited by the ceiling in 2003–04; and what percentage increase each of these authorities would have received if a ceiling had not been imposed. [137130]

Mr. Raynsford: A table showing the percentage increase in grant before floors and ceilings for all authorities is available in the Library of the House.

Phil Sawford: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what the cost would have been in 2003–04 of funding local authorities in accordance with the funding formula if a ceiling had not been imposed. [137131]

Mr. Raynsford: If the same grant floors had been retained then the full cost of the floor would have to be entirely financed via the scaling factor for all authorities above the floor. The factors by which grant increases were scaled back would have changed from approximately 0.94 to 0.84 for education authorities; from approximately 0.90 to 0.53 for police and fire authorities; and from approximately 0.95 to 0.64 for shire districts.

Alternatively additional money would have to be found to meet the cost of the floor. The total cost of the floor was £266,591,602 for all authorities in 2003–04.

Phil Sawford: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what action he is taking to remove the ceiling imposed on local authorities in order to bring their grant settlement up to the funding formula in future years. [137132]

Mr. Raynsford: The White Paper 'Strong Local Leadership—Quality Public Services' made clear the intentions of the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister to retain floors and ceilings in order to ensure that all authorities receive a reasonable increase in grant, and to avoid large fluctuations in grant from year to year.

Local Government Revenue

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what (a) amount and (b) share of local government revenue was accounted for by (i) revenue support grant, (ii) other Government grants and funds, (iii) universal business rate and (iv) council tax in (A) England and (B) each council tax levying authority in England in (1) 1996–97 and (2) 2002–03. [137220]

Mr. Raynsford: A table showing figures for England is available in the Library of the House.

Mobile Phone Masts

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the effects of the recent high court judgement concerning the issue of health and mobile phone mast planning applications. [136825]

Keith Hill: The judgment by Mr. Justice Richards on 22 October in the case of "Phillips v The First Secretary of State and others" was about the compliance with the procedural requirements in the planning appeal process and was confined to its own facts. It does not have any wider ramifications.

The judgment reflects Planning Policy Guidance Note 8: Telecommunications that it is for the decision-maker to decide whether health concerns are a material consideration and what weight to place on them.

Nevertheless, PPG8 states that, in the Government's view, if a proposed mobile phone base station meets the international guidelines for public exposure (the ICNIRP guidelines) it should not be necessary for a local planning authority, in processing an application, to give further consideration to the health aspects and any concerns about them. It remains the Government's firm view that the planning system is not the appropriate mechanism for determining health safeguards.

New Deal

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister if he will list the (a) schemes and (b) funding made available to St. Helens South since 1998 under the New Deal for Communities. [134647]

Yvette Cooper: There are no New Deal for Communities (NDC) Partnerships in St. Helens South, and so no NDC funding has been made available in the area. However St. Helens does receive Neighbourhood Renewal Funding.

The 39 NDC areas were chosen by firstly considering the degree, intensity and extent of deprivation in different areas, based on the 1998 (then current) Index of Local Deprivation. Secondly, we aimed to have a regional spread, so that lessons could be learnt from experiences across the whole country. Each NDC Partnership has a grant of between £35 million to £62 million to spend over the 10-year lifetime of the Programme.

Newcastle-Gateshead Pathfinder

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what discussions he has had with Newcastle Gateshead Pathfinder dealing with the under-occupancy in designated local government wards in Newcastle and Gateshead; and if he will make a statement. [136024]

Keith Hill: The Newcastle/Gateshead Pathfinder's initial strategic scheme has been received by the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister will be discussing the details of the scheme with the pathfinder in the coming weeks. One of the aims of the pathfinder programme is to achieve a better match between the housing stock available locally and the needs of households in the pathfinder area. It is expected that pathfinder strategies will propose a mixture of clearance, new build and refurbishment/remodelling to achieve this better balance.

In addition, local authorities are subject to regular monitoring by the Audit Commission Housing Inspectorate's Best Value regime which checks for the efficient use of public sector housing stock in meeting the needs of local residents.

Out-of-borough Housing (Newham)

John Cryer: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what funds the London borough of Newham claimed from Her Majesty's Government for expenditure on out-of-borough housing in each of the past five years. [135585]

Keith Hill: Resources for local authority housing during this period were provided through the Housing Investment Programme and Housing Revenue Account subsidy. It is for authorities to use their resources as they see fit. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister does not collect information on the amount that may have been spent on particular dwellings.

Planning (Section 106)

Mr. Drew: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what advice he offers local authorities on the operation of section 106 development gains, with particular regard to the amount of land allocated to social and affordable housing. [136750]

Keith Hill: National policy for England is set out in Circular 1/97 on Planning Obligations (January 1997) which sets out guidelines on the use of planning obligations. Broadly, it requires planning obligations to be: necessary; relevant; directly related to proposed development; fairly and reasonably related in scale and kind to the proposed development; and reasonable in all other respects. The Circular only gives a general indication of what might be reasonable, since establishing the relationship between a particular planning benefit and an individual development must be a matter of judgement, exercised in the light of local circumstances, rather than an issue for detailed national prescription.

National policy for England on planning for affordable housing is currently provided in Planning Policy Guidance Note 3 on Housing (March 2000) and Circular 6/98 (April 1998) on Planning and Affordable Housing. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has recently proposed changes to this policy framework and these are set out in the consultation document 'Influencing the size, type and affordability of housing' (July 2003). These changes will be accompanied by practical advice on what works well and where.

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the Government's proposals to modify the section 106 planning procedure. [136896]

Keith Hill: I refer the hon. Member to the Parliamentary Statement given on 6 November 2003, Official Report, column 39WS.

Planning Inspectors' Reports

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many decisions after receipt of planning inspectors' reports have been delayed for longer than (a) three, (b) six and (c) nine months in the last three years. [137705]

Keith Hill: The information requested on planning decisions was not centrally recorded in suitable format prior to April 2002 and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The records held by the Government Offices only record whether cases were completed before the primary target of eight weeks and secondary target of 13 weeks or after the secondary target.

	April 2000 to March 2001	April 200 to March 2002
Total decisions (Number)	173	189
Less than the secondary target (13 weeks) (Percentage)	58	55
Longer than the secondary target (13 weeks) (Percentage)	42	45

However, the information requested is available for cases dealt with by Planning Central Casework Division in the Office of the Deputy Prime Minster since April 2002.

	April 2002 to March 2003	April 2003 to September 2003
Total decisions	183	162
Longer than three months	32	28
Longer than six months	1	12
Longer than nine months	0	0

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what target he sets for the length of time he takes to reach a decision after receipt of an inspector's report on a planning inquiry. [137706]

Keith Hill: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister's target (shared between Planning Central Casework Division (PCCD) and the Planning Inspectorate (PINS)) is, by March 2004, to decide 80 per cent. of called in planning applications and my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister appeals within 16 weeks of the close of inquiry. Half the necessary improvement was secured in the first year.

Recommended Consultants

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister whether his Department maintains a list of recommended consultants to be employed by local authorities for conducting (a) best value studies and (b) privatisation or voluntary transfer of council housing stock. [137500]

Keith Hill: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given on 6 October 2003, Official Report, column 1026W.

Regional Spatial Strategy

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what role he will have under the new Planning Bill in deciding (a) the total number of houses that are to be included in the Regional Spatial Strategy and (b) the number of houses that each local authority is to be allocated; and whether county councils will become statutory consultees in this process. [136903]

Keith Hill: In relation to (a) under the Planning and Compulsory Purchase Bill, as now, the regional planning body would propose the number of new dwellings that should be provided in its region. In relation to (b) the RPB would be able to distribute this provision on a sub-regional basis, for example according to housing market areas, and to identify the consequences for each local planning authority. Both the total number and its distribution would then be tested at an examination in public. My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister would receive a report of the Panel which conducted the examination and decide whether to confirm the proposals. Under the draft regulations for Part 1 of the Bill, county councils would be statutory consultees in the RPB's preparation of the draft figures.

Resource Equalisation

Mr. Luff: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will list the local authorities that both do not receive area cost adjustment and lose government grant in 2003–04 under the resource equalisation arrangements. [136724]

Mr. Raynsford: No authority lost grant in 2003–04, as every authority received an increase of at least 3 per cent. The following authorities both do not receive area cost adjustment and had a lower increase than they would have done had the additional resource equalisation element not been introduced for 2003–04:

Shire Districts:

Bromsgrove
Christchurch
East Dorset

Shire Counties:

Cornwall
Cumbria
Derbyshire
Devon
Dorset
Durham
Lancashire
Leicestershire
Lincolnshire
Norfolk
North Yorkshire
Northumberland
Nottinghamshire
Shropshire
Somerset
Staffordshire
Suffolk
Worcestershire

Shire Unitary Authorities:

Bournemouth
East Riding of Yorkshire
Herefordshire
North Lincolnshire
Poole
Rutland
Telford and the Wrekin
Torbay
York

Rough Sleepers

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what action he is taking to reduce the number of rough sleepers over the winter. [136439]

Yvette Cooper: The Homelessness Directorate within the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister brings together the work of the former Rough Sleepers Unit, the Bed and Breakfast Unit and a team to ensure the effective implementation of the Homelessness Act 2002 and assist local authorities in the development of strategies to tackle homelessness.

The Directorate continues to work closely with local authorities and voluntary sectors to reduce the number of rough sleepers throughout the year.

As of June 2003, local authority statistics show that 504 people were sleeping rough on any single night. This figure sustained my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's target to reduce rough sleeping by at least two-thirds from a baseline figure of 1,850 in June 1998 and is the lowest recorded level.

To ensure the two thirds reduction is sustained, key local authorities have been asked to draw up strategies for their areas for the period up to 31 March 2004 in consultation with local voluntary agencies and other partner organisations.

Special Advisers

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister on how many occasions between 31 March 2002 and 31 March 2003 (a) departmental and (b) non-departmental Special Advisers have travelled abroad in an official capacity; what places were visited; and how much each visit cost. [126660]

Yvette Cooper: Between 29 May 2002 and 31 March 2003, Special Advisers in the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister have travelled abroad on four occasions, at an average cost of £3,770 per trip, visiting Brazil, South Africa, India and Denmark on official business. All travel by Special Advisers is undertaken fully in accordance with the rules set out in the Ministerial Code and the Civil Service Management Code, copies of which are available in the Libraries of the House.

Tenancy Deposit Scheme

Mr. Caton: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what percentage of private landlords in England and their agents have participated in the voluntary tenancy deposit scheme. [137107]

Keith Hill: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Coventry, South on 22 October 2002, Official Report, column 564W.

Mr. Caton: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what discussions members of his Department have held with representatives of the Welsh Assembly Government on extending the voluntary tenancy deposit scheme to Wales. [137108]

Keith Hill: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has not discussed with the Welsh Assembly extending the pilot Tenancy Deposit Scheme. Since it has been a voluntary scheme, it is for the Assembly to decide if it should wish to implement a similar scheme in Wales.

Mr. Caton: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what assessment he has made of the voluntary tenancy deposit scheme in England. [137109]

Keith Hill: The University of York evaluated the pilot Tenancy Deposit Scheme. This was published in December 2002 in the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister report "An Evaluation of the Pilot Tenancy Deposit Scheme".

Mr. Caton: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister (1) what plans he has to introduce legislation to govern deposits made to landlords by tenants; [137110]

(2) if he will introduce a statutory tenancy deposit scheme to (a) hold deposit moneys and (b) independently resolve disputes between landlord and tenant at the end of a tenancy. [137112]

Keith Hill: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister intends to meet the Law Commission and stakeholders later this year, to discuss the possibility of legislating for the protection of tenancy moneys in connection with the Law Commission's work on tenure reform.

Mr. Caton: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what assessment he has made of the extent to which private landlords unjustifiably withhold deposits paid by tenants. [137111]

Keith Hill: The Survey of English Housing has for several years asked tenants about what happened to the deposit for the tenancy they had left most recently. The survey has consistently reported that up to 20 per cent. of tenants considered that the withholding of their deposits, either in part or in full, had to some extent been unreasonable. These figures are, of course, based on tenant perception, and on any objective test, such as independent adjudication, a lower figure of unjustified withholding might be expected.

TRANSPORT

Air Transport (Lost Luggage)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with (a) BA and (b) other carriers operating from UK airports concerning lost and misrouted luggage; and if he will make a statement. [137852]

Mr. McNulty: The Government have not been involved in any recent discussions with airlines regarding lost or misrouted luggage. However, all the major full service UK airlines have signed up to the European Voluntary Commitments on Air Passenger Rights, which were launched in February 2002. These contain non-legally binding commitments to deliver defined standards of service to air travellers.

Signatory airlines agree to make every reasonable effort to deliver mishandled bags to the passenger within 24 hours of their arrival at the final destination, free of charge. In addition, airlines undertake to offer immediate assistance sufficient to meet the reasonable short-term needs of passengers faced with missing baggage.

Where luggage has been lost, the 1929 Warsaw Convention places a general liability on the airline, although this liability is limited in respect of compensatory rights. The 1999 Montreal Convention will update the maximum level of damages payable for lost or damaged baggage to approximately £850 per passenger.

Bechtel

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the contracts for consultancy and other work carried out by Bechtel in each year since 1997 by his Department's predecessors in areas relating to transport, stating in each case (a) the nature of the work, (b) the value of the contract and (c) the duration of the contract; and if he will make a statement. [137737]

Mr. McNulty: Neither the Department for Transport nor its predecessors has awarded any contracts to Bechtel since 1997 in areas relating to Transport.

London Underground

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether the sharing of windfall profits was the subject of negotiations with the infrastructure companies in the London Underground Public Private Partnership contracts; whether provision is made for windfall profits in the contracts; and if he will make a statement. [137521]

Mr. McNulty: Windfall profits were considered in the negotiations between London Underground and the PPP consortia.

The contracts provide the infrastructure companies reasonable certainty that they will receive a level of payment sufficient to earn an agreed rate of return if they are economic and efficient in delivering the services. The periodic reviews, every 7½ years, by the independent PPP Arbiter will, among other things, aim to enable the infrastructure companies to earn an agreed rate of return for the next period, while providing efficient and economic delivery of their services and take account of the rate of return earned in previous period.

The contracts specify that in the event of the infrastructure company re-financing its debt, London Underground Ltd. would receive a share of any benefit.

Performance Monitoring

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what the total cost was of (a) setting, (b) monitoring and (c) measuring the performance targets for his Department in 2002–03; and how many and what grades of civil servants monitor these targets. [137958]

Mr. McNulty: Performance targets for the department were agreed as part of Spending Review 2002. The monitoring and measurement of PSA targets forms part of departmental performance management. Performance management is an integral part of the day to day running of the department, and as such it is not possible to separate out the specific costs. The monitoring of progress towards, and performance against, the department's PSA targets is undertaken by a wide variety of staff at all levels of the organisation.

Railway Violence

Mr. Lazarowicz: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many incidents of violence on railway trains have been reported to British Transport Police in the last three years for which figures are available, broken down by operating company. [137190]

Mr. McNulty: The British Transport Police (BTP) does not record crime statistics broken down by train operating company. However, the BTP have provided information regarding incidents of violence on trains for the last four years. Table 1 shows the total number of offences reported in England and Wales and Table 2 shows the total number of offences reported in Scotland.

TREASURY

Tax Credits

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people in (a) the North West region, (b) Merseyside and (c) St. Helens South are in receipt of the working tax credit. [137986]

Dawn Primarolo: The information for the North West region appears in the July and October 2003 issues of "Child and Working Tax Credit Quarterly Statistics".

Information on the number of families in Merseyside and St. Helens South receiving the child and working tax credits at July 2003 appears in "Child and Working Tax Credit Statistics. Geographical analyses".

These publications can be found on the Inland Revenue website, at www.inlandrevenue.gov.uk/stats/personal-tax-credits/menu.htm.

Building Repairs (VAT)

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he will reply to the letter dated 3 October from the Member for Banff and Buchan to the hon. Member for Wentworth, regarding VAT on building repairs. [137583]

John Healey: I have done so.

Carrier Bags

Janet Anderson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the merits of introducing a tax on carrier bags supplied by supermarkets. [137093]

John Healey: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Selly Oak (Lynne Jones) on 22 October 2002 Official Report, column 213W.

Census 2001

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what action his Department will take in response to the recent report by the Statistics Commission on the accuracy of the 2001 census for the Westminster city council area; [136989]

(2) if he will ask the Statistics Commission to investigate the accuracy of the 2001 census in Blackpool; [136990]

(3) what assessment his Department has made of the implications for the reliability of the census population statistics for Blackpool of the recent Statistics Commission report on the accuracy of the 2001 census for Westminster. [136991]

John Healey: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Gordon Marsden, dated 11 November 2003:

As National Statistician and Registrar General for England and Wales I have been asked to reply to your recent questions asking: what action will be taken in response to the recent report by the Statistics Commission on the accuracy of the 2001 census for the Westminster City Council area (136989), whether the Statistics Commission will be asked to investigate the accuracy of the 2001 census count in Blackpool (136990) and what assessment has been made of the implications for the reliability of the census population statistics for Blackpool of the recent Statistics Commission report on the accuracy of the 2001 census for Westminster. (136991)

It is for the Office for National Statistics (ONS) to take forward the recommendations from the report by the Statistics Commission on the accuracy of the 2002 census for Westminster. ONS has welcomed this report and is considering what action is required. The Statistics Commission has made several recommendations about how ONS should proceed with Westminster, and recognised that this work was already underway. A report on the Westminster and Manchester exercise is planned for Spring 2004.

The Statistics Commission report on the Census in Westminster concluded that no alternative approach would have produced more reliable results overall and that it seems likely that the 2001 Census was significantly better than any of its recent predecessors. The Statistics Commission's report does make a number of recommendations for further work that should be carried out by ONS but the Commission made no proposals about which ONS had not already published our intention to act or to carry out further research.

Although I recognise that there was a relatively large fall in the 2001 Census-based population estimate for Blackpool compared to previous estimates, I am not aware of any particular cause for concern about the latest published population estimates for Blackpool. If you have some work that challenges this judgement, I would most certainly respond to it.

The Statistics Commission is an independent body and it is not my role to attempt to influence their work programme.

On 4 November, I published a revised population estimate for Manchester that took account of the results of the address matching exercise. This was accompanied by a document outlining the process that ONS intend to adopt to periodically validate the annual population estimates of local authorities. I will arrange for this document to be sent to you, along with two recent ONS reports (on population statistics and our approach to the next Census) that you may find of value.

Councillor Expenses

Mr. Flook: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what policy advice the Inland Revenue gives to local authorities on the taxation of the expenses given to a councillor in a mayoral year. [137244]

Dawn Primarolo: Guidance to local councils on the expenses and allowances payable to councillors and civic dignitaries is published by the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister (ODPM).

The ODPM guidance includes advice provided by the Inland Revenue on tax and National Insurance issues.

Creative Industries/Tourism

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of the UK workforce was employed in creative industries in 2002–03. [135836]

Estelle Morris: I have been asked to reply.

The most recent estimate of employment in the creative industries is for June 2002. It is estimated that at that time 6.7 per cent. of the UK workforce were employed in the creative industries, or in creative occupations outside of the creative industries.

ECOFIN

Mr. Hood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the outcome was of the ECOFIN Council held on 4th November; what the Government's stance was on the issues discussed, including its voting record; and if he will make a statement. [137073]

Mr. Gordon Brown: I attended ECOFIN on 4 November.

The Council decided to postpone the discussion on the Excessive Deficit Procedure for France (recommended u nder Article 1 04(8)) until the next ECOFIN on 25 November. France has committed to a budget deficit of less than 3 per cent. of GDP in 2005. The presidency concluded that postponement was the favoured option.

The Council endorsed the Economic Policy Committee (EPC) report on the impact of ageing populations on public finances and confirmed the mandate to EPC to produce new common budgetary projections by mid-2005 on the basis of approach outlined in the EPC report. The Council also invited the EPC to produce a study on economic incentives affecting retirement. I led the orientation debate on the Transparency Directive and expressed strong concerns about the regulatory burden of introducing mandatory quarterly reporting across the EU. I supported the principle of transparency but stressed the importance of balance between it and burdensome reporting requirements. The Presidency concluded that there was a realistic chance of finding a solution and Coreper should continue discussions, ahead of the next ECOFIN, according to European Parliament timetable.

On structural indicators for the spring report 2004, the Council adopted the following conclusions:

The ECOFIN Council considers that the Commission's shortlist of headline indicators needs to be improved to contain indicators measuring economic reform. The EPC should continue its work with a view to achieving this.

Council conclusions were also agreed on the role of customs in the management of external borders.

At the request of Belgium, the Council discussed the process for finalising agreements with the UK's dependent and associated territories and Member States, concerning the taxation of savings. It was concluded that this issue would be discussed further at alater stage.

Before the formal meeting, a dialogue with the Candidate Countries took place. The Commission congratulated the Accession States on preserving macroeconomic stability in difficult times, but stressed that challenges remained on public finances and public sector reform.

Over lunch, Finance Ministers discussed the Intergovernmental Conference. The Chancellor stressed that tax harmonization and a federal approach to fiscal policy would be damaging for Europe's economic interests. Finance Ministers should work together to ensure outcomes from the Inter-Governmental Conference that enhanced the ability of European countries to raise productivity and employment levels and ensured that Member States retain a central role in determining their economic policies.

EDS

Dr. Cable: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer pursuant to his answer of 29 October 2003, Official Report, column 243W, on EDS, what sums have been paid (a) in VAT and (b) in respect of capital purchases by the Inland Revenue since 1998–99; and if he will make a statement. [136947]

Dawn Primarolo: The information requested is as follows:

(a)	£ million
1998–99	44.9
1999–2000	51.8
2000–01	51.4
2001–02	76.1
2002–03	64.7

(b)	£ million
1998–99	48.0
1999–2000	43.4
2000–01	46.9
2002–03	37.9

During 2001–02 and 2002–03 the Inland Revenue exercised its right under its contract with EDS to buy out the future finance lease obligations for the EDS-held assets used to provide IT services to the Inland Revenue under the terms of the IT service agreement. This did not affect the legal status of the contract.

Fuel Duty

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment was made of the environmental effects before setting duty rates for (a) liquefied petroleum gas and (b) biodiesel in the 2003 Finance Bill. [137499]

John Healey: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Waveney (Mr. Blizzard), 8 September 2003, Official Report, column 102W.

Income Tax

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people (a) paid income tax and (b) paid no income tax in each of the last 10 tax years. [136749]

Dawn Primarolo: I refer the hon. Gentleman to table 2.1 on the Inland Revenue website for the number of taxpayers in the UK http://www.inlandrevenue.gov.uk/stats/income_tax/it_t01_1.htm and the Office For National Statistics website for the population estimates for the United Kingdom for the years 1991–2000, 2001 and 2002 respectively.

http://www.statistics.gov.uk/statbase/Expodata/Spreadsheets/D6627.xls

http://www.statistics.gov.uk/statbase/Expodata/Spreadsheets/D7092.xls

http://www.statistics.gov.uk/statbase/Expodata/Spreadsheets/D7100.xls

The number of people that paid no income tax can be derived by subtracting the number of taxpayers from the population estimates.

Pensioners (Income Tax)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many and what percentage of pensioners paid income tax in each nation of the United Kingdom in (a) 1996–97 and (b) 2002–03, broken down by region. [137219]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 10 November 2003]: Estimates for the number and proportion of taxpaying pensioners for the years 1996–97 and 2002–03 by Government Office Region are given in the table.

	Number of taxpaying pensioners (numbers: thousands)[1]		Percentage of pensioners paying tax[2]
Region	1996–97[3]	2002–03[4]	1996–97	2002–03

North East	140	200	30	40
North West and Mersyside	420	530	34	42

[1] Men aged 65 and over and women aged 60 and over.

[2] Mid-year population estimates on the number of pensioners are supplied by the Office for National Statictics.

[3] This estimate is based upon the 1996–97 Survey of Personal Incomes.

[4] This estimate is based upon the 200–01 Survey of Personal Incomes and is consistent with April 2003 budget.

National Insurance Fund

Paul Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the amount of the Treasury supplement to the National Insurance Fund for the current year if it were paid at the rate specified in section 1(5) of the Social Security Act 1973; and what proportion of the total cost of the basic pension this would be. [132275]

Dawn Primarolo: The rate of Treasury supplement varied each year. The rate that applied when it was abolished in 1988–89 was 5 per cent. On this basis, Treasury supplement (if it still applied) would be £3.4 billion in 2003–04.

Private Schools

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the effect on Treasury revenues of the exemption for private schools arising from their charitable status from (a) income tax, (b) corporation tax, (c) capitals gains tax, (d) stamp duty and (e) inheritance tax on gifts in each of the last five years. [137468]

Dawn Primarolo: Information is not available on the costs of charitable reliefs broken down by type of charity. The available information relates to all charities and is published in Table 10.2 of Inland Revenue Statistics at: www.inlandrevenue.gov.uk/stats/charities/menu.htm.

St. Helena

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will take steps to amend tax legislation to make St. Helena a tax-free zone; [137434]

(2) if he will provide tax breaks for companies who relocate their offices to St Helena. [137438]

Dawn Primarolo: No. The fiscal affairs of St. Helena are primarily for its own Government. The UK would only intervene in exceptional circumstances.

Stamp Duty Land Tax

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer pursuant to his answer of 3 November 2003, Official Report, columns 455–56W, on stamp duty land tax, if he will publish his assessment of the impact of stamp duty land tax on the retail sector. [137603]

Ruth Kelly: The impact of stamp duty land tax on the retail sector was considered and discussed as part of the recent consultation process, as my earlier answer made clear. However, no formal assessment has been made of the impact on the retail sector.

VAT Registrations

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the reasons are for the differences in the statistics on value added tax registrations and de-registrations published by HM Customs and Excise in its value-added tax bulletin for September, dated 20 October and by the Department of Trade and Industry in its Statistical News Release 03/111, dated 21 October. [137659]

John Healey [holding answer 10 November 2003]: The data published by the Department of Trade and Industry's Small Business Service is taken from the Inter-Departmental Business Register and not directly from HM Customs and Excise.

Customs and Excise receive their data directly from traders' requests to register and deregister. These figures are published in the VAT Bulletin.

The same data is passed to the Office for National Statistics who modify it to their own standards and definitions before incorporating into their Inter-Departmental Business Register. These adjustments exclude companies with a zero turnover and amalgamate separately-registered businesses which are part of a single 'enterprise'.

ENVIRONMENT, FOOD AND RURAL AFFAIRS

Action Energy Loans

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) how many defaults there have been on the repayment of action energy loans; and what the total value is of the loans on which defaults in payment have occurred; [132665]

(2) how much money has been committed to the Carbon Trust in action energy loans in each year since the loan scheme was established; what the average time agreed for the repayment of a loan is; and if she will make a statement; [132666]

(3) how many applications for action energy loans have been made to the Carbon Trust in each year since the loan scheme was established; how many applications were successful; and if she will make a statement. [132667]

Margaret Beckett: The Carbon Trust is a private company launched in April 2001, as part of the Climate Change Levy package, to take the lead on energy efficiency for business and the public sector, and to support the development of a low carbon economy in the UK. The Carbon Trust's Action Energy loans scheme provides interest-free loans of between £5,000 and £50,000 to small and medium-sized enterprises for energy efficiency projects.

The Action Energy loan scheme run by the Carbon Trust is financed through its grant funding from Defra and the devolved Administrations. The Action Energy loan scheme covering England and Wales became fully operational in January 2003. Loan agreements with companies based in England and Wales operate with a fixed repayment schedule over 48 months. In April 2003 Loan Action Northern Ireland ceased and the Carbon Trust launched Action Energy Loans in its place. Loan agreements with companies based in Northern Ireland operate a repayment schedule over 12, 24, 36, or 48 months depending upon the value of the projected energy savings.

The Carbon Trust inform me that since becoming fully operational in January 2003 the Action Energy loan scheme has, up to the end of September 2003, received 458 enquires about the scheme and formally agreed 49 loans with a value of £1,325,916.63 (these data incorporate figures from Northern Ireland from April onwards), and to date there have been no defaults on Action Energy Loan repayments.

Better Payment Practice Code

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what her Department's policy is on the application of the Government's Better Payment Practice Code. [136839]

Margaret Beckett: Defra's payment policy is to pay invoices within 30 days of receipt and agreement of a valid invoice properly supported with proof of delivery of the goods, services and works requested. Defra is a signatory to the Government's Better Payment Practice Code. My Department's payment performance is reported annually to Parliament.

English Nature

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the future of English Nature. [137139]

Alun Michael: We strongly support the role and work of English Nature. Lord Haskins was asked to review the way the Government delivers its rural policy. This included the activities of those organisations that act directly on behalf of Defra, such as English Nature. We have recently received his report and are considering his recommendations carefully. The report has been published today.

Farm Subsidies

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) if she will publish her Department's assessment of the impact on farm business sectors of different options for decoupling; [135351]

(2) what assessment she has made of the relative impact on unsupported livestock farmers of decoupling using (a) regional average and (b) historic methodology. [135355]

Margaret Beckett: A copy of such an assessment made by economists in Defra has been placed in the Library of the House. The assessment was placed on the Department's website on 16 October and copies have been sent to some stakeholders.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what consultations she has had with (a) deer, (b) bison and (c) other unsupported livestock producers about the impact of Common Agricultural Policy reform on their businesses. [135354]

Margaret Beckett: A public consultation was launched on 22 July in England on the CAP reform agreement, seeking views on various options available to member states in implementing the new system. Consultation responses have been received from the British Bison Association, a deer farmer in North Devon and organisations concerned with the welfare of livestock including unsupported species. In previous consultation rounds responses were received from a deer farm in Fife and the British Deer Farmers' Association.

The Farm Animal Welfare Council is one of the Department's key stakeholders on CAP reform and is a member of my noble Friend the Lord Whitty's stakeholder group.

Separate consultations are being undertaken by the Departments responsible for agricultural policy in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland.

Food Supplements

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the action the Government are taking to protect and support the UK food supplements industry. [135765]

Miss Melanie Johnson: I have been asked to reply.

The Government support a safety-based approach to the regulation of food supplements. In considering specific proposals for regulation of this sector, the Government take account of the views of all stakeholders, including the food supplements industry.

Foot and Mouth

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what requirements are placed upon her Department by the (a) National Audit Office and (b) European Union concerning invoices submitted to her Department by contractors in respect of the (i) 2001 outbreak of foot and mouth disease and (ii) subsequent clear-up operation; and if she will make a statement. [132771]

Margaret Beckett: Public bodies are required to operate financial controls that ensure public monies are properly accounted for and that the risks of systematic and systemic overcharging, financial abuse and fraud are minimized and that value for money is secured. A key requirement of this financial control is that there should be a clear audit trail with sufficient supporting documentation at all key stages.

The National Audit Office's role is to enable the Comptroller and Auditor General to certify my Department's financial statements and to examine and report to Parliament on the economy, efficiency and effectiveness of the use of my Department's resources. As such they enabled the C&AG to certify and report on the expenditure incurred by my Department in respect of the (i) 2001 outbreak of foot and mouth disease and (ii) subsequent clear-up operations as recorded in my Department's resource accounts for the years 2000–01 and 2001–02. The National Audit Office also enabled the C&AG to examine and report on whether the Department acted in a cost-effective manner and whether there were adequate controls against irregularity. Their recommendations are contained in their report "The 2001 Outbreak of Foot and Mouth Disease" published by The Stationery Office and available also on the NAO website—www.nao.gov.uk. The House of Commons Committee of Public Accounts published on 14 March 2003 its Fifth Report of Session 2002- 03—the 2001 Outbreak of Foot and Mouth Disease—covering the report, together with Proceedings of the Committee, Minutes of Evidence and an Appendix.

The European Commission auditors are auditing the expenditure incurred in respect of the eradication of foot and mouth disease in 2001. As part of this work commission auditors carry out on the spot checks of the costs incurred during the 2001 outbreak. This includes the examination of invoices.

Labelling

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what steps her Department has taken to ensure that labelling of potatoes in shops and supermarkets indicates the type of potato. [136357]

Miss Melanie Johnson: I have been asked to reply.

The Food Labelling Regulations 1996 (as amended) require potatoes sold in shops and supermarkets to be labelled with the potato variety. Enforcement of these labelling requirements is the responsibility of local authorities. The Food Standards Agency (FSA) has funded the development of a robust DNA method to check whether potato variety information is accurate. In a United Kingdom-wide survey published in October, the FSA found that 96 out of 294 (33 per cent.) samples were not labelled correctly. These results have been passed to the relevant local authorities, which are taking appropriate action.

Livestock Support Payments

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of the risks of market distortion if Scotland or Wales were to apply a different policy from England in respect of the decoupling of livestock support payments. [132632]

Margaret Beckett: Full decoupling of livestock subsidies frees producers to farm in response to market demands. It ensures that resources may be released to undertake more profitable activities rather than being constrained to activities which generate low value added, in order to be eligible for subsidy. The removal of the constraint on producers' choice allows them to alter their activities in order to generate increased incomes or, if they wish, to continue with their current production patterns.

These benefits to producers are independent of any action in other parts of the UK because full decoupling removes the constraints on their business decisions but does not force them to change their activities. It is in producers' best interests in one part of the UK to benefit from full decoupling irrespective of the choices made in other parts. However, if the whole of the UK does not opt for full decoupling then the overall benefits to the economy will be diminished.

Ministerial Statements

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what criteria she has applied when deciding whether to seek to make a statement in the House on the environment since the creation of her Department. [135471]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 30 October 2003]: The Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs has made Oral Statements on a variety of subjects since the creation of Defra in June 2001, including a statement on the environmental issue of climate change (Kyoto protocol) in June 2002. In addition the House is kept informed of Departmental policy by means of Written Ministerial Statements.

Public Bodies (Haskins Review)

Paddy Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when she intends to publish Lord Haskins' review of her Department and its agencies; and if she will make a statement. [137837]

Alun Michael: Lord Haskins was asked to review the way the Government deliver their rural policy. The report has been published today, and a written statement has been made by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State this morning.

Copies of the report are available in the Vote Office.

Joyce Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when she will publish the review of rural delivery policies being undertaken by Lord Haskins. [135076]

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when she will publish Lord Haskins' report into rural delivery. [135367]

Margaret Beckett [holding answer 30 October 2003]: I asked Lord Haskins to review the way the Government deliver their rural policy. I have recently received his report and am considering his recommendations carefully.

The report has been published today.

Waste Management

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make it her policy to place anaerobic digestion on an equal level with composting in the Government's waste hierarchy. [132663]

Margaret Beckett: The Government have agreed that anaerobic digestion should be treated as a contributor to both composting and energy recovery within the Municipal Waste Best Value Indicators. A consultation document seeking views on the options for bringing anaerobic digestion into the composting category of best value and for determining the method for allocating the proportions of treated waste that count towards composting and energy recovery was issued on 15 October. It can be viewed on the Defra website at www.defra.gov.uk/corporate/ consult /anaerobic-digestion.

DEFENCE

Employment (Lancashire and the North-West)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many new jobs have been created in (a) the north west and (b) Lancashire through the Defence Diversification Agency. [136910]

Mr. Caplin: The Defence Diversification Agency has been operating in the north west of England since 1999 and has so far assisted over 200 technology transfer proposals from the Ministry of Defence to a value in excess of £1 million. A further 350 potential projects have been identified and it is estimated that up to ten times that number of companies in the region could benefit from DDA assistance.

There are currently no reliable techniques for translating the impact of technology transfer into new jobs created. However, the DDA is exploring methods of measuring value with a view to implementing appropriate measurement tools into future projects. Estimates for audit work for the Northwest Development Agency on a contract it has with the DDA suggests the DDA adds value through its activities of around three times that of its costs.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people are employed by his Department in (a) Lancashire and (b) the north-west. [136911]

Mr. Caplin: The number of people employed by the Department (headcount figure for permanent, non-industrial and industrial staff, excluding Trading Funds, Royal Fleet Auxiliaries and those on career breaks, long-term sick leave, secondments etc.) as at 1 October 2003, in the north-west, is 2,800. Reliable data are not currently available at county level.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many armed forces personnel work in Lancashire. [136912]

Mr. Caplin: In July 2002, the latest date for which figures are available, there were 490[1] armed forces personnel working in Lancashire, 60 in Fylde local authority area and 420 in Preston local authority area.

[1] All figures are rounded to the nearest 10. Due to rounding methods used, that total may not always equal the sum of the parts.

Iraq

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the deployment of reservist forces to Iraq; what the longest period served by a reservist in Iraq has been; and what range of specialisms has been covered by reservists in Iraq. [137547]

Mr. Caplin: The range of specialisms provided by reservists to support Operation Telic broadly reflects those possessed by the Regular Forces plus a number of specialist areas unique to the Reserves. The range includes: RN amphibious warfare advisers, logisticians, intelligence analysts, linguists, RN mine warfare specialists, media operations, combat engineers, amphibious bridging specialists, signallers, port operating specialists, NBC warfare specialists, movements personnel, medical personnel, meteorologists, aircrew, ground crew, railway specialists, POL operators, HGV drivers, cooks, ambulance crews, administrative staff and the Army and Royal Marine combat arms.

The individual reservist who has served longest in Iraq is an Army military intelligence specialist who was called-out for service on 2 February 2003 and who has volunteered to extend his period of service to 2 August 2004. Obviously, this does not represent the normal experience as most reservists will serve no more than six months in Iraq.

Military Equipment Gifts

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the military equipment including (a) a description of the equipment, (b) the quantity and (c) the intended recipient gifted by the Government to other countries since September 2002; and which of those gifts were funded from the Global Conflict Prevention Fund. [136284]

Mr. Ingram: The following items have been gifted to other countries since September 2002:

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the visits made by Ministers in his Department in each of the last five years, broken down by constituency. [136913]

Mr. Caplin: This information is not held centrally and can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Procurement Costs

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the average cost was of procuring (a) each Eurofighter Typhoon, (b) one Challenger II battle tank, (c) one Type 45 destroyer, (d) one Astute submarine and (e) one Nimrod aeroplane. [136809]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 10 November 2003]: Unit production costs (UPC) for major equipment programmes, where these are practical to construct, can be found within the information given in the Ministry of Defence Major Projects Report (MPR). Those figures are estimated in accordance to methodology agreed with the National Audit Office (NAO). The NAO expect to publish their MPR 2003 in December and copies will be available as normal in the Library of the House.

Current estimated unit production costs for the projects listed are as follows:

Programme	Comment	MPR UPC (£ million)
Typhoon	MPR 03	56.8
Challenger II battle tank	Challenger II last appeared in the MPR in 2000 as delivery concluded in FY 2001–02	3.7
Type 45 destroyer	MPR 03. (Includes PAAMS missile systems)	552.7
Astute class submarine	The current estimated total resource cost for the three boats on contract of £3.6 billion includes design, development and other costs specific to a first of class. These costs would not be attributable to further buys should any subsequent orders be made. The National Audit Office has agreed that a it would be misleading to produce a UPC for Astute at this stage.	—
Nimrod MRA4	No UPC is provided in the MPR, however an indicative figure has been given here. For Nimrod MRA4, a significant part of the Agreement with BAE Systems announced on 19 February by the Minister for Defence Procurement was the separation of production from design and development until we have seen demonstrated performance from the first three aircraft used for flight trials. The indicative production cost of Nimrod MRA4 will thereafter be influenced by the outcome of these design and development results, timing of build and appropriate contractual negotiations.	60

It should be noted that unit production costs are on a resource account basis and exclude development costs.

Recruitment

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people were recruited to each of HM armed forces in the most recent year for which figures are available, broken down by region. [137502]

Mr. Caplin: I refer my hon. Friend to the answers I gave on 17 September 2003, Official Report, column 754W, and 29 October 2003, Official Report, columns 222–27W, to the hon. Member for Moray (Angus Robertson).

Secondments

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many civil servants in his Department are seconded to other (a) Governments, (b) organisations and (c) companies; to which; for how long; and if he will make a statement. [136522]

Mr. Caplin: Information available on Ministry of Defence civil servants seconded to other Governments is not held centrally. As at 3 November 2003 personnel currently seconded from the Department to companies and organisations is outlined in the following two tables:

Outward secondments to companies

Submarines (Radiation)

Mr. Peter Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence to what type of radiation (a) submariners and (b) radiation workers are exposed when they leave radiation-controlled areas on board submarines. [137697]

Mr. Caplin: Both submariners and radiation workers leaving radiation-controlled areas may be exposed to very low levels of gamma and neutron radiation on board the submarine, if the reactor is operating. The construction of the submarine, and controls on occupancy of all areas, ensure that the amount of such radiation received by personnel is below Ministry of Defence's self-imposed limits, which are themselves well below all legal limits. If the reactor is shut down, the gamma and neutron radiation falls to natural background radiation levels.

Territorial Army

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many resignations from the Territorial Army have been tendered in each of the past 10 years; and how many have been received in 2003 to date. [137726]

Mr. Caplin [holding answer 10 November 2003]: Data are not held centrally on the number of tendered resignations from the Territorial Army prior to 1998. Once the information from 1998 onwards has been collated, I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Unmanned Aircraft

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much his Department spent on research on unmanned aircraft in each of the last 10 years. [137339]

Mr. Ingram: The Ministry of Defence has a long-established research programme into Unmanned Aerial Vehicles (UAVs), with a total of approximately £40 million invested over the past 10 years. The figures for annual expenditure on this research programme are provided in the table.

It should, however, be noted that these figures detail the expenditure on UAV-specific research only: research into technologies such as aerodynamics, stealth and sensors is of relevance to UAVs but has a wide range of applications.

US Military Helicopters

Mr. Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what United States of America military helicopters are based in the UK. [137387]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 10 November 2003]: The MH-53M Pave Low is the only United States military helicopter based in the United Kingdom. Seven of these aircraft are currently based at RAF Mildenhall in Suffolk.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Cross-border Mergers

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on EU proposals on (a) union consultation and (b) board room representation in cross-border mergers. [137422]

Mr. Sutcliffe: The European Commission has not yet made any new proposals for an EC directive regarding cross-border mergers.

Depleted Uranium

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what health protection measures are in place at aircraft manufacturing plants where depleted uranium counter weights are installed in aircraft wings. [136720]

Mr. Browne: I have been asked to reply.

Work with depleted uranium is governed by the Ionising Radiations Regulations 1999 (IRR99) enforced by the Health and Safety Executive and any employer working with depleted uranium has duties under those regulations.

The use of depleted uranium as a counter weight installed in aircraft wings presents little radiological risk and so few, if any health protection measures are required by the IRR99. It is only when the depleted uranium is machined or in some way dispersed as a dust that, because it can be inhaled or ingested, it presents any significant radiological risk. The IRR99 would then require protection measures such as adequate local ventilation and/or the use of appropriate respiratory protection and protective clothing to minimise those risks.

Excess Packaging

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps are being taken to enforce regulations limiting excessive packaging on products. [137543]

Mr. Timms: The Packaging (Essential Requirements) Regulations 2003 are enforced by local Trading Standards Offices who work closely with the packaging industry and producers to advise them on best practice in packaging design and to resolve complaints of excessive packaging. A recent study commissioned by the DTI highlights the extensive changes brought about since the introduction of the Essential Requirements. These relate to improvements in packaging design, including minimisation. This report can be viewed at www.dti.gov.uk/sustainability/finalpackagingreport.htm and is also available from DTI publications order line (0870 150 2500).

Housing and Estate Agents Ombudsman

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many cases were considered by the Housing and Estate Agents Ombudsman in the last year for which figures are available; how many cases were (a) upheld and (b) rejected; what the average time taken was to consider cases; and the average cost per case. [137194]

Mr. Sutcliffe: This is a matter for the Ombudsman for Estate Agents. However, I understand from the Ombudsman's 2002 annual report that 2,306 complaints concerning member agencies within the scheme's terms of reference were received in 2002. Of the 583 cases closed, 340 were found in favour of complainants, 239 in favour of member agents and four outside the terms of reference.

Inward Investment

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps her Department is taking to promote inward investment in the north west. [136916]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: UK Trade and Investment is charged with ensuring that the UK as a whole maintains its place as the number one destination in Europe for inward investment in the EU. It works with the North West Development Agency (NWDA) to provide a tailored service to encourage inward investment in the region. The NWDA uses a targeted approach to secure new investment in key sectors. This contributed towards the north west being the top UK region for job creation in 2002–03.

Mineral Imports

Jeremy Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what investigations have been overtaken by officials of her Department into the production methods of minerals imported from the Democratic Republic of Congo. [136511]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: None.

Miners' Compensation

Jeff Ennis: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many applications for compensation from former miners for (a) chronic bronchitis and emphysema and (b) vibration white finger have not been allowed since the schemes began; and what the average solicitor's fee charged was for dealing with each of these unsuccessful claims. [137019]

Mr. Timms: As of 26 October 2003, 16,383 respiratory disease claims and 11,096 vibration white finger claims have been denied.

Under the Claims Handling Agreement, agreed with the solicitors representing the claimants, no costs are paid to solicitors where a claim is denied.

Philippines

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions (a) her Department and (b) representatives of the Government has had with (i) local communities, (ii) members and representatives of the Government of the Philippines and (iii) non-governmental organisations concerning the activities of UK companies in the mountains of Zamboanga del Norte in the Philippines since 1997; and if she will make a statement. [136937]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: There has been some routine contact with local officials and organisations in Zamboanga City, as elsewhere in the Philippines, on general economic issues. However, officials at the British embassy in Manila have no current knowledge of UK firms with commercial interests or activities in the mountains of Zamboanga del Norte.

The FCO currently advises against all travel to central, southern, and western Mindanao, where the threat of terrorism and kidnapping in the Philippines is greatest. The mountains of Zamboanga del Norte are within this region.

Preferential Trade Status (Israel)

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans she has to reassess the list of countries selected as target markets for preferential trade promotion; if she will withdraw preferential trade promotion status from Israel; and if she will make a statement. [137115]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The trade promotional activities of UK Trade and Investment (formerly British Trade International) reflect commercial developments overseas which present real and specific opportunities for UK industry sectors. In the case of Israel, we have identified opportunities, particularly in the high tech industries, and have developed a programme of activity designed to bring these opportunities to the attention of UK firms.

Small Business Regulation

Linda Perham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans she has to ensure that owners of small businesses are informed by enforcement agencies of (a) new regulations and (b) changes in existing regulations. [136616]

Nigel Griffiths: Individual enforcement agencies are required to publicise new regulations as part of the implementation process developed by SBS. To reinforce this, DTIs Small Business Service also provides a signposting service for all small businesses requiring information on new regulations.

They do this by providing details of current regulations on the Business Link website and in "The No-Nonsense Guide to Government rules and regulations for setting up your business," which was published by Business Link earlier this year.

Our website will shortly highlight changes to regulations as they occur and will enable proactive alerts on these changes.

St. Helena

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the value of (a) imports to and (b) exports from St. Helena was in each of the last five years. [137435]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: According to estimates published by the International Monetary Fund (IMF), St. Helena's trade in goods with the rest of the world were as follows:

St. Helena's trade in goods with the world

Textiles

Sir Archy Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the future of the Government's textile strategy after the end of import quotas in 2005. [137349]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The UK textiles and clothing industry faces tough challenges. The way for this vibrant and innovative industry to secure the future, despite the very real competition faced from China and other low cost suppliers, is through investment, continual innovation, diversifying into new markets or products, more efficient production methods and continually raising its game to remain competitive.

My Department is working with the industry-led Textiles and Clothing Strategy Group, which aims to build a sustainable future for the UK industry by increasing its competitiveness to meet the challenges of globalisation and the impact of the final stage in the phasing out of import quotas in 2005. This work is underpinned by my Department's Manufacturing Strategy, which is helping to ensure that UK manufacturers have the right conditions for growth and sustainability to enable them to improve productivity and to move up the value chain to high skilled, knowledge intensive operations.

Sir Archy Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what import quotas are in place for textiles; and what assessment she has made of the effect of removing them. [137350]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The European Union currently imposes import quotas on imports of certain textiles and clothing products from 19 supplier countries. Under the terms of the GATT/WTO Agreement on Textiles and Clothing (ATC) a ten-year quota phase-out from 1995 is underway and will be completed on 31 December 2004. From 1 January 2005 quotas will only remain on textiles and clothing imports from a small number of non-WTO member countries (e.g. Vietnam, north Korea, Belorus). No assessment of the effects of quota removal specifically on the UK has been made, though an EU-wide assessment is due to be released early in 2004.

Sir Archy Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what tariffs are in place on the import of textiles; what assessment she has made of the future of the tariff system after 2005; and what tariffs are imposed on the import of textiles outside the EU. [137351]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: As a result of the GATT/WTO Uruguay Trade Agreement, maximum EU tariffs on imports of textiles and clothing from 1 January 2004 will be 0 per cent. for textile raw materials, 4 per cent. for yarns, 8 per cent. for fabrics and 12 per cent. for clothing and other made-up items (such as blankets). This represents a small reduction on current rates: a maximum 4.6 per cent. for yarns, 8.2 per cent. for clothing and 12.2. per cent for clothing and made-up items. No further change in the tariff system is expected until the results of the Doha Development Agenda are implemented when we hope to see a significant reduction in global industrial tariffs. EU tariffs are among the lowest in the world in the textile and clothing sector in which tariffs of over 30 per cent. are not uncommon.

Sir Archy Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the value of exports of textiles from (a) the United Kingdom and (b) Scotland was in each of the last 10 years in (i) cash and (ii) real terms. [137354]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Data on the UK and Scotland's exports of textiles are given in the table:

Tribal Peoples (Brazil)

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what assessment her Department has made of the (a) impact and (b) cost to UK companies of the 1998 Brazilian Government decree recognizing and officially demarcating the lands of the Marubo, Matis, Matses, Kanamari, Kulina and Korobo peoples in the Javari valley in Western Amazonia as an indigenous area; and if she will make a statement; [136935]

(2) what assessment her Department has made of the (a) impact on and (b) cost to UK companies of the 1998 reclamation by the native Guarany; peoples of the Jarara, Sucuiy, Lima Ry and Potrero Guacu communities in the state of Mato Grosso do Sul, Brazil; and if she will make a statement. [136936]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: None, since no representations have been made to this department on this issue.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Angola

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what steps the Government are taking to combat poverty in Angola. [136767]

Hilary Benn: Following the 2002 cease-fire between the Government and UNITA, which ended the civil war, there is now opportunity for Angola to achieve sustainable peace and democracy, economic growth and poverty reduction. This is why we have increased DFID's post-conflict Country Programme for Angola from £4.7 million in 2001–02 to £9 million this year to help achieve these objectives.

We are working closely with other international donors to consolidate the peace in Angola and prevent future conflicts; help secure a political system which allows people to influence state policy and practice; and working to influence a basic change in the Government of Angola's approach in the areas of transparency, economic governance and the development of policies to tackle poverty.

In the short term, we will continue to provide humanitarian assistance to meet the immediate needs of destitute people and to contribute towards de-mining to facilitate resettlement and economic and social recovery. We will continue to provide assistance in these areas for as long as this is needed.

Democratic Republic of Congo

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what (a) financial and (b) other assistance his Department (i) is providing and (ii) plans to provide to the Government of the Democratic Republic of Congo; and if he will make a statement. [136860]

Hilary Benn: So long as the transition process remains on track, DFID is planning a significant increase in support to the Democratic Republic of Congo (DRC) over the period 2003–06, with a view to helping DRC make progress towards the Millennium Development Goals.

We have recently informed the Transitional National Government (TNG) of the DRC, and made public, a significant increase in our programme for DRC to £23 million for 2003–04, following the installation of the TNG this summer. The UK is working with other bilateral donors and multi-lateral agencies to ensure a coordinated response to the needs of the DRC. In 2002–03, in addition to £16 million in bilateral assistance, the UK contributed approximately £9 million through the EU, £26 million through the World Bank and £36 million through the UN agencies (including the United Nations Mission to DRC).

Ensuring a successful transition process, including the successful embedding of the TNG, is crucial to our overall goal of ensuring peace and poverty reduction in the DRC and through that, the region as a whole. As a member of the Kinshasa-based International Committee for Support to the Transition, we are pressing for a well developed and shared understanding between donors and government of the transition process, as well as strong day-to-day co-ordination of donor support.

We are providing direct support for the basic infrastructure needs of the Transition Institutions, which include the Offices of the President and the four Vice Presidents, Government, Parliament, Senate, Supreme Court and the five Democracy Support Commissions (Elections, Human Rights, Truth and Reconciliation, Anti-Corruption and Media). We have provided technical assistance for the drawing up of a national Disarmament, Demobilisation and Reintegration (DDR) strategy, and have offered similar support on the Security Sector Reform (SSR) strategy and the Poverty Reduction Strategy (PRS). We are also looking at providing some civil service capacity building support to the Government with UNDP and other donors.

It is crucial for DRC and the wider Great Lakes region that the transition process remains on track. We are therefore making continued efforts to strengthen and consolidate peace, which include humanitarian support, disarmament, demobilisation and reintegration of ex-combatants, army, police and justice sector reform, and grassroots peace-building.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions his Department has had with the Governments of (a) the Democratic Republic of Congo, (b) Rwanda and (c) Uganda regarding the situation in the Democratic Republic of Congo; and if he will make a statement. [136861]

Hilary Benn: The UK is seeking to help resolve conflict and establish conditions for genuine development in the whole of the Great Lakes region. We have maintained a close dialogue with the former Government and now the Transitional National Government (TNG) in Kinshasa and with the Governments of Rwanda and Uganda on the need for good neighbourly relations as the basis for national and regional stability. We continue to do so.

Both Rwanda and Uganda have taken positive steps recently to normalise their relations with the TNG in DRC, including mutual ministerial visits and the signing in New York on 25 September 2003 of a Good Neighbourly Pact, which included commitments that all support for armed groups should end and that there should be no illegal exploitation of natural resources of the DRC.

Development Assistance

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what the UK's combined net public and private investment and development assistance to the developing world was in each year since 1995 in terms of percentage of GDP. [137506]

Hilary Benn: The information requested is given in the following table. Note that such flows are usually expressed as a percentage of gross national income (GNI) rather than GDP.

Total UK net flows (amounts extended less amounts received) to developing countries 1995–2002

£ million

	Official flows	Private flows	Total	As a percentage of GNI

Iraq

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what impact he estimates the security situation in Iraq will have on promotion of (a) democracy and (b) reconstruction of Iraq; and if he will make a statement. [136559]

Hilary Benn: Today there are over 40,000 police on duty in Iraq, the first battalion of the new Iraqi Army has graduated and is on active duty, a major police recruitment and training exercise is under way, and a new police academy has opened in Basra. Over 30 countries (in addition to the UK and US) have a total of 16,000 troops on the ground in Iraq, as part of the international stabilisation effort.

Although the security situation has restricted the activities of the international staff of aid agencies, politicians, coalition officials and Iraqi citizens are able to go about their business. Progress is being made in promoting democracy and undertaking reconstruction. Political parties are forming, the Iraqi media is now free and many newspapers are appearing, and civil society organisations are emerging. Ministries are functioning and plans are being formed to modernise the civil service. In addition, Iraqi business is beginning to grow, infrastructure is being restored and service delivery is improving. Donors have also been undertaking needs assessments and are making arrangements for funding following the successful Madrid Conference.

Nutrition Levels

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what the average nutrition levels are (a) globally, (b) for each continent, (c) in each of the EU member states, (d) in each of the ex-Soviet Union states, (e) in each country in Africa and (f) in West Darfur; and if he will make a statement. [136643]

Hilary Benn: Worldwide, the Food and Agriculture Organisation (FAO) estimated that 840 million people were undernourished in 1998–2000. These figures include 11 million in the industrialised countries, 30 million in countries in transition and 799 million in the developing world. There is no single measure of nutrition levels: different indicators measure different aspects of nutrition. The attached table, based on data in the World Bank's 2003 World Development Indicators, gives figures for three of these indicators where they are available.

Recent reports from West Darfur, Sudan, using rapid assessment techniques indicate very high levels of malnutrition among people displaced by conflict. Relief agencies are seeking, as a matter of urgency, to investigate further using standard assessment methodologies.

The Department for International Development (DFID) is concerned about the situation in all parts of Darfur. DFID has recently provided Save the Children UK with £500,000 for a humanitarian intervention. DFID has also agreed to provide £1 million to UNHCR for Sudanese from Darfur who have sought refuge in Chad. DFID is planning an additional £1 million contribution to the 2003 International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) Appeal for Sudan and a £2 million contribution to the World Food Programme Emergency Operation in Sudan, in response to the situation in Darfur. Other interventions, through international NGOs and United Nations agencies in Darfur, are being considered.

Oil Pipeline (Caucasus)

Valerie Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what the Government's policy is on the proposed oil pipeline from Baku to Ceyhan. [137406]

Hilary Benn: I refer my hon. Friend to the written statement made on 5 November 2003 Official Report, columns 35–36WS, which sets out DFID's position on funding by the International Finance Corporation of the World Bank Group, for the Baku-Tbilisi-Ceyhan pipeline.

St. Helena

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many tourists he estimates will visit St. Helena in each year once (a) the breakwater and (b) the airport is completed. [137227]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: No decisions have been made on whether to build a breakwater or an airport in St. Helena. The possibility of a breakwater, which the island authorities believe would provide safer and assured disembarkation and embarkation at all or most times from and to ships, is to be investigated further for technical and economic viability. For the latest position on possible establishment of air access, I would refer the hon. Gentleman to my Written Statement to this House on 16 September 2003, Official Report, column 43WS. Last year, 7,692 arrivals were recorded by St. Helena's Immigration Department. This figure included 5,362 persons landed from cruise ships. The rest included other tourists, business visitors and those visiting friends and families. Consultants estimated in 2001 that total arrival numbers could increase to 14,850 within five years of establishing access by air. The St. Helena Government estimates that largely assured disembarkation and embarkation of passengers from and to ships could alone more than double the number of cruise ship visitors to the island.

PRIME MINISTER

Departmental Energy Use

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Prime Minister how much (a) electricity and (b) other energy his Department has used in each year since 1997 (i) in total and (ii) per square metre; what the projected use is for each of the following years for which forecasts are made; what plans he has to reduce usage; and if he will make a statement. [135047]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answer the Minister for the Cabinet Office (Mr. Alexander) gave him today.

Engagements

Mr. Cameron: To ask the Prime Minister what arrangements are made for chairing his weekly planning and co-ordination meeting in Downing street when he is unable to attend. [137904]

The Prime Minister: None.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

BBC Charter

Mr. Best: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what organisations she will consult on the forthcoming review of the BBC Charter. [136651]

Tessa Jowell: The review will be wide-ranging, with a great deal of industry and public consultation, and will, I hope, be characterised by vigorous and open debate. I have appointed Lord Burns to give me independent advice throughout. The process will be extensive and thorough, with several opportunities for people to feed in their views, and there will be an appropriate Parliamentary stage.

It will begin before the end of the year when I issue a consultation document outlining the main issues for consideration.

I shall be seeking views from all organisations and individuals with an interest. In particular I will ask those in the broadcasting industry for their views and will feed those views back into the wider consultation process.

Mr. Best: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will make a statement on the process for the forthcoming review of the BBC Charter. [136652]

Tessa Jowell: The review will be wide-ranging, with full industry and public consultation, and I hope, be characterised by vigorous and open debate. It will begin before the end of the year when I issue a consultation document outlining the main issues for consideration. It will take into account Ofcom's review of public service broadcasting, Philip Graf's review of the on-line services, the forthcoming review of the BBC's digital TV and radio services, and numerous other strands of work. We will engage directly with the general public throughout the process on an unprecedented scale. I have appointed Lord Burns to give me independent advice throughout.

I aim to publish a Green Paper around the end of 2004 drawing on this sequence of reviews, consultation and analysis, to be followed by a White Paper containing considered recommendations to set before Parliament and the public. The whole process will be completed well before the Charter expires in 2006.

Bechtel

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will list the contracts for consultancy and other work carried out by Bechtel for agencies responsible to her Department and its predecessor in each year since 1997, stating in each case (a) the nature of the work, (b) the value of the contract and (c) the duration of the contract; and if she will make a statement. [137886]

Mr. Caborn: Neither DCMS nor the Royal Parks Agency have any record of contracts with Bechtel over the period 1997 to 2003.

Commercial Radio Licences

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) when she expects Ofcom to invite applications for a new commercial radio licence in Cornwall; [137428]

(2) what changes she expects Ofcom to make in the process of (a) advertising and (b) issuing new commercial radio licences; [137429]

(3) when she expects Ofcom to resume the advertising of new commercial radio licences. [137430]

Estelle Morris [holding answer 10 November 2003]: These are matters for Ofcom. They will assume responsibility for advertising and awarding radio broadcast licences from the Radio Authority on 29 December 2003.

On 6 November, the Radio Authority announced the award of the local digital multiplex licence serving most parts of Cornwall, and the city of Plymouth, to South West Digital Radio Ltd.

National Lottery

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many applications were (a) received, (b) rejected and (c) successful for Lottery money for London in each of the last five years. [137836]

Estelle Morris: This Department does not keep the information in the form requested.

The following number of awards have been made in London for each of the last five years:

	Number of awards
January 1998 to January 1999	794
January 1999 to January 2000	2,157
January 2000 to January 2001	3,174
January 2001 to January 2002	2,701
January 2002 to January 2003	3,242
January 2003 to 10 November 2003	1,838

This is derived from the Department's Awards Database and is based on information supplied by the distributing bodies.

Shurland Hall, Sheppey

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when the decision on the future of Shurland Hall on the Isle of Sheppey will be announced. [138137]

Estelle Morris: English Heritage is in discussion with the owner and the local planning authority over the proposed strategy for Shurland Hall, which is to convert it into residential property. Subject to the agreement of the current owner and the availability of funds, it is hoped that a first tranche of holding repairs, leading to the removal of the scaffolding, will be implemented in summer 2004.

Sport (EU Competition Legislation)

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what the Government's policy is on the exclusion of sport from the requirements of EU competition legislation; and if she will make a statement. [137137]

Mr. Caborn [holding answer 10 November 2003]: The Government firmly believe that sport like any other activity must abide by the requirements of EU and UK competition legislation.

The Government note that in recent sports cases considered by the European Commission Competition Directorate due note has been taken of the specific characteristics of sport as set out in the declaration on sport made by the 2000 European Council meeting in Nice.

The Government support the proposals to include specific reference to sport in the proposed new European Treaty but is seeking improvements in the text proposed by the European Convention to reflect more accurately the Nice declaration. I discussed detailed textual suggestions with my European colleagues at our informal meeting in Florence on 2–3 October and secured support for a revised text from the overwhelming majority of the 25 states represented. I hope that progress on this text can be made in the current discussions within the Intergovernmental Conference.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Iraq

15. Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress towards establishing a multilateral authority under UN auspices in Iraq. [137411]

Mr. Rammell: United Nations Security Council Resolution 1511, adopted unanimously on 16 October, reaffirms the responsibilities of the Coalition Provisional Authority, supports an Iraqi-led political process, and resolves to strengthen the vital role of the United Nations Assistance Mission in Iraq, as circumstances permit.

23. Ross Cranston: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made in recruiting police to serve in Iraq. [137419]

Mr. Rammell: The Home Secretary has agreed to establish a pool of 200 serving UK police officers to sustain a deployment of 100 officers at any one time. A total of 20 officers have been deployed so far.

The focus of the UK effort is on deploying UK officers to train Iraqi policemen in the police academy in Basra and at the Iraqi Police Training Centre being established in Jordan. 24 officers are currently in training for deployment to Basra in mid December. Provision has been made for up to 75 officers to deploy to Jordan in the next few months, with the first group of 26 set to deploy on 23 November and a further 35 in December.

In addition, A British police Officer, Deputy Chief Constable Douglas Brand, is the senior adviser in the Iraqi Ministry of the Interior. Deputy Chief Constable Stephen White of the Police Service of Northern Ireland is senior police adviser in the South of Iraq. Rin Shadforth (Superintendent Warwickshire Police Retired) is Deputy Director of the Jordan Training School.

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to improve the security afforded to members of the Iraqi Governing Council. [135117]

Mr. Rammell: As part of the Coalition Provisional Authority the UK regularly discusses security with the Iraqi Governing Council (IGC) in a weekly committee. This often focuses on security for IGC members themselves. The CPA takes appropriate practical steps to meet requests made by Council members. The UK is unilaterally providing a protected vehicle to the IGC. However in the interests of security it would be inappropriate to give further details.

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what investigations are being carried out to assess (a) the protection afforded to Aquila al-Hashimi of the Iraqi Governing Council and (b) ways in which her assassination could have been prevented. [135118]

Mr. Rammell: We are awaiting the outcome of a police report into the incident. It is not our policy to comment on security measures for individuals.

Linda Perham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to pass control of the Iraqi Governing Council to Iraqi citizens. [136584]

Mr. Rammell: The Government are committed to helping the Iraqis establish a democracy. The timetable for this process is a matter for the Iraqi people. The United Nations Security Council has invited the Iraqi Governing Council to provide, by 15 December 2003, a timetable and a programme for the drafting of a new constitution for Iraq and for the holding of democratic elections under that constitution.

Linda Perham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to reflect the wishes of the various Iraqi ethnic and religious groups in the formation of the new Iraqi constitution. [136585]

Mr. Rammell: The formation of a new Iraqi constitution is a matter for the Iraqi people.

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs pursuant to his Answer of 10 September 2003, Official Report, column 335W, how many staff reviewed the UNMOVIC document; what their qualifications were; how many staff hours were spent on the review; when they reported to him on their review; and if he will place the review comments in the Library. [131371]

Mr. MacShane: The UNMOVIC document was the culmination of 18 months of analysis of the final report of UNSCOM and the findings of the Amorim panel which initially reviewed that report. Although primarily the work of UNMOVIC staff, its drafting was overseen by the UNMOVIC Commissioners, a group drawn from 15 countries. The UK Commissioner is a senior member of staff of the Ministry of Defence. Ministry of Defence and Foreign and Commonwealth Office officials, together with officials of other interested UK Government Departments, were fully involved in the drafting process. The reviewing of the reliability and robustness of information in the report formed an integral part of producing the final, published version.

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much the Iraq Government owes to each member of the Paris Club of countries. [136437]

Mr. Rammell: The Paris Club of official creditors issued a press release on 10 July stating that Iraq's debt to members stood at US$21,018 million, all of which results from credits contracted before August 1990. It also noted that adding late interest would roughly double that amount. I am placing a copy of this press release, which includes details of outstanding Iraqi debts owed to all Paris Club members into the Library of the House. It can also be found at http://www.clubdeparis.org/rep_upload/030600pr-cleanfinal.pdf.

The UK Government hold unrecovered claims of more than £620 million plus an estimated interest accruing over the past 12 years of around £525 million. These claims result from export credits. Iraq does not have any UK official development assistance debt.

Afghanistan

16. Mr. Dhanda: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the President of Afghanistan on the work in that country of the UN Office for the Co-ordination of Humanitarian Affairs. [137412]

Mr. Rammell: Neither my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary nor I have had any recent discussions with President Karzai concerning the UN Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs. The work of that organisation has now been transferred to the UN Assistance Mission to Afghanistan, headed by the UN Secretary General's Special Representative Lakhdar Brahimi.

The UK continues to work closely with the UN in Afghanistan, and applauds its excellent work to date, including in the humanitarian field where we have witnessed tangible improvements in the past year.

22. David Cairns: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the UN Report, Afghanistan Opium Survey 2003. [137418]

Mr. Rammell: I would refer the right hon. Member to the statement I made on 30 October 2003, Official Report, column 20WS, regarding the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC) survey results for the 2003 opium poppy crop in Afghanistan.

While the increase in opium cultivation and production is unwelcome, it is not unexpected. Experience of counter-narcotic policies in other countries, such as Pakistan and Thailand, shows that cultivation tends to increase before declining.

Israel

17. Mr. Walter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Government of Israel regarding the erection of the fence on the West Bank. [137413]

Mr. Rammell: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Edinburgh, North and Leith (Mr. Lazarowicz), Official Report, 11 November 2003, column 169.

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made by the Government in pressing the Israeli Government to conduct an independent, public and judicial inquiry into the shooting of Mr. Tom Hurndall; and if he will make a statement. [136405]

Mr. Mullin: We have pressed the Israelis on a number of occasions for a full and transparent investigation into the shooting of Tom Hurndall. This was done most recently by my noble Friend the Baroness Symons of Vernham Dean during her recent visit to Israel. We have been recently informed that there will be a military police investigation into the shooting.

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the representations he has made to the Israeli Government regarding the building of the Israeli security barrier. [136434]

Mr. Rammell: My right hon. Friends the Prime Minister and the Foreign Secretary made clear our concerns about the route of the fence to the Israeli Prime Minister, Ariel Sharon, when he visited London on 14 July, and the Israeli Foreign Minister, Silvan Shalom, on 18 July. My noble Friend the Baroness Symons of Vernham Dean also raised the matter with the Israeli Foreign Minster, Silvan Shalom, during her visit to Israel on 30 September. She also raised with Zvi Shtauber, Israeli ambassador on 22 October and Yosef Paritzky, the Israeli Minister for National Infrastructure on 29 October.

We have made representations through our embassy in Tel Aviv expressing concern at the route and likely impact of the fence. Foreign and Commonwealth Office officials have also made representations through the Israeli embassy in London.

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made by the Government in pressing the Israeli Government to conduct an independent, public and judicial inquiry into the fatal shooting of Mr. James Miller; and if he will make a statement. [136484]

Mr. Mullin: We have pressed the Israelis on a number of occasions for a full and transparent investigation into the shooting of James Miller. This was done most recently by my noble Friend the Baroness Symons of Vernham Dean during her recent visit to Israel. We have been informed that there will be a Military Police investigation into the shooting.

North Korea

18. Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on measures to contain North Korea's nuclear programme. [137414]

Mr. Rammell: We remain active in support of the six party talks process, begun in Beijing in August, the agreed objective of which is the denuclearisation of the Korean Peninsula.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions (a) his Department and (b) the Government have had with representatives and members of the governments of (i) EU member states, (ii) Russia, (iii) the USA, (iv) Japan and (v) China concerning (A) North Korea and (B) planned diplomatic initiatives on the North Korea nuclear programme; and if he will make a statement. [136930]

Mr. Rammell: We regularly discuss North Korea's nuclear programmes with EU partners, Russia, the US, Japan and China, both at ministerial and official level. Our discussions with these countries reflect an encouraging and wide-ranging commitment to the six-party talks process, and to the objectives of a nuclear-free Korean peninsula and the peaceful resolution of the North Korea nuclear issue.

Roma (EU Applicant Countries)

19. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last discussed with EU applicant countries progress towards ensuring equal rights for the Roma communities in those countries. [137415]

Mr. MacShane: We regularly raise the importance of equal rights for Roma and other minority groups with these countries, mainly through our Embassies, as does the Commission in its monitoring reports, Association Committees and pre-accession programmes. Details of FCO project work on Roma communities are included in the FCO human rights annual report. We also participate with EU applicant countries in discussions in the OSCE and Council of Europe on Roma rights.

Bulgaria

20. Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with Bulgarian Ministers. [137416]

Mr. MacShane: The Foreign Secretary most recently met Bulgarian Foreign Minister Solomon Passy on 6 November in London. They discussed a range of bilateral and EU-related issues. They also have frequent contact in the margins of multilateral meetings, such as the IGC or NATO Ministerials.

Iran

21. Mr. MacDougall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further joint initiatives with the French and German foreign ministers he will undertake with respect to Iran. [137417]

Mr. Rammell: We will continue to work with like-minded governments in any combination required to impress on Iran the need to co-operate fully with the International Atomic Energy Agency and rebuild trust in its intentions. Following the visit to Tehran last month by my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary and his French and German counterparts, the onus now lies with Iran to deliver on its commitments. We are also calling on Iran to address international concerns on human rights, international terrorism and support for the Middle East Peace Process.

Baker Plan

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with (a) the UN, (b) the USA and (c) the EU on the use of sanctions if Morocco refuses to meet its commitments under the Baker Plan. [136007]

Mr. Rammell: None.

Controlled Goods

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what efforts he has made since 27 February to research in greater detail the US systems of end-use monitoring of exports of controlled goods; and if he will make a statement. [136293]

Mr. MacShane: Officials in the Foreign and Commonwealth Office have been researching the United States system of end-use monitoring, and will be informing Ministers of their findings in the near future.

Democratic Republic of Congo

Jeremy Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has held with the Governments of (a) Uganda, (b) Rwanda and (c) Burundi concerning hostilities in the Democratic Republic of Congo; and if he will make a statement. [136509]

Mr. Mullin: From the outset of the conflict Ministers and officials have used every opportunity to discuss the conflict in the Democratic Republic of Congo (DRC) with the governments in the region. We have worked with our UN and EU partners to promote restoration of peace and stability in the region. We are encouraged by the progress made since the installation of the Transitional National Government in Kinshasa earlier this year and by the recent efforts by the countries concerned to improve relations with the DRC.

Jeremy Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions have been held with UN officials on the use of child soldiers in the conflict in the Democratic Republic of Congo; and if he will make a statement on UK policy. [136510]

Mr. Mullin: The UK condemns the use of child soldiers. The fourth report of the UN Secretary-General on the use of children in armed conflict is due shortly and this will lead to a debate on this issue in the UN Security Council in the next few months. The UK discusses the issue with a range of UN bodies, particularly the Special Representative on Children in Armed Conflict, and works with the UN system to eradicate the use of child soldiers, including support through the Department for International Development for a UNICEF programme of capacity building to strengthen its response in emergency situations. A key element of this programme is improving its advocacy on the situation of children affected by armed conflict at all levels.

Within the Democratic Republic of Congo (DRC), a number of child protection advisers have been deployed as an integral part of the ongoing UN mission there. The UK supports UN projects in the DRC such as disarmament, demobilisation and reintegration of ex-combatants, including child soldiers.

Jeremy Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the political groupings in the Democratic Republic of Congo concerning a peace process to end current hostilities. [136531]

Mr. Mullin: Since the outbreak of the conflict in 1998 the UK has put its weight behind regional peace initiatives, maintaining a dialogue with all the main belligerents in the conflict to urge them to bring about a negotiated settlement. The Agreements signed in Lusaka (August 1999) and Pretoria Agreement (July 2002), and the Global and Inclusive Accord (December 2002) laid the foundation for the establishment of a transitional government in the Democratic Republic of Congo (DRC). Now that this is in place the UK continues its dialogue with the parties, including as a member of the Kinshasa-based International Committee of Support to the Transition.

The UK also supports efforts to bring an end to conflict in the Ituri region of north-eastern DRC. This has included through our contribution to the EU-led Operation Artemis and financial and other support to the Interim Ituri Administration.

East Timor

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the visit of President Xanana Gusmao of East Timor to the UK; and what issues were discussed. [136199]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Government were delighted to welcome President Xanana Gusmao to the UK on a guest of Government visit. President Xanana Gusmao has played a pivotal role, not only in his country's struggle for independence, but also in promoting post-conflict reconciliation and a better future for his people. The President had an audience with HM The Queen, and meetings with my right hon. Friends the Foreign Secretary, Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (Mr. Paul Murphy) and Minister of State at the Ministry of Defence (Mr. Ingram), and my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State at the Department for International Development (Mr. Gareth Thomas). I also had a meeting with President Gusmao during which he expressed his gratitude for the UK's assistance to East Timor since 1999 and asked that the UK continue to remain engaged in assisting East Timor. The President also visited Northern Ireland to learn about reconciliation efforts there.

European Constitution

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what impact he estimates the draft European Union constitution will have on the United Kingdom energy sector; and what changes are proposed to the present regulatory position. [136094]

Mr. MacShane: Article 111–130 (2)(c) provides for voting by unanimity on "measures significantly affecting a member state's choice between different energy sources and the general structure of its energy supply". The Government have made a legal assessment of the potential impact of the draft Constitutional Treaty on UK powers to regulate the energy sector. Article 111–157 of the draft EU Constitutional Treaty states the policy on energy shall aim to:

(a) ensure the functioning of the energy market;

(b) ensure security of energy supply in the Union; and

(c) promote energy efficiency and saving and the development of new and renewable forms of energy.

and states that this policy shall not affect a member state's choice between different energy sources and the general structure of its energy supply.

Under the Treaty establishing the European Community, there is already Union activity in energy matters and we believe there is a strong case for making the legal base for policy in this area more transparent. The UK support the opening up of the European energy market which benefits British energy firms. The UK Government would not agree to any proposal that was inconsistent with UK energy interests.

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had since the start of the Inter-Governmental Conference with the Foreign Ministers of (a) Denmark, (b) Italy and (c) Germany relating to the primacy, under Article 110 of the draft European Constitution, of the European Constitution over their own respective constitutions; if he will urge those ministers to hold discussions on the matter with the judges of their respective constitutional courts; and if he will make a statement. [137901]

Mr. MacShane: We have discussed the wording of Article 1–10 with all our EU partners, as part of our ongoing discussions on the IGC. It is for them to decide what advice to seek.

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library a copy of the draft of the Protocol relating to the succession of rights and obligations which it is proposed should be annexed to the European Constitution. [137902]

Mr. MacShane: There is no such Protocol. The current proposal is for legal continuity in relation to the European Community and the European Union to be covered in Part IV of the Constitutional Treaty. The Convention on the Future of Europe's draft was laid before Parliament in August as Command Paper 5897.

Greece (British Plane Spotters)

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he and the Attorney-General (a) have made and (b) plan to make to the Greek Government to ensure the repayment to the British plane-spotters arrested in Greece of their bail sureties. [137478]

Mr. Mullin [holding answer 10 November 2003]: My right hon. Friends the Foreign Secretary and the Attorney-General have made no representations to the Greek Government to ensure repayment of the British plane spotters' bail money.

The Greek court released the bail money on 22 May 2003. One of the 12 has now received his money. The others are currently in dispute with their Greek lawyers, one of who has taken out an injunction to prevent this money being released until a solution is agreed. This is now a private, legal dispute between the plane spotters and their lawyers.

Guantanamo Bay Detainees

Linda Perham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has received on the legality of the detention of British nationals at Guantanamo Bay. [136581]

Mr. Mullin: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office has received a number of representations about the legality of the detentions of the British nationals at Guantanamo Bay. These have included representations from some of the families, lawyers, interested Members of Parliament, non-governmental organisations and members of the public.

Indonesia

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs pursuant to his answer of 23 October 2003, Official Report, column 615, whether Indonesia has met its obligations under UN Security Council Resolutions and the UN Charter on justice and co-operation with the Serious Crimes Unit. [136198]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Paragraph 12 of United Nations Security Council Resolution (UNSCR) 1410, which established the mandate for the United Nations Mission of Support in East Timor (UNMISET) stresses the critical importance of cooperation between East Timor and Indonesia and cooperation with UNMISET to ensure that those responsible for serious crimes committed in 1999 are brought to justice.

In a statement to the 59th Session of the Commission on Human Rights in Geneva on 31 March 2003 the EU urged the Indonesian Government to fully cooperate with the UN Special Crime Unit's investigations, and the investigation into the murder of five journalists at Balibo in 1975. Hitherto, Indonesia has not permitted questioning of any of those indicted by the Serious Crimes Unit who are currently resident in Indonesia.

Pakistan

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what efforts his Department is making to end persecution of Christians in Pakistan; [136296]

(2) what recent discussions his Department has had with authorities in the Pakistan Government about the persecution of Christians in Pakistan; [136297]

(3) what discussions his Department has had with organisations based in the UK campaigning to end persecution of Christians in Pakistan; [136298]

(4) what work the British high commission in Islamabad undertakes to reduce the persecution of Christians in Pakistan. [136299]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We engage at all levels with the Pakistani Government and with civil society on the plight of Christians in Pakistan. We have raised this issue repeatedly in both official and ministerial level contacts and also in conjunction with our EU partners. There have been three separate EU demarches since June 2002 on this subject. Most recently, my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary raised our concerns with Pakistani Foreign Minister Kasuri on 4 November.

The British high commission in Islamabad maintains close contacts with representatives of the religious minorities and human rights organisations within Pakistan. The Foreign and Commonwealth Office has contact with a range of UK- based NGOs. including those who campaign for the rights of Christians and other religious minorities in Pakistan.

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Pakistan Government regarding the (a) numbers and (b) condition of children under 16 held in detention in Pakistan. [136435]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Ministers have not raised this issue directly with the Pakistani Government, but the Foreign and Commonwealth Office is supporting implementation of the Juvenile Justice Ordinance 2000 to bring the Pakistani justice system into line with international standards. Recently we sponsored provincial training workshops in Pakistan for criminal justice professionals. The Supreme Court of Pakistan has now taken note of conditions of child prisoners by calling for action in all provinces.

St. Helena

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the revenue from fishing licences for foreign fishing vessels in St. Helena was in each of the last five years. [137436]

Mr. Rammell: The revenue from the issue of fishing licences to foreign fishing vessels in each of the last five years was as follows:

2003–04 to date	99,233.94
2002–03	56,566.80
2001–02	110,309.47
2000–01	217,507.56
1999–2000	614,031.99

Uzbekistan

Linda Perham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to promote the development of human rights in Uzbekistan. [136588]

Mr. Rammell: We remain deeply concerned about the human rights situation in Uzbekistan and continue to raise our concerns both bilaterally and with EU partners. In addition, there are two particular ways in which we can monitor reform and exert pressure. The first is a set of benchmarks against which political and economic reforms will be measured, agreed in the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development's (EBRD) strategy for Uzbekistan. These will be reviewed by the EBRD later in the year. The second is the UN Special Rapporteur's Report on Torture in Uzbekistan, which referred to torture as "systematic". We shall continue to press the Uzbek authorities to implement his recommendations.

The UK is willing to provide assistance in the area of judicial reform and to assist Uzbekistan with broadening the investigative capacity of its police. Testing the Uzbek authorities' willingness to work with others to reform their behaviour is crucial. In Tashkent we are currently working with Human Rights organisations, the OSCE, UNDP and other embassies to push Uzbekistan to develop and implement a National Action Plan to Combat Torture.

Western Sahara

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Morocco's stance on the main part of the Baker Plan for the western Sahara. [136006]

Mr. Rammell: The United Kingdom supports fully the efforts of the UN Secretary General and his personal envoy, James Baker III, to find a just, lasting and mutually acceptable solution to the western Sahara dispute that provides for self-determination for the people of western Sahara.

The United Nations Secretary General reported to the Security Council in October and urged Morocco to positively engage with the process by accepting and implementing the Baker peace plan. Subsequently, UN Security Council resolution 1513 was adopted unanimously, extending the mandate of MINURSO (the UN Mission for the Referendum in western Sahara) until 31 January 2004 to allow further consideration of the plan.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the Government of Morocco on (a) the continuing presence of troops and (b) human rights in the western Sahara. [136008]

Mr. Rammell: My noble Friend the Baroness Symons of Vernham Dean visited Morocco on 15–17 September 2003. She discussed the situation in western Sahara with the Moroccan Deputy Foreign Minister. Ministers and officials regularly call upon the parties to the western Sahara dispute to take action on human rights issues and raise specific cases as necessary. We will continue to monitor the situation closely, taking action with the appropriate authorities where necessary.

Jeremy Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Government of France on its policy towards mineral exploitation in the western Sahara. [136506]

Mr. Rammell: None.

Jeremy Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions his officials have had at the UN concerning the future of Minurso and the possibility of a referendum on the future of western Sahara. [136513]

Mr. Rammell: Officials have been in contact with their United Nations counterparts over this issue, particularly in the lead up to the unanimous adoption of UN Security Council (UNSC) resolution 1513 on 28 October 2003 which extended the mandate of the UN Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara (MINURSO) until 31 January 2004.

World Service

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the most recent estimate is of the average daily number of listeners to BBC Radio World Service broadcasts. [136440]

Mr. Mullin: The World Service announced in April 2003 a weekly global audience figure of 150 million, for its 43 language services (including English). Audience figures are measured weekly—as is the case with all international broadcasters—and it is not possible to calculate daily audiences from them. Figures are published once a year.

WORK AND PENSIONS

Annuities

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will take steps to prevent pensions administrators purchasing annuities; and if he will make a statement. [138138]

Malcolm Wicks: In the vast majority of cases, there is no tax requirement for occupational schemes to purchase an annuity, unlike personal pension plans. Just as the funding of the scheme is stipulated by the scheme rules, so the purchase of annuities is a matter for the administrators. They retain the flexibility of deciding how, when or if this should happen, and do so in consultation with members via the member-nominated trustees.

Care Homes

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what rate of savings credit will be payable to (a) local authority-supported residents of residential care homes with income above the level of the guarantee credit and (b) other residents of residential care homes with income above the level of the guarantee credit; and if he will make a statement. [138038]

Malcolm Wicks: Pension credit, including the savings credit, is calculated in the same way for residential care residents as it is for others, except that savings below £10,000 are disregarded for those in care homes (£6,000 for others).

Consultancy Contracts

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) of 14 October 2003, Official Report, column 204W, on consultancy contracts, if he will place in the Library a breakdown by individual contract value of each of the consultancy assignments. [134116]

Mr. Browne: The information requested is not collected in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions whether those claiming incapacity benefit are entitled to the same range of other benefits as those eligible for income support. [136462]

Maria Eagle: People in receipt of income support, including those receiving both income support and incapacity benefit, are entitled to a range of passported help such as council tax benefit or assistance with NHS charges. For people with income marginally higher than the threshold for income support, help may still be available on the grounds of low income.

Jobcentre Plus

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions whether Jobcentre Plus in London has met its targets for getting people into work in the last year; and if he will make a statement. [136833]

Mr. Browne: The administration of Jobcentre Plus is a matter for the Chief Executive of Jobcentre Plus, David Anderson. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from David Anderson to Mr. Andrew Dismore, dated 11 November 2003:

As Jobcentre Plus is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to reply direct to your question about whether Jobcentre Plus in London has met its targets in getting people into work in the last year. This is something that falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

Jobcentre Plus London Region exceeded its job entry points target for the operational year April 2002 to March 2003, the last year for which figures are available. Each successful job entry is given a points score and each Region given a target based on these scores. Details of this points system can be found in the Jobcentre Plus Business Plan 2003 a copy of which has been placed in the House of Commons Library. During 2002/03 Jobcentre Plus London Region achieved 902,193 points against its annual target of 846,085 points.

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (1) what the position is of Jobcentre Plus proposals to reorganise services delivered from (a) Hendon and (b) Edgware Social Security office; and if he will make a statement; [136834]

(2) what plans Jobcentre Plus has to change the service provided at Hendon Social Security office through the social fund counter; and if he will make a statement; [136835]

(3) what progress Jobcentre Plus is making in providing premises for the proposed new JCP office to serve clients in Hendon; and if he will make a statement. [136836]

Mr. Browne: The administration of Jobcentre Plus is a matter for the Chief Executive of Jobcentre Plus, David Anderson. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from David Anderson to Mr. Andrew Dismore, dated 11 November 2003:

As Jobcentre Plus is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your questions concerning service delivery in Hendon and Edgware Social Security offices. This is something that falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

North London District, including Hendon and Edgware Social Security offices, is planned to be converted to provide the new integrated Jobcentre Plus service in the operational year 2005/06. Initial plans are currently being formulated and a consultation process with all key stakeholders, including local MPs, will start in the next few weeks.

At this stage, I cannot confirm the exact locations for Jobcentre Plus offices as this is subject to the current planning and consultation process. Local managers will be happy to discuss any questions you may still have about these plans as part of this consultation process.

I hope this is helpful.

Maternity Allowance

Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many applications for maternity allowance were refused in each of the last three years for which figures are available; what the reasons were; and if he will make a statement. [132801]

Maria Eagle: Maternity benefits are being reformed as part of the Government's drive to improve financial support for pregnant women and parents. The standard rate of Maternity Allowance (MA) was increased to £75 a week from April 2002, and has been increased further to £100 from April 2003.

The available information is in the table.

MA claims processed and awarded in each of the last two years

[1] Figures for claims processed are rounded to the nearest five.
[2] Figures for awards are rounded to the nearest 100.

Notes:

1. Accurate figures for claims processed prior to April 2001 are not available.
2. Figures for awards take into consideration late notifications to the system, and may differ from previously published figures.
3. Data are derived from two sources therefore it is not possible to provide an accurate figure for the number of claims that did not result in an award. However, the difference between the figures quoted would be indicative of the numbers involved.

New Deal

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what his estimate is of public expenditure per full-time job set up under the New Deal programme since 1997. [133162]

Mr. Browne: Jobs are not set up under the New Deal programme as it is not a job creation programme. The New Deal exists to provide people with the confidence and skills necessary to compete in the labour market.

In 2000, we estimated that the average cost of a young person moving into work through the New Deal for Young People was around £4,000. Cost benefit analysis published in June 2003 found that running the New Deal for Lone Parents in 2000–01 resulted in a net exchequer saving of £1,600 for each Lone Parent moving into work. Equivalent estimates of cost per job are not available for the other New Deal programmes.

Redundancy Payments

Mr. Wills: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many employers made redundancy payments in excess of the legal minimum in 2002. [134933]

Mr. Sutcliffe: I have been asked to reply.

Officials are unaware of any reliable statistics that show how many employers made redundancy payments in excess of the legal minimum in 2002. The latest survey commissioned by the Department for Trade and Industry on employers' redundancy practice showed that in the period October 2000 to February 2001 just under half (48 per cent.) of those employers who had made redundancies in the previous 12 months claimed to have made one or more specific improvements on the statutory entitlement. Over a fifth (22 per cent.) of employers reported that they gave more weeks payable per year of service than the legal minimum, while over a quarter (28 per cent.) said they paid a multiple of the minimum statutory payment.

Remploy

Adam Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what subsidy has been awarded to Remploy in each of the last four years. [135284]

Maria Eagle: Remploy receives a grant in aid each year to deliver part of our WORKSTEP programme to support disabled people in employment.

The information is in the table.

£ million

	Grant in aid
1999–2000	95.661
2000–01	100.661
2001–02	100.061
2002–03	119.162

Stakeholder Pensions

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Bexhill and Battle (Gregory Barker), of 3 November 2003, Official Report, column 474W, on stakeholder pensions, if he will estimate how many new stakeholder pensions have been taken up by those with no earnings. [137761]

Malcolm Wicks: The information available is in the table:

Stakeholder pensions: Number of individuals contributing[1] by status[2] and earned income[3] for year ending 5 April 2002

	Individuals (thousand) Employees
£0-£9,999 a year	170
£10,000-£19,000 a year	300
£20,000-£29,000 a year	150
£30,000 a year upwards	60
Total	680
Self employed
£0-£9,999 a year	30
£10, 000-£19, 000 a year	30
£20,000-£29,000 a year	10
£30,000 a year upwards	20
Total	90
In receipt of a pension	10
Child	20
Full-time education	—
Carer	—
Unemployed	10
Other	20
Total	840

[1] The table refers to the number of individuals whose stakeholder pension has received a contribution during the year.

[2] Status is largely based on what is reported by an individual when making their opening application, or for existing business by the provider.

[3] Earned income is derived from the Survey of Personal Incomes (SPI) and consists of all income chargeable under Schedule E (mainly pay, private and occupational pensions, retirement annuities and state retirement pensions), Schedule D Cases I and II (self-employment income), and miscellaneous other earnings.

Notes:

1. The information in the table is taken from IR website statistics (Table T7.10.) It shows individuals contributing to a stakeholder pension, by status and earnings. The data are derived from a sample of annual returns of information submitted to the Inland Revenue by stakeholder pension providers. Numbers are rounded to nearest 10,000. Totals may not sum, due to rounding.

2. The data are collected primarily for compliance purposes and contains details of contributions made by or on behalf of individuals.

3. As well as containing individual details, such as name and date of birth, the data also contains their national insurance number. Using this it possible to aggregate across those who have arrangements with one or more providers. Therefore, unlike tables 7.4 and 7.5 which are based on aggregate returns from providers and are therefore at arrangement level, IR are able to present these results at an individual level. In addition the providers have to report the status of the individual in the following categories:

Employee
Pensioner
Self-employed
Child
Carer of a child aged less than 16
Carer of a person aged 16 or over
In full-time education
Unemployed
Other

4. Any individual making a gross contribution of £3,600 or less to a stakeholder pension from 6 April 2001 does not have to present evidence of earnings to the provider to whom they are making the contribution. Therefore in order to assess the earned income of contributors IR has matched the individual details provided where possible with the Survey of Personal Incomes (SPI) 2000–01.

5. The SPI is a representative sample of nearly 200,000 individuals, drawn from the Revenue's Self Assessment, Pay As You Earn and Claims systems. Where IR has been able to match these individuals to the SPI, primarily those with earned income, the totals in the tables are based on this sample. For other groups that are unlikely to be in the SPI, such as children, IR has used the whole database directly to derive counts and amounts. For this latter group further analysis is limited to the data that providers have to submit.

6. The table relates to the number of individuals who have a recorded contribution in the year—either individual, employer or minimum. While in theory the data should give details of all individuals, in practice due to incorrect or missing data less than 100 per cent. of records are available for analysis. To account for this the results in the tables have been scaled to known administrative totals.

EDUCATION AND SKILLS

Bullying

Linda Perham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what plans he has to reduce bullying in schools. [136590]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: Bullying is a serious issue which can affect young people's educational achievement and emotional well-being. The range of measures we are implementing reflects our determination to help schools tackle the problem.

Tackling bullying is covered in the behaviour audit and training materials that we are making available to all secondary and middle schools through our Key Stage 3 strategy. These reinforce and extend the good practice guidance in our anti-bullying pack 'Bullying: Don't Suffer in Silence' and our anti-bullying website (www.dfes.gov.uk/bullying).

I recently launched a new public information film aimed at children and young people. The film is entitled "Tell Someone". It encourages pupils experiencing bullying to tell someone who can help rather than suffering in silence.

Later this month I will be launching an anti-bullying charter which I hope as many schools as possible will sign and use. The charter is being drawn up in consultation with the professional associations and voluntary sector partners. It will be accompanied by a summary of effective practice to help schools review and enhance their anti-bullying policies.

The charter will be launched at the first of a series of regional conferences. These conferences will involve schools, local education authorities and voluntary organisations. As well as raising awareness, they will celebrate and share good practice in tackling bullying.

Call Centres

Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills whether his Department plans to outsource call centre work to premises outside the United Kingdom. [132108]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: My Department has a small call centre operating from Runcorn. There are no plans to move it.

Education Expenditure

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the expenditure was as a share of GDP on (a) early years and childcare, (b) schools, including sixth forms, (c) support for young people, (d) higher education and (e) further education, adult learning and skills and lifelong learning in each financial year from 1992–93 to the end of the public expenditure planning cycle. [136782]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The information requested is only readily available from 1993–94. The figures in the following table show Central Government and local authority expenditure for England only while the GDP figures used are for the UK. The figures exclude expenditure on Children's Social Services, the resources for which were recently transferred to DfES. For 2003–04 to 2005–06, the local authority expenditure element for each category has been estimated.

Education Inspections (Government Intervention)

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will list (a) those council education departments and (b) those council children's services in which there has been Government or ministerial intervention that would not otherwise have taken place, as a result of a critical inspection report or other evidence of service failure, in each year since 1997. [137763]

Mr. Miliband: The list of councils with social services responsibilities where there has been statutory intervention as a consequence of poorly performing children's services is as follows:

London borough of Hackney in 1999 (under section 7 of the Local Authorities Act 1970)

London borough of Lambeth in 2000 (under section 7 of the Local Authorities Act 1970)

London borough of Hackney in 2000 (under section 7 of the Local Authorities Act 1970).

The list of councils with social services responsibilities placed on "special measures"[1] as a consequence of poorly performing children's services is as follows:

1997

Cambridgeshire[2]

London borough of Ealing[2]

Kingston upon Hull[2]

1998

Coventry[2]

London borough of Hackney[2]

Hillingdon[2]

Bedfordshire

London borough of Waltham Forest

Royal borough of Windsor and Maidenhead[2]

[1] Councils are put on "special measures" to improve poorly performing services. When a council is on special measures the Department of Health receives quarterly reports of councils' progress against action plans. Special measures are designed so that councils have every opportunity, with the support of the Department's Social Services Inspectorate, to put their affairs in order. In May 2002 star ratings were introduced for social services. Since May 2002 councils awarded zero stars for their social services, the lowest marking, have been automatically placed on special measures; the list shows in 2002 and 2003 those "zero star" councils where children's services have been at issue.

[2] These 19 councils, out of the 27 placed on special measures since 1997, have improved (some with targeted external support since the advent of star ratings in May 2002) and are no longer on special measures.

Faith Schools

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what (a) the number and (b) the percentage of faith schools in each local education authority was on 1 January. [137174]

Mr. Miliband: The information is given in the table.

Gap Year

Mr. Flook: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what representations he has received from (a) schools, (b) parents and (c) pupils about the intentions of Year 12 or lower 6th students expecting to complete 'A' levels in summer 2005 and considering whether to take a gap year in 2005–06. [135447]

Mr. Ivan Lewis [holding answer 5 November 2003]: The Department for Education and Skills has not received any direct representations from schools, parents or pupils about young people's gap year intentions for 2005/06 although we are aware of some concerns from education and voluntary organisations about the possible impact of changes to tuition fees in 2006 on gap year take-up. We have no plans to introduce any special arrangements for those young people deferring entry to higher education in 2005 in order to take a gap year since students will have had three years' notice of the funding changes. We will abolish upfront payment of fees and introduce loans for fees which students repay after graduation only when they are earning a reasonable salary. We will introduce a £1,000 Higher Education Grant from 2004, to be paid to the poorest 30 per cent. of students. We will also continue to pay the standard fee (currently £1,125) for students from poorer backgrounds.

GCSEs

Mr. Flook: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) what proportion of 15 and 16-year-olds in (a) Somerset and (b) England were entered for GCSE examinations in each year since 1997; [137241]

(2) what proportion of 15 and 16-year-olds in (a) Somerset and (b) England achieved (i) five or more A* to C GCSE grades and (ii) five or more GCSE passes in each year since 1997. [137242]

Mr. Miliband: The statistical information requested is detailed in the following table:

[1] Pupils are aged 15 at the start of the academic year ie 31 August.

Gifted Pupils

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what criteria are used to allocate funding for gifted pupils. [136710]

Mr. Miliband: Funding for gifted and talented education is used to support area-based programmes in disadvantaged areas, regional support through the London Challenge and a range of national resources that are universally available, notably the National Academy for Gifted and Talented Youth.

The area-based programmes— provided through Excellence in Cities, Excellence Clusters and Aim Higher—benefit urban LEAs and smaller pockets of disadvantage, some in suburban and rural areas. Each school uses this funding to support their most able 5–10 per cent. of pupils, so the measure of ability is relative to the school.

In addition to benefiting from national resources, LEAs and schools outside these areas are encouraged to use generic funding to support gifted and talented education.

Industrial Action

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many hours have been lost to industrial action in (a) schools and (b) local education authority offices in each year since 1990. [137202]

Mr. Miliband: The Department does not hold information about hours lost to industrial action in schools or local education authority offices.

LEA Partnerships

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many local education authorities have sought authority to create partnerships with private companies to deliver additional resources for schools and colleges in their areas; which companies are involved in each area; and how much has been contributed to each educational institution. [137537]

Mr. Miliband: Local education authorities are free to contract out a wide range of their statutory functions to private companies. They are not required to seek authority to do so, and the Department has not conducted a comprehensive survey of such partnerships. The information requested is therefore not available.

Learndirect

Judy Mallaber: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will list the UK online centres in Amber Valley; and which centres provide access to LearnDirect courses. [136776]

Mr. Charles Clarke: UK online centres provide people with access to Information and Communication Technology (ICT). There are six UK online centres in Amber valley. These are as follows:

Read On Write Away (a mobile bus taking ICT facilities to rural, socio-economically deprived areas of Derbyshire)

The Bridge Centre, Langley Mill

Ironville Training Centre, Ironville

Alfreton Hall Adult Education Centre

Groundworks toolbox (formerly the Amber Valley Environ Centre)

Belper Adult Community Education Centre

Alfreton Hall Adult Education Centre is a learndirect centre in addition to being a UK online centre. Of the centres that do not offer learndirect courses themselves, the Bridge Centre, Ironville Training Centre, and Belper Adult Community Education Centre refer their learners on to a local learndirect centre. Read On Write Away is currently developing a referral system with the UK online Regional Manager at Ufi.

Local Education Authorities

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many registered teachers worked for local education authorities in a non teaching capacity in each year since 1997. [137206]

Mr. Miliband: This information is not held centrally.

Public Service Agreements

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many civil servants his Department employed to meet each of his Department's public service agreements in each year since 2001. [137169]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The number of civil servants employed by my Department in 2003 to meet its public service agreements is 5,020 (including 640 staff who work in the Government Office network). The number in 2002 was 4,820 (including 650 Government Office staff).

The numbers are not broken down by public service agreements (PSAs) as one aspect of the Department's work often contributes to the achievement of several PSAs. However, the numbers of civil servants in each of the Department's policy directorates over this period are given in the following table. Many of the remaining staff, although not located within a policy directorate, provide direct support.

Policy directorate	2002	2003
Schools	1,385	1,602
Lifelong Learning	681	661
Youth	336	376

The numbers in Schools Directorate include staff who work on Sure Start and Children and Young People's issues.

Qualifications

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what research he has collated into the relative cost-effectiveness of public expenditure on (a) improving basic skills, (b) achieving level 2 qualifications, (c) achieving level 3 qualifications and (d) achieving level 4 qualifications. [136455]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: The document "Education and Skills: The Economic Benefit" published by DfES in May 2003 presents both Government and wider research undertaken into the economic benefits of public expenditure on education. It highlights the social and economic value of education and skills, from a basic skills level to first degree, in terms of earnings, employment and social benefits.

Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act

Brian White: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what statutory investigatory powers the Department has; which ones will be superseded by use of the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act 2000; and what plans he has for removing these legacy powers. [136124]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Department does not have powers of the type referred to by my hon. Friend and consequently there will not be any powers superseded by the use of the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act.

The Department may have powers that are similar in effect (such as section 497B of the Education Act 1996—a right in specified circumstances to inspect and take copies of documents held by a local authority), however, collating a full response on such powers will not be possible on grounds of disproportionate cost.

School Budgets

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what estimate he has made of the cost of using (a) KPMG and (b) the National College for School Leadership to develop guidance and support to help schools' budget management. [137573]

Mr. Charles Clarke: £1.5 million is being made available for this programme in the remaining months of the current financial year. This covers the joint development and delivery by KPMG and NCSL of a range of support for schools, including online materials, workshops and consultancy services. No decisions have yet been made about the level of funding in 2004–05.

School Meals

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what advice he gives to education authorities concerning the content and quality of school meals. [136207]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: In April 2001, the Government introduced regulations which set minimum nutritional standards for school lunches. They were accompanied by guidance entitled "Healthy School Lunches", which is available for school caterers, heads and others implementing the standards. The guidance on the standards is available on the DfES website: www.dfes.gov.uk/schoollunches

Schools (Behaviour)

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what has been spent since 1997 on projects to improve behaviour in schools. [133696]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: Funding for behaviour improvement in schools comes from a wide variety of sources and is aggregated to varying degrees with funding for other activities. It is therefore impossible to give a discrete total. The School Inclusion: Pupil Support grant provided about £560 million in Government grant and LEA contributions between 1999 and 2003. But this gave schools funding to tackle pupil disaffection more widely and was not just for behaviour improvement initiatives.

In 2003–04 the Government will be allocating over £90 million to schools as part of its national behaviour and attendance strategy. This builds on the £50 million provided to targeted schools and LEAs through the Behaviour Improvement Programme in 2002–03.

Small Businesses

Linda Perham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what plans he has to recognise and accredit within the reformed qualifications framework the informal learning and development achievements of employees of small businesses. [136612]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: There are nearly 4,000 qualifications currently accredited by the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority (QCA) in to the National Qualifications Framework (NQF). Awarding bodies are currently able to accept evidence from diverse sources of learning and achievement in assessing individual candidates, irrespective of the size of organisation within which they might work. For learning that does not lead to qualifications, and following the commitment given in "21st Century Skills Realising Our Potential" to develop a credit framework for adults, we have written to both the QCA and the Learning and Skills Council (LSC) on 9 September 2003. The LSC has been asked to review the credit systems currently operating outside the NQF and to identify how the application of credit to this provision might bring incremental award for learning achievement, drive quality and flexibility in further education and how such credit might be developed to provide progression into the NQF and higher education.

Linda Perham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what steps he is taking to respond to the needs of small businesses in his reform of the qualifications framework. [136613]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: The National Qualifications Framework is currently capable of responding to a variety of needs of employers and it already contains qualifications that are directly relevant to the needs of small businesses. I have, however, asked the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority (QCA) to lead on joint work with the Learning and Skills Council and the Sector Skills Development Agency to develop a system of vocational qualifications which has the flexibility to meet individual and employer needs. The QCA will also continue with their work to develop a fully unitised qualifications system. This will provide a flexible framework of qualifications that will enable employers of all sizes to identify packages of learning appropriate to their needs. Units will be capable of certification and individuals will be able to build their achievements over time.

Standard Assessment Tasks

Mr. Flook: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many 14-year-olds in Somerset were eligible to sit Key Stage 3 tests in 2002–03. [137232]

Mr. Miliband: The total numbers of Key Stage 3 eligible pupils in 2002 and 2003 in Somerset were:

	Number of eligible pupils
2003 (provisional)	5,919
2002	5,931

Mr. Flook: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what proportion of children in (a) Somerset and (b) England gained Level 5 or above in their Key Stage Three tests in (i) English and (ii) mathematics in each year since 1996–97. [137233]

Mr. Miliband: The percentage of pupils achieving Level 5 or above at Key Stage 3 in (a) Somerset LEA and (b) England in (i) English and (ii) mathematics from 1997 onwards are:

Percentage

	(a) Somerset LEA		(b) England
Year	(i) English	(ii) Maths	(i) English	(ii) Maths
2003[1]	70	74	68	70

2000	65	69	64	65
1999	70	67	64	62

[1] Provisional

St Helena

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will change the present categorising of St. Helenan students as overseas students and treat them in the same way as EU students. [137229]

Alan Johnson: We have no plans to change the present categorising of St. Helenan students as overseas students.

Student Finance

Mr. Dhanda: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what action he is taking to support undergraduate students who incur greater debts than other students as a result of their courses being longer than three years. [137099]

Alan Johnson: The Government provide support to meet the essential living costs of students. If courses take four or five years, student loans are available on the same favourable income contingent repayment terms as for the first three years. Graduates only repay their loans when they can afford to do so.

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what percentage of student loans have been defaulted in each of the last five years. [137168]

Alan Johnson: The table shows borrowers with loan accounts in arrears as a percentage of all borrowers with mortgage style loans in repayment status at the end of financial years 1999–2000 to 2001–02. Data for earlier years are not available.

Financial year	In arrears (percentage)
1999–2000	10
2000–01	10
2001–02	9

Notes:

1. The table is based on a snapshot of data at 31 March of each financial year. Accounts may move in or out of arrears status during the year, and may leave repayment status during the year, such as when the loan is paid in full.

2. The table covers borrowers with mortgage style loans only; income contingent loans have been excluded. Includes both publicly and privately owned debt.

3. Excludes borrowers in deferment with arrears.

Student Loans Company

From September 1998, most new entrants to higher education have income contingent loans. Apart from a few exceptions, repayments are collected through the tax system, mostly by employers through PAYE, and therefore the concept of default does not apply.

Teachers (Violent Attacks)

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) what guidance he has issued to local education authorities on their responsibility to pursue action against an individual who carries out a violent attack on a member of their staff; [136416]

(2) how many UK teachers have reported a violent attack upon their person by pupils in each of the last 10 years; [136429]

(3) what action the Government are taking to reduce the level of violent attacks upon teachers. [136430]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: I deplore any attacks on teachers or other local education authority staff. They have a right to work in conditions free from intimidation and violence.

The number of serious injuries to school teachers in Great Britain caused by physical violence reported to the Health and Safety Executive is as follows:

1996/97—83

1997/98—119

1998/99—124

1999/2000—135

2001/02—110.

These figures cover injuries resulting in more than three days' absence from work. They are not available for earlier years.

Last year we published "A legal toolkit for schools", which provides advice to schools and local education authorities on legal remedies that are available when school staff experience problems with violent parents. Some of these remedies are also available when dealing with violent pupils. Earlier this year we published "Improving Behaviour and Attendance: Guidance on Exclusion from Schools and Pupil Referral Units", which makes clear that head teachers can permanently exclude pupils responsible for violence. In addition, the Anti-Social Behaviour Bill will enable LEAs to apply for court-imposed Parenting Orders for parents whose children have been excluded from school for serious misbehaviour. Breach of the Order will be an offence punishable by a fine of up to £1,000.

Teaching Unions (Bilateral Meetings)

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills when he last held a bilateral meeting with the (a) National Association of Schoolmasters/ Union of Women Teachers, (b) Secondary Heads Association, (c) National Union of Teachers, (d) National Association of Head Teachers, (e) Professional Association of Teachers and (f) Association of Teachers and Lecturers. [137173]

Mr. Miliband: My right hon. Friend holds a variety of meetings with the teacher associations.

Truancy

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the level of secondary school truancy was in (a) the constituency of Romford and (b) each other London borough in 2002/03. [136472]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: The percentage of half days missed due to unauthorised absence in secondary schools in Romford was 0.9 per cent. in 2002/03. This shows no change from the 2001/02 level.

Truancy in London secondary schools fell to 1.3 per cent. in 2002/03 from 1.5 per cent. in 2001/02. This is equivalent to a reduction of some 700 truants. Information for all London boroughs, including the levels of truancy in 2001/02, is shown in the table.

Tuition Fees

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what his estimate is of the cost of plans for remission of tuition and top-up fees for universities in financial years (a) 2003–04, (b) 2004–05 and (c) 2005–06. [137165]

Alan Johnson: The cost to the Government of the public contribution to existing tuition fee remission arrangements for home and EU undergraduate students at institutions in England is estimated at:

Financial year	£ million
2003–04	456
2004–05	467
2005–06	479

Paul Farrelly: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) in what circumstances the ability of universities to charge top-up fees will be withdrawn; and by what process; [137240]

(2) how he proposes to address the funding consequences of universities which have their ability to charge top-up fees withdrawn. [137556]

Alan Johnson: We expect most access agreements to work satisfactorily. Where OFFA has concerns about an agreement, it will raise these formally with the institution. If these concerns are not addressed, OFFA will ask the institution what further actions it proposes.

If OFFA remains unsatisfied, the sanctions available will include withholding approval for an institution to charge variable fees, when the access agreement comes up for renewal or, where urgent action is needed, informing the institution that it intends to impose a financial penalty. The institution will bear the financial consequences of any breaches.

Paul Farrelly: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) what assessment his Department has made of the impact of the introduction of his proposed variable tuition fees regime on each university in England and Wales in respect of (a) social access, (b) the mix of courses offered, (c) employment patterns and (d) the balance of teaching and research undertaken; [137296]

(2) what assessment he has made of the potential impact of variable tuition fees on (a) science courses and (b) arts courses. [137300]

Alan Johnson: It will be for higher education institutions themselves to decide what level of fees they set for each of their courses from 2006/07 onwards, subject to a maximum fee of £3,000. I would expect them to consider a range of factors in doing so, including the likely impact of their decisions. The Office for Fair Access must approve an access agreement, including arrangements for bursaries and outreach, before an institution can charge higher fees. It will also monitor the agreements and, if necessary, take proportionate sanctions in the unlikely event of a serious breach. Since decisions on fee levels have yet to be taken, it is not feasible to assess their impact, either on individual universities or subjects. However, the additional income from variable fees will boost universities' power to develop high-quality, greater and more flexible provision and to widen access to higher education.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what estimate he has made of the number of university courses that are likely to charge the maximum fee after 2006/07. [137651]

Alan Johnson: It will be for higher education institutions themselves to decide what level of fees they set for each of their courses from 2006/07 onwards, subject to a maximum fee of £3,000 and approval of their access agreements by the Office of Fair Access.

University Funding

Paul Farrelly: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what estimate the Government have made of the impact each £100 million raised for universities would have if raised by additions to (a) basic rate income tax, (b) basic rate national insurance payable by individuals and businesses, (c) income tax paid by higher rate taxpayers only and (d) national insurance paid by individuals and businesses in respect of higher rate taxpayers only. [137297]

Dawn Primarolo: I have been asked to reply.

I refer my hon. Friend to table T1.6 "Direct effects of illustrative tax changes" on the Inland Revenue website. http://www.inlandrevenue.gov.uk/stats/tax_expenditures/g_t06_1.htm

National insurance contributions are levied on a different basis from that for income tax. They are based on earnings, rather than taxable income, and the relevant earnings limits are different to those for income tax. Table T1.6 illustrates the effects of varying certain rates of national insurance contributions.

Working Tax Credit

Judy Mallaber: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what estimate he has made of the cost of the child care element of the working tax credit in (a) Derbyshire and (b) Amber Valley. [136778]

Dawn Primarolo: I have been asked to reply.

The number of families in each region, local authority and constituency receiving help with child care costs through tax credits at November 2002, and the average weekly amount of help, are shown in "Working Families' and Disabled Person's Tax Credit Statistics. Geographical Analysis".

The equivalent figures for each region at October 2003 are shown in "Child and Working Tax Credit Quarterly Statistics".

These publications can be found on the Inland Revenue web site, under www.inlandrevenue.gov.uk/stats/personal-tax-credits/menu.htm.

The number of families in east Midlands receiving such help grew by nearly 60 per cent. between these two dates.

However, the figures for October 2003 are based on a sample of cases. The sample is too small to yield reliable estimates of the number of families in each local authority and constituency receiving help with child care costs at that date. Such figures based on an analysis of all working tax credit awards will be published next year.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Anti-social Behaviour

Mr. Tynan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what comparative studies his Department has (a) undertaken and (b) commissioned on an international scale in connection with anti-social behaviour with particular reference to (i) its causation, (ii) its rate of occurrence, (iii) its prevention and (iv) the rehabilitation of perpetrators. [136694]

Ms Blears: The Home Department has not undertaken or commissioned specific comparative research on the causes of anti-social behaviour, its prevention, rate of occurrence, or rehabilitation of perpetrators. However, it takes part in the International Crime Victims Survey (ICVS), which provides two relevant indicators: car vandalism, and feelings of unsafety on the streets. The ICVS is a fully standardised survey that has been conducted most recently in 2000. It provided comparable data for 17 industrialised countries. Results are in "Criminal Victimisation in Seventeen Countries", by Kesteren J V, Mayhew P and Nieuwbeerta P, The Hague: Ministry of Justice (2000). A copy is in the Library.

The 2000 ICVS showed that 11 per cent. of vehicle owners in England and Wales were victims of car vandalism, compared to an average rate of victimisation of 7.8 per cent. for all 17 countries participating in the survey. England and Wales had the third highest rate of victimisation of car vandalism of the 17 countries. On feelings of safety after dark, the 2000 ICVS showed that 27 per cent. of those in England and Wales felt 'a bit or very unsafe', compared to the average of 23 per cent.

A module is to be included in the Home Office Crime and Justice Survey in 2004 on gang membership. The data collected will be comparable with results from surveys in other European countries, although these are independently conducted.

Association of Chief Constables

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met the Association of Chief Constables to discuss crime reduction strategies. [136424]

Ms Blears: My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary and I have frequent bilaterals with the President of the Association of Chief Police Officers and the discussions cover a very wide range of policing and crime reduction issues.

Botulinium Toxin

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many laboratory animals were used in potency testing of batches of botulinium toxin for human use in each year since 2000, indicating the end points used in the tests conducted; and if he will make a statement on the steps the Government are taking (a) to reduce the number of animals used in each batch test and (b) to ensure the most humane end points are used. [136515]

Caroline Flint: Information on the number of animals used for potency testing of botulinium toxin for human use is not recorded separately in the Statistics of Scientific Procedures on Living Animals which is published annually by the Home Office (copies of the latest publication, for the year 2002, are in the House Library—Command 5886). Figures for pharmaceutical safety/efficacy testing are included in Table 10 of the Statistics, which also includes data from testing other pharmaceutical and safety products. It is not possible from the format of the data to identify the number of animals used in testing a particular substance or product.

Procedures are ended in each case as soon as the scientific objective is achieved, which is usually when the onset of relevant clinical signs are observed. Animals are humanely killed to avoid any undue suffering.

Under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 the Home Office can only license the use of animals when the scientific purpose cannot be achieved satisfactorily by any other reasonably practicable method not involving the use of animals. The Home Office has to be satisfied that the proposed procedure uses the minimum numbers of animals, of the lowest degree of neurophysiological sensitivity, and causes the least amount of pain, suffering, distress, or lasting harm and is the most likely to produce satisfactory results. This reflects the principles of the 3Rs—the refinement of scientific procedures, reduction in the number of animals used and their replacement wherever possible.

Special conditions are tailored to each project licence in order to control or minimise pain or suffering. Animals in scientific procedures are carefully monitored by licensees, named animal care and welfare officers and animal care staff to ensure that agreed humane endpoints are implemented. In addition a named veterinary surgeon must always be available for advice.

Schedule 1 of the Guidance on the Operation of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 sets out the appropriate methods of humane killing of animals used in scientific procedures.

The potency testing of botulinium toxin licensed under the 1986 Act is solely for pharmaceutical purposes, in relation to use of the substance as a prescription only medicine.

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps the Government is taking to encourage the (a) development, (b) validation and (c) use of replacement alternatives for the in vivo potency testing in the United Kingdom of batches of botulinium toxin for use for (i) clinical and (ii) cosmetic purposes. [135480]

Caroline Flint: The animal testing of botulinium toxin, licensed under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986, is required and conducted solely in relation to its use for clinical purposes as a prescription only medicine. The Home Office does not license animal testing of this substance for use in cosmetic treatments.

Under the 1986 Act the Home Office can only license the use of animals for scientific purposes where there is no non-animal alternative, and then only when both the number of animals and their suffering is minimised. This reflects the principles of the 3Rs—the refinement of scientific procedures, reduction in the number of animals used and their replacement wherever possible.

No alternative to using animals has regrettably yet been developed to test the safety and efficacy of botulinium toxin for therapeutic medical purposes. Refinement of the test has, however, been the subject of useful research undertaken some years ago under a Home Office grant administered by the Animal Procedures Committee (as recorded in that Committee's published report for 1992—Command 2301).

The Government fully supports and encourages the general development and promotion of the 3Rs in a number of ways. It is involved in the validation of alternatives at the ED level, and seeks to take forward related matters through the Inter-Departmental Group on the 3Rs. It is estimated that the total spent by the UK Government and its funding agencies, on research into and development of alternatives, is between £2 and £10 million each year.

However, most work on the search for and development of alternatives to using animals in scientific procedures is neither done by Government nor with Government money—it is conducted and funded by the research community itself, which spends many millions of pounds on it each year. We must continue to look mainly to the scientist community itself to come up with viable alternatives in specific areas such as the type of regulatory toxin testing subject of this Question.

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what regulatory requirements govern the use of botulinium toxin for cosmetic purposes; and if he will make a statement. [135481]

Caroline Flint: Under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 the Home Office regulates the testing on live animals of botulinium toxin for clinical purposes as a prescription-only medicine. The Home Office does not license the use of animals for the testing of cosmetic treatments or products.

The use of botulinium toxin for cosmetic treatments, for which it is not licensed or tested, is not a matter over which the Home Office has any control. Regulation of the different uses made of botulinium toxin is a matter for the Medicines and Healthcare products Regulatory Agency (MHRA), which is an Executive Agency of the Department of Health, to whom further inquiries on this aspect should be addressed.

Burial Grounds

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what research into the potential need for the re-use of burial grounds has been commissioned by the Government since 1997; what the cost of that research has been; and where and when it has been published. [131162]

Paul Goggins: We have not commissioned specific research into the need to re-use old graves. In accordance with the commitment in our response to the recommendations of the Environment Select Committee's eighth report on cemeteries, we will shortly be publishing a consultation document on the reform of burial legislation generally, including the case for the re-use of old graves.

Cannabis

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the research into how the users of higher class drugs start drug taking; and what the role (a) other drugs and (b) cannabis have had as gateways. [136267]

Caroline Flint: There is no available research evidence that examines specifically how Class A drugs users start using drugs and distinguishes this group from other drug users.

There have been no recent UK studies that have looked specifically at cannabis as a gateway drug. However, some analysis has been undertaken which examines wider progression from one group of drugs to another. This analysis used the 1998–99 Youth Lifestyles Survey, which questioned 3,700 young people aged between 12–30 years.

The analysis examined progression from a group of drugs including cannabis, LSD, amphetamines, amyl nitrate and magic mushrooms to a group of highly dangerous drugs, including heroin, crack and methadone. When social and psychological factors, such as disturbed family background and disadvantaged location were taken into account, little evidence was found for a gateway effect caused by use of the first group of drugs.

This analysis can be found in Home Office Research Study 253 entitled: 'The Road to Ruin? Sequences of Initiation into Drug Use and Offending by Young People in Britain'. Copies of this report can be found in the Library.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage cannabis users represented of total drug users in the UK in each year since 1997. [136268]

Caroline Flint: The table shows the percentage of total drug users in the last year that have used cannabis. This table also shows the percentage of total drug users in the last year that have used cannabis only. These figures are taken from the British Crime Survey, undertaken in 1998, 2000 and 2001–02.

Cantle Report/Denham Report

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) which recommendations of the (a) Cantle report and (b) Denham report on public order and community cohesion have been implemented; and what assessment he has made of the effect on communities of implementing those recommendations; [136240]

(2) how the implementation of the recommendations of the (a) Denham Report and (b) Cantle report is being monitored. [136241]

Fiona Mactaggart: Cantle report recommendations have been implemented in relation to citizenship, the formation of a community cohesion task force and inter-agency support groups, guidance for local authorities, positive activities for young people and cultural sensitivity in schools. Among the report's recommendations for action at local level, progress continues to be made on mainstreaming community cohesion into local delivery frameworks, as well as on youth parliaments, cross-cultural youth services, school twinning and regeneration.

Denham report proposals have been implemented in relation to the establishment of an independent panel, conflict resolution and community facilitation, the measurement of community cohesion, housing choices, youth work, positive activities for young people, and hate crime. Progress is being made to mainstream community cohesion into Government policies relating to education and employment, neighbourhood renewal and regeneration, policing, Local Strategic Partnerships, community strategies and local political leadership.

Recommendations in the Cantle report which have not been taken forward by the Government include the setting of admission targets for mono-cultural schools.

The effect on communities of initiatives to improve community cohesion are being measured via the Home Office citizenship survey. No data are yet available from this. In July 2003, the Home Office issued detailed guidance to local authorities and their partners on how to measure community cohesion. The Home Office Community Cohesion Unit, supported by the independent Community Cohesion Panel, monitors the implementation of the Cantle and Denham recommendations through its work with other Departments, Government Offices and local authorities.

Community Cohesion Programme

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much has been spent in Leeds west under the community cohesion programme. [132735]

Fiona Mactaggart: Community cohesion lies at the heart of what makes a safe and strong community and is a key outcome for both local and central government. Developing more cohesive communities depends on mainstreaming community cohesion in all policies and programmes.

There is no separate community cohesion funding programme. Many different Government programmes contribute to community cohesion. Information is not readily available on spend by specific constituencies.

An example of a cross-cutting programme in Yorkshire and the Humber that has benefited Leeds was its allocation of £85,000 in 2001–02 and £75,000 in 2002–03 for community facilitation and mediation services. This programme was funded by the Neighbourhood Renewal Unit.

Crime Reduction Targets

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the progress towards targets on reducing (a) vehicle crime, (b) domestic burglary and (c) robbery. [136703]

Ms Blears: Our targets are to reduce:

vehicle crime by 30 per cent. between 1999 and 2004;

domestic burglary by 25 per cent. between 1999 and 2005; and robbery in the ten Street Crime Initiative areas by 14 per cent. from 1999 to2000–05 and maintain those levels.

Progress on burglary and vehicle crime is measured using the British Crime Survey (BCS); but recorded crime is used for robbery.

(a) BCS 2000 showed that there were 2,942,000 vehicle crimes in 1999. Figures published on 16 October report that BCS interviews in the 12 months to June 2003 indicated that there were 2,319,000 vehicles thefts a reduction of 21 per cent. This is on track to meet the vehicle crime target.

(b) There were 1,261,000 domestic burglaries in 1999. Figures published on 16 October report that BCS interviews in the 12 months to June 2003 indicated that there were 936,000 domestic burglaries—a reduction of just over 25 per cent.

(c) Since the robbery target was set, there were sharp rises in recorded robbery in 2000–01 and 2001–02. In response to these, the Government launched the Street Crime Initiative in March 2002. There was a 17 per cent. reduction in recorded robbery in the ten street crime areas in 2002–03, compared with 2001–02.

Cyclists

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to ensure enforcement of road traffic regulations against cyclists. [136389]

Caroline Flint: Individual chief officers of police are best placed to assess the nature and cause of specific local problems, to determine how most effectively to address them and to decide the best allocation of resources.

In response to public concern, we made cycling on the pavement a fixed penalty offence from 1 August 1999. This gave the police a direct and simple way of dealing with cyclists who ride without proper consideration for others. We have now extended the power to issue fixed penalty notices for this offence to police community support officers.

Drugs

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the average sentence served for drug-related offences is of existing (a) female and (b) male prisoners. [135655]

Paul Goggins: The average time served for persons discharged from prison in 2002 on completion of determinate sentences for drugs offences was:

(a) 16.8 months for females

(b) 18.6 months for males.

The average time served includes any time spent remanded in custody.

Ethnic Minority Staff

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of Home Office employees are from an ethnic minority. [135898]

Fiona Mactaggart: Of employees who have filled in a voluntary ethnic monitoring form, the following percentages are of an ethnic minority or mixed race:

Central Home Office—24.7 per cent.

Her Majesty's Prison Service—6.5 per cent.

Forensic Science Service—12.4 per cent.

UK Passport Agency—15.0 per cent.

EU Committees

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list the dates of meetings of the EU Committee for the implementation of the programme of exchanges, training and co-operation between law enforcement authorities (OISIN) during the Danish and Greek presidencies; what items were on each agenda; what representative of the Scottish Executive was present at each meeting; what preparatory meetings were held for each meeting; which officials were present; when the Committee is next due to meet; and if he will make a statement; [132530]

(2) if he will list the dates of meetings of the EU Committee for the implementation of the joint action establishing a programme of exchanges, training and co-operation for persons responsible for action to combat organised crime during the Danish and Greek presidencies; what items were on each agenda; what representative of the Scottish Executive was present at each meeting; what preparatory meetings were held for each meeting; which officials were present; when the Committee is next due to meet; and if he will make a statement; [132531]

(3) if he will list the dates of meetings of the EU Committee for the implementation of the incentive, exchange, training and co-operation programme for combating trade in human beings and the sexual exploitation of children (STOP) during the Danish and Greek presidencies; what items were on each agenda; what representative of the Scottish Executive was present at each meeting; what preparatory meetings were held for each meeting; which officials were present; when the Committee is next due to meet; and if he will make a statement; [132532]

(4) if he will list the dates of meetings of the EU Committee for the implementation of the programme of incentives and exchanges for legal practitioners (Grotius general and criminal) during the Danish and Greek presidencies; what items were on each agenda; what representative of the Scottish Executive was present at each meeting; what preparatory meetings were held for each meeting; which officials were present; when the Committee is next due to meet; and if he will make a statement; [132533]

(5) if he will list the dates of meetings of the EU Committee for the implementation of the incentive, exchange, training and co-operation programme for the prevention of crime (Hippocrates) during the Danish and Greek presidencies; what items were on each agenda; what representative of the Scottish Executive was present at each meeting; what preparatory meetings were held for each meeting; which officials were present; when the Committee is next due to meet; and if he will make a statement; [132534]

(6) if he will list the dates of meetings of the EU Committee for the implementation of the programme of training, exchanges and co-operation in the field of asylum and immigration and the crossing of external borders (Odysseus) during the Danish and Greek presidencies; what items were on each agenda; what representative of the Scottish Executive was present at each meeting; what preparatory meetings were held for each meeting; which officials were present; when the Committee is next due to meet; and if he will make a statement; [132535]

(7) if he will list the dates of meetings of the EU Committee for the implementation of the community action programme on preventative measures to fight violence against children, young persons and women (Daphne) during the Danish and Greek presidencies; what items were on each agenda; what representative of the Scottish Executive was present at each meeting; what preparatory meetings were held for each meeting; which officials were present; when the Committee is next due to meet; and if he will make a statement. [132536]

Caroline Flint: The STOP II, Oisin II, Falcone, Hippocrates and Grotius (general and criminal) funding programmes expired in 2002. Their Management Committees last met on 23 and 24 July 2002 to agree the successful projects for funding for that year. They have since been replaced by a single funding programme known as AGIS.

The AGIS Management Committee met during the Danish and Greek Presidencies on 16 October 2002 to plan the logistics of the new programme; on 21 November 2002 to discuss the draft annual work programme and call for bids for 2003; and on 28 May 2003 to discuss the evaluation of bids for 2003. The Home Office held preparatory meetings to discuss the UK's position in the Committee on 27 September 2002 and 18 November 2002.

The Odysseus funding programme also expired in 2002 and has been replaced by a funding programme known as ARGO. The ARGO Management Committee met on 1 July 2002 to discuss the Committee's draft rules of procedure and the draft annual work programme for 2002. It met again on 3 December 2002 to discuss the bids to be selected for funding in 2002 and the draft annual work programme for 2003. The Home Office held preparatory meetings to discuss the UK's position on the ARGO programme on 11 September 2002 and 5 March 2003.

The Daphne Committee met on 11 September 2002 to discuss the bids which had been received and agree the allocation of funds to successful projects. The Committee also met on 6 November 2002 to agree the annual work programme and criteria for evaluating and selecting bids for 2003. The Commission also presented a proposal for a new Council Decision establishing a second phase of the programme to run from 2004–08 (Daphne II). The Committee last met on 10 June 2003 to discuss the projects recommended for funding for 2003 and the final evaluation of the programme. The Commission also gave a progress report on negotiations for the Council Decision establishing the Daphne II programme.

The UK is generally represented at meetings of these Committees by a Home Office official and an official from the UK Permanent Representation to the EU in Brussels. Reflecting the shared responsibility for the Daphne programme, the UK was represented at the Daphne Committee meeting on 11 September by a Home Office official, and by an official from the Department of Health at the meeting on 6 November. The UK was not represented at the meeting of 10 June.

UK position at these meetings always takes Scottish views and concerns fully into account. It is possible for Scottish Executive officials to attend meetings of the Committees as part of the British delegation.

Illegal Drugs (Afghan Poppy Production)

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the report by the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime on poppy production in Afghanistan in relation to the supply of illegal drugs in the United Kingdom. [136623]

Caroline Flint: Afghanistan has in recent years been the country from which upwards of 90 per cent. of heroin available in the UK has originated. Until levels of production of opium in Afghanistan reduce substantially from their current levels we would not expect to see an appreciable reduction in the amounts of heroin targeted on the UK from that source.

London Anti-war Demonstration (Policing)

Richard Younger-Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department who was in command of policing the anti-war demonstration in Trafalgar Square on 27 September. [137386]

Ms Blears [holding answer 10 November 2003]: The Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police tell me that the Metropolitan Police Public Order Branch were responsible for the arrangements and the policing of the anti-war demonstration in Trafalgar Square on 27 September.

National Probation Service

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what criteria will be used to judge whether a chair of a probation board in England and Wales will be re-appointed; and whether chairs will be re-appointed provisionally. [136002]

Paul Goggins: The criteria for reappointment are set out in a competency based framework agreed for probation board chairs and other members. The framework covers five key areas of corporate governance:

Corporate responsibility—being collectively responsible and accountable for leadership, direction and control of the probation area

Organisational excellence—leading the service as it strives for organisational excellence through continuous improvement

Valuing and Enabling Diversity—understanding and appreciating the impact that valuing and managing difference can make to organisational effectiveness

Ambassador—promoting and representing the board and the service both internally and externally

Working with People—achieving results through effective communication and team working.

Board chairs may be reappointed for one further term subject to satisfactory assessment of performance against this framework.

Those board chairs appointed when the National Probation Service was created in 2001 finish their first term of office on 31 March 2004. Those wishing to serve a further term have already been assessed and have been informed as to whether they will be reappointed. In accordance with good practice the appointments themselves will be made near the start of the term of office.

Mr. Hepburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what funding was allocated to the Northumbria Police Force in each year since 1997. [137471]

Ms Blears: The information is set out in the tables.

Based on the new arrangements, comparable grant figure for 2001–02 would have been £203,868,972.

In addition, Northumbria received the following funding in capital grant, including Airwave and the Premises Improvement Fund.

1997–98	7,719
1998–99	8,479
1999–2000	5,408

Parliamentary Ombudsman

Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions in the last two years a report from the Ombudsman has resulted in a payment by his Department to the complainant. [135223]

Fiona Mactaggart [holding answer 3 November 2003]: For the year 2001–02, 21 cases resulted in payment by the Department.

Six were as a result of investigation (two of which were discontinued before full report was issued). £6,185.00. 15 cases resolved short of statutory investigation i.e. by inquiry of Department. £2,650.00.

For the year 2002–03, 47 cases resulted in payment by the Department. 13 were as a result of investigation (four of which were discontinued before full report was issued). £13,359.00. 34 cases resolved short of statutory investigation i.e. by inquiry of Department. £4,167.00.

Information on the handling of complaints is set out in tabular form by the Parliamentary Ombudsman each year as an attachment to his Annual Report. For those complaints where there was evidence of maladministration which warranted a full investigation, the table sets out how many complaints were upheld as being fully or partially justified. Copies of the Parliamentary Ombudsman's Annual Report can be viewed in the Library, or on the Parliamentary Ombudsman's website at www.ombudsman.org.uk/publications.

Police

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on police officer manning levels in the Lancashire Police Authority area. [137212]

Ms Blears: Decisions on the balance between police officers and police (support) staff is a matter for the Chief Constable of Lancashire Constabulary (Paul Stephenson QPM). At the end of August 2003, the force had record strength of 3,469 police officers. This is 130 more than in March 2003 and 165 more than in March 2002. I understand that the force has forecast strength for 31 March 2004 at 3,503 officers. In March 2003, the force had 1,489 police (support) staff, which is 47 more than in March 2002.

Additionally, Lancashire Constabulary had 77 Community Support Officers on 31 August 2003, with plans to have 107 by March 2004.

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to merge constabularies in the area of the Government Office for the West Midlands. [137623]

Ms Blears [holding answer 10 November 2003]: I have no plans to merge constabularies in the area of the Government Office of the West Midlands.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department pursuant to his answer of 6 October 2003, Official Report, column 1242W, on the police, how many police officers licensed to carry firearms in each year since 1997 were (a) suspended and (b) prevented from carrying firearms; and if he will make a statement. [136946]

Ms Blears: Information concerning the numbers of police officers licensed to carry firearms in each year since 1997 and (a) suspended and (b) prevented from carrying firearms is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police response vehicles are available (a) in each London borough and (b) to the (i) British Transport Police and (ii) Royal Parks Police; and if he will make a statement. [136866]

Ms Blears: The information is provided as follows:

Prisons

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to prevent overcrowding in prisons. [136249]

Paul Goggins: Levels of overcrowding are determined by Prison Service Area Managers and monitored carefully on the basis of operational judgment and experience.

As part of the Prison Service building programme, the Government are investing £1.3 billion in the three years up to 2005–06 on building and operating additional capacity. The Prison Service will provide around 3,000 additional places in existing prisons by 2006. A further 1,290 places will be provided through the new prisons currently under construction at Ashford (near Heathrow) and at Peterborough. In addition, a new unit at Birmingham prison has opened recently, six months ahead of schedule, and provides an additional 452 places.

We are further managing the prison population through the use of the Home Detention Curfew (HOC) through reforms to the criminal justice system.

An amendment to the Criminal Justice Bill will make foreign national prisoners who are serving determinate sentences of more than three months liable to deportation up to four and a half months early. The measure brings the foreign nationals in line with UK prisoners who are eligible to apply for HOC. The same risk assessment procedures will apply.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many vacancies there were at each (a) prison and (b) young offenders' institution on 30 June; and if he will make a statement. [136862]

Paul Goggins: Information on staff vacancies against planned posts at 30 June 2003, for each public sector prison and young offender institute is contained in the following table. The figures represent a snapshot of staffing at establishment level and do not take into account new staff who were still in the recruitment process on 30 June.

During 2002, recruitment in the Prison Service reached record levels with a total of 6,645 new staff joining the Service. 2,240 prison officers began initial officer training in the 12 months to 30 June 2003. This high level of recruitment activity is predicted to continue into next year due in part to the rising prison population and new accommodation coming on stream.

To assist in the retention of staff in particular areas, local pay allowances have been introduced. In addition, to cover vacancies in the short-term certain establishments are allowing officers to work additional hours as part of the 'Contracted Supplementary Hours Scheme'.

[1] Figures do not take into account new staff who were still in the recruitment process at 30 June 2003.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether there is public interest immunity in whistle blowing cases for (a) prison officers, (b) prison staff and (c) other personnel working within the Prison Service. [137080]

Paul Goggins: All staff working within the Prison Service are protected by the 'whistle blowing' provisions contained in the Employment Rights Act 1996.

Public Order

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the average length of time taken to implement a model Home Office bye-law to ban on-street drinking, from the day that the decision is taken by the local authority, was in the last year for which figures are available. [137238]

Ms Blears: This information is not available centrally and would be a matter for individual local authorities.

Road Safety

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many convictions for (a) driving without due care and attention, (b) failing to have proper control of a vehicle, (c) careless and inconsiderate driving and (d) dangerous driving have been secured in connection with the use of (i) hand-held mobile phones and (ii) all types of mobile phone in each year since 1997. [137181]

Paul Goggins: The statistics collected centrally do not enable the convictions for motoring offences in connection with mobile phones to be separately identified.

As from 1 December 2003, the specific offence of driving while using a hand-held mobile telephone will be introduced under a new regulation to be added to the Road Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations 1986.

Small and Sporting Events Safety Guide

Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will publish the Small and Sporting Events Safety Guide; and if he will make a statement. [135082]

Ms Blears: The Event Safety—Best Practice Guide seeks to provide guidance to organisers of sporting and non-sporting events. We are consulting key stakeholders on a final draft. We hope to publish the guidance in the new year.

SO19 Firearms Branch

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers in the SO19 Firearms Branch were suspended, broken down by month, in each of the last three years; and if he will make a statement. [136865]

Ms Blears: The Commissioner of Police for the Metropolis has stated that no firearms officers were suspended from police duty during this period.

South Wales Police

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the performance of south Wales police in murder cases; and if he will make a statement. [136787]

Ms Blears: Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary produced a 2002–03 report on south Wales police which included an assessment of their Major Crime Support Unit which handles the investigation of murder cases and other serious crimes. Her Majesty's Inspector (HMD) was impressed by the professionalism and the sense of duty to the public of the members of the unit. He reported that there was increased resilience in the investigative processes in south Wales Police and that increased value is being placed on family liaison and independent advisory groups during investigations of serious crime.

HMI also reported on the decision taken in 1999 to re-investigate 11 undetected murders and commended south Wales police for its committed response to proper public concerns.

A copy of the full HMIC report is in the Library.

Trick or Treat

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many complaints have been received by the Metropolitan police concerning trick or treat calls. [136743]

Ms Blears: The Commissioner of Police for the Metropolis advises me, that the computerised system for recording police calls does not distinguish between 'trick or treat" calls and other nuisance/disturbance calls. It is therefore not possible to provide the information requested.

West Yorkshire Police Authority

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to address the predicted funding shortfall in the West Yorkshire police authority area. [135875]

Ms Blears: I shall announce details of the provisional police funding settlement in mid-November. It is a matter for West Yorkshire police authority to determine its final budget for next year in the light of its funding settlement, taking into account local needs and views.

We expect police authorities to set budgets that ensure further improvements without placing excessive burdens on the local taxpayer.

Young Offender Institutions

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the average cost is of imprisoning an offender at a young offender institution; and what the total cost of running YOIs was in each of the last five years. [135864]

Paul Goggins: The average annual cost of imprisoning an offender in a Young Offender Institution (YOI) is £29,721 in male closed YOI establishments and £18,866 in male open YOI establishments. These figures include establishment costs but exclude the share of headquarters overheads. The number of YOIs has not remained constant over the five-year period. These figures are not comparable with the Prison Service cost per place Key Performance Indicators.

The following table shows the total cost of running young offender institutions in the last five years.

	Male closed YOI	Male open YOI	Total
1998–99	122,460,000	9,410,000	131,870,000
1999–2000	137,066,308	9,653,734	146,720,042
2000–01	198,588,609	10,727,558	209,316,167
2001–02	162,536,448	11,475,992	174,012,440
2002–03	182,908,407	7,370,209	190,278,616

These year on year costs are not comparable due to a change in the accounting system from cash to resource. In addition the number of YOI establishments has decreased during this period, causing some fluctuation in the expenditure figures.

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many hours on average offenders in young offender institutions spent on (a) education, broken down into (i) literacy, (ii) numeracy and (iii) other education-related activities, (b) exercise, (c) vocational work and (d) community work in the last year for which figures are available. [135867]

Paul Goggins: The Prison Service collects information on the average hours prisoners spend on education activities broken down into various categories. The education statistics are not broken down into literacy and numeracy as requested. The information available for 2002–03 is given in the table. It relates to establishments categorised as a young offender institution as their main role.

Activity	Average hours per week	Average hours per inmate per week
Basic skills education	17,035.4	2.68
Other education
Education leading to accreditation	10,179.4	1.60
Maintaining safe and secure environment	299.3	0.05
Health education clinics and promotion	1,363.5	0.21
Other education	6,091.4	0.96

Physical education	18,922.1	2.98
Vocational work
Skills training leading to recognised national accreditation	9,476.4	1.49
Community work
Voluntary work	405.0	0.06
Total	63,772.4	10.04

Under the National Specification for learning and skills for young people serving a Detention and Training Order, juvenile offenders are expected to undertake one hour of private study per week in both literacy and numeracy, and a minimum of 12 hours of enrichment activities at the weekends.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many children in young offender institutions (a) had special educational needs, (b) had educational statements and (c) suffered psychosis in 2002–03; if he will express these figures as a percentage of the total number of children in each institution in the UK; and if he will list the institutions; [137076]

(2) how many teachers, expressed as full-time equivalents, work in each young offender institution; and if he will express this as a percentage of the young offenders institution population; [137078]

(3) how many of the teachers within each young offender institution have been specifically trained to teach children; how many are special educational needs teachers; and if he will express these figures as a percentage of the total number of children in each young offender institution. [137079]

Paul Goggins: An analysis of "ASSET" assessment forms, published in December 2002, found that 25 per cent. of all young people in the youth justice system had been identified as having special educational needs and that 60 per cent. of these had formal statements.

Information about the number of children in young offender institutions diagnosed with psychosis in any particular year is not collected centrally. A survey of mental ill health in the prison population of England and Wales, undertaken in 1997 by the Office for National Statistics (ONS), indicated that 8 per cent. of young men aged 16 to 20 on remand and 10 per cent. of such sentenced young men had suffered from a functional psychosis in the previous year.

The table shows staff employed through the education contract in delivering or supporting education in establishments whose principal function is to hold Young Offenders. Data are from March 2003. Teaching staff include learning support assistants, and non-teaching staff include special educational needs co-ordinators.

On the basis of the information available, approximately 90 per cent. of teaching staff across the juvenile estate are qualified or are working towards a further education qualification. The Prison Service will be providing accredited training to learning support assistants later in the year to help them support learning in the juvenile estate. An inclusive learning handbook has been issued to help teachers, and other prison staff, identify and support prisoners with learning difficulties and/or disabilities.

The quality of teaching in custodial settings has improved through the introduction of the Common Inspection Framework. The new specification for teaching and learning we will introduce from September 2004 will also ensure quality control of teaching standards.

Young Offenders

Ian Lucas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many young offenders from north Wales below the age of 15 years were sentenced to custody in the last three years for which records are available. [136018]

Paul Goggins: The information requested is contained in the table.

Juveniles aged 10–14 sentenced to immediate custody in North Wales in 1999, 2000 and 2001

	Number of juveniles
1999	1
2000	9
2001	7

Note:
Statistics for 2002 will be published in December.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assistance is available to youth offenders to ensure that they are able to learn from mistakes and do not re-offend. [132940]

Ms Blears: We have introduced a range of measures across England and Wales many of which place particular emphasis on reparation, education and training.

These include Referral Orders, which were introduced nationally in April 2002 and are now the main disposal for young defendants pleading guilty for the first time. Youth offender panels, made up of representatives of the local community, agree an intervention programme with the young offender designed to tackle his/her offending behaviour. Victims are encouraged to participate in this process which can further enhance the impact of the panel on the young offender. The programme must include an element of reparation to the victim.

The Intensive Supervision and Surveillance Programme (ISSP) was introduced in July 2001 as an alternative to custodial sentences for persistent young offenders. The programme aims to bring some structure to offenders' often chaotic lifestyles by addressing the risk factors contributing to their offending behaviour, such as educational deficits, weaknesses in thinking skills or drug misuse.

Where a custodial sentence is necessary, the Detention and Training Order is now the main sentence for 12–17 year olds. This includes individual training plans designed to address offending behaviour and associated risk factors and to provide young offenders with the necessary skills to avoid getting into trouble again.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Arson

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what plans he has to reduce the number of arson incidents; and what increase in resources the Government plans to give to fire authorities to tackle arson. [137991]

Phil Hope: The Government established the Arson Control Forum in 2001 to take forward a national programme of arson reduction measures. Part of this programme is to support multi-agency partnerships that tackle arson locally by funding community-based projects.

To date, the forum has invested some £2.25 million of Government money in 50 local arson reduction projects in England and Wales. The Government have set aside an additional £4 million in 2003–04, rising to £4.5 million in 2004–05 and £4.8 million in 2005–06, for further arson reduction work. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister is currently considering applications from local partnerships for grants from these funds.

Business Rates (Private Schools)

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what estimate he has made of the effect on the rating income of each local authority of the reduced rate of business rates paid by private schools because of their charitable status. [137469]

Mr. Raynsford: There is no reliable basis on which to make such an estimate, as the information collected from local authorities on business rates relief does not distinguish private schools from other charities.

The Local Government Finance Act 1988 provides mandatory rate relief to any ratepayer that is a charity or a non-profit making body operating as a charity and uses the property they occupy wholly or mainly for charitable purposes. A private school which is not run for profit counts as a charity and therefore qualifies for mandatory rate relief.

Mandatory relief is available at 80 per cent. of the full rates bill and is fully centrally funded but can be increased to 100 per cent. at the discretion of local authorities. The discretionary increase is 25 per cent. centrally funded, and local authorities are required to meet the remaining 75 per cent. of any increase.

Census 2001

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what assessment his Department has made of the implications for future local government funding calculations of the recent Statistics Commission report on the accuracy of the 2001 census for the Westminster City Council area. [136993]

Mr. Raynsford: For each year's Revenue Support Grant calculations, the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister need to use the most up to date data that are available on a consistent basis for all local authorities. For population, this is the mid-year population estimates provided by the Office for National Statistics. If subsequent revisions are made to population estimates following the recommendations made in the Statistics Commission report or on the basis of other studies, such as the Westminster address matching exercise, then the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister will consider whether to make an amending report. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister have already announced that an amending report will be made for the 2003–04 settlement in respect of revisions made to population estimates by the Office for National Statistics.

Climate Change

Mr. Denham: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what estimate he has made of the total area of the properties in low lying areas that will be affected by an increased risk of flooding from the consequences of climate change by 2050. [137389]

Keith Hill: The Office of Science and Technology's Foresight project on flood and coastal defence is examining the factors that drive change in flood risk, their impacts and the effect of various responses under the range of foresight socio-economic futures scenarios. The Phase 2 report on risk drivers and their impacts is available in draft on the internet at www.foresight.gov.uk. It is currently subject to peer review.

The results so far suggest that, on the assumption that there is no change in current flood management policies, there will be a low to moderate increase in the probability of inland flooding in the north and west of England and a negligible or low change either way in central and south-eastern parts. There will be a high increase in coastal flood risk in the south-east (from Essex to the Solent), particularly in the Thames estuary with moderate increases in the north Norfolk and Humber estuary areas.

While there is a great deal of uncertainty, the analysis suggests that the number of people at high risk (i.e. within the Environment Agency's indicative flood plain) will increase from its present level of 1.56 million to a range of between 2.26 and 3.55 million by the 2080s, depending on which foresight socio-economic scenario is applied. Expected annual economic damage to residential and commercial property could increase in the same period from the current level of £1,000 million to between £1,600 million and £21,000 million, again depending on the foresight socio-economic scenario. The resulting areas of highest risk of damage, would appear to be the Thames valley and estuary, the Mersey–Humber corridor and areas around the Bristol Channel.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what the responsibilities of local authorities are in relation to preparations for the consequences of climate change on coastal areas; and if he will make a statement. [137390]

Keith Hill: In July 2003, the Local Government Association and UK Climate Impacts Programme published advice to local authorities on "Climate change and local communities—how prepared are you?" This is available in the Library of the House and on the internet at www.ukcip.org.uk. It advises on local authority activities affected by climate change and how it can be taken into account. There is potential for climate change to impact on a wide range of local authority responsibilities, the principal ones in coastal areas being in relation to coastal defence, shoreline management and land-use planning.

The Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs and the Environment (Defra) Agency have jointly sponsored research on coastal evolution over the next 30–100 years, taking account of climate change scenarios. This provides the basis for consideration of climate change impacts in the second generation of shoreline management plans being prepared by the coastal groups of local authorities and Environment Agency.

Planning policy guidance note 25 "Development and flood risk" issued by the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister in 2001 already contains guidance on how climate change can be taken into account when considering both inland and coastal flood risk. This is based on the guidance on sea-level rise and likely increase in river flows in Defra's project appraisal guidance for flood and coastal defence, which was published in 1999 and confirmed this year in the light of the UKCIP 2002 climate- change scenarios. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister will be publishing shortly further advice on the consideration of climate change in land-use planning.

Council Tax

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many and what percentage of council tax payers were (a) in receipt of (i) full and (ii) partial council tax benefits and (b) not in receipt of council tax benefit in the City of Newcastle upon Tyne (A) in 1996–97 and (B) in the most recent financial year for which figures are available. [137674]

Mr. Raynsford: In 1996–97, 43,000 council tax payers in Newcastle upon Tyne were in receipt of council tax benefit. This represents 38 per cent. of the chargeable dwellings as at 16 October 1996.

In 2002–03, 33,000 council tax payers in Newcastle upon Tyne were in receipt of council tax benefit. This represents 30 per cent. of the chargeable dwellings as at 16 October 2002.

Separate figures for the numbers of council tax benefit recipients receiving full or partial benefit are taken from a 1 per cent. annual sample and available only at a regional level. To provide information from the 1 per cent. sample by local authority would be subject to a high degree of sampling variation around the figures.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many properties there were in each council tax band in the City of Newcastle upon Tyne in (a) 1996–97 and (b) the latest year for which figures are available. [137675]

Mr. Raynsford: The requested information is tabled as follows.

Newcastle upon Tyne

	Number of chargeable dwellings as at
Band	16 October 1996	16 October 2002
A	69,513	67,409

Exceptions Policy (Housing)

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what responses he has received to his consultation on the future of the exceptions policy for housing. [137566]

Keith Hill: Current policy on providing for rural exception housing is set out in Planning Policy Guidance Note 3: "Housing", Annex B. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister recently published the consultation document "Influencing The Size, Type And Affordability Of Housing", which proposes that the current policy is replaced by a policy that enables local planning authorities to identify sites solely for affordable housing, on land within or adjoining existing villages, which would not otherwise be released for housing. The consultation period officially closed on 31 October 2003, but responses after that date have been considered because of the postal dispute. It is too early to say how many responses have been received or their nature.

Government Office (West Midlands)

David Wright: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many staff are employed by the Government Office West Midlands; and how many were employed in 1997. [136884]

Yvette Cooper: Staff employed in permanent posts at Government Office for the West Midlands:

October 1997: 294

October 2003: 346

These are not full-time equivalents. In 1997 the Government Office for the West Midlands represented three Departments, now it represents ten.

GVA/Grimley Planning Report

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what arrangements he has made for publishing the GVA/Grimley Planning Report. [R] [137629]

Keith Hill: The Government intend to publish the Report in due course.

Homelessness

Simon Hughes: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what the most recent annual average cost is of housing a homeless (a) adult and (b) dependant in temporary accommodation in Greater London. [137838]

Yvette Cooper: This information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Simon Hughes: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what the average number of (a) adults and (b) dependants housed in temporary accommodation in Greater London was in each year since 1997 for which figures are available. [137839]

Yvette Cooper: This information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Housing Renewal Pathfinders

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many domestic properties were sold for under £20,000 in each of the housing renewal Pathfinder areas in the latest year for which figures are available. [136996]

Keith Hill: The information is as follows:

Pathfinder area	Sales below £20,000 during 2002
Birmingham-Sandwell	53
East Lancashire	2,463
Hull	719
North Staffordshire	636
Manchester-Salford	1,656
Merseyside	770
Oldham-Rochdale	502
South Yorkshire	621
Tyneside	369

Notes:
1. The boundaries of the nine Pathfinder areas do not conform with any existing administrative area. So, for instance, the pathfinder area of South Yorkshire is not the same as the metropolitan county of the same name and the Pathfinder area of Hull is not the same as the area occupied by the unitary authority of Kingston-upon-Hull.
2. Sales are taken to mean the transfer of ownership for value of freehold and long leasehold residential properties, whether or not the purchase was supported by a mortgage.
Source:
Land Registry

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will list the housing renewal Pathfinder areas, broken down by (a) population, (b) households and (c) empty and abandoned properties. [136997]

Keith Hill: The latest data available is tabled as follows:

Pathfinder	Population	Households	Vacant household spaces
Birmingham-Sandwell	152,354	57,160	3,354
North Staffordshire	146,637	64,100	3,799
Merseyside	246,464	109,647	8,583
Manchester-Salford	240,370	102,085	13,773
Oldham-Rochdale	183,143	72,593	4,494
East Lancashire	206,770	81,754	8,009
South Yorkshire	297,887	125,132	6,288
Humberside	241,412	103,078	7,203
Newcastle-Gateshead	154,790	68,716	5,261
All pathfinders	1,869,827	784,265	60,764

Notes:
1. The data relates to the Pathfinder intervention areas that are smaller than the boundaries of the pathfinder local authorities. It uses the most consistent, robust and up-to-date data available for population and households, that being the Census 2001 data. 'Empty and abandoned properties' is not directly available within the Census 2001 dataset nor through other datasets for the intervention area. Therefore the closest equivalent Census 2001 data—'vacant household spaces'—has been provided. This figure approximates to what we would expect from 'empty and abandoned' property statistics if these were available.
2. Data for 2002 on empty properties for the districts involved in the Pathfinders is available at the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister website thorough the Housing Investment Programme, Index of Data list under Housing Statistics.
3. The data was derived from the published Census 2001 data as of June 2003 and does not reflect any subsequent revisions. The intervention area boundaries are those agreed between the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister and the Pathfinders as of June 2003.
4. Each Pathfinder 'intervention area' in the table above consists of all Census small areas (2001 Output Areas) whose centroids fall within the Pathfinder boundary. This means that in a few cases the boundary is an approximation that includes small areas outside the Pathfinder or excludes small areas actually within it. For 2001 Census Output Areas, the centroids are supplied on the boundary file by Office for National Statistics. This is the most detailed level of analysis available through Census.

Inaccurate Census Counts

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister whether his Department intends to compensate local authorities who may have been disadvantaged in local government spending allocations by inaccurate census counts. [137849]

Mr. Raynsford: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has already announced that an amending report will be made for the 2003/04 settlement to include any revised mid-2001 population estimates from the Office for National Statistics (ONS).

Mid-2002 population estimates from the ONS will be used for 2004/05 Revenue Support Grant calculations. These include an upward revision for the population of Manchester. If any subsequent revisions are made to population estimates then the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister will consider whether to make an amending report.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what proportion of spending by (a) Shropshire county council, (b) Oswestry borough council and (c) North Shropshire district council is to be financed by council tax payers in 2003–04. [137513]

Mr. Raynsford: Council tax expressed as a percentage of budgeted revenue expenditure for Shropshire county council, Oswestry borough council and North Shropshire district council in 2003–04 is tabled as follows:

2003–04	Budgeted revenue expenditure[1] £000	Council tax[2] £000	Council tax[2] Percentage
Shropshire	277,217	88,349	31.9
North Shropshire	9,791	3,472	35.5
Oswestry	5,983	2,448	40.9

[1] Revenue expenditure is expenditure financed from revenue support grant, specific and special grants within AEF, non-domestic rates, council taxes and balances. It also includes spending met by police grant.

Regional Assemblies

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will set a minimum threshold for turnout in the proposed regional assembly referendums below which the status quo would continue. [137505]

Mr. Raynsford: No.

Mortgage Lending

Mr. Jim Cousins: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Northavon (Mr. Webb) of 8 January 2003, Official Report, columns 271–72W, on new mortgage lending, what the figures are for the most recent available months. [137375]

Keith Hill: The information is as follows.

Variable/Fixed rate lending

The estimated percentages of remortgages or further loans taken out in each of the past 12 months with an initial interest rate that was (a) variable and (b) fixed are shown in the following table. Also included, for comparison purposes, are the equivalent figures for new mortgages.

It should be noted that loans taken out at an initial fixed rate of interest are likely to revert to a variable rate of interest after a fixed period of time, unless of course the borrower then chooses to remortgage (again) at another fixed rate of interest.

New mortgage lending, October 2002 to September 2003

Gross mortgage lending on a not seasonally-adjusted basis over the most recent 12-month period, October 2002 to September 2003, is as follows:

Planning Appeals

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many planning appeals are with the (a) Planning Inspectorate and (b) Secretary of State; and how many of each have been outstanding for (i) three months, (ii) six months, (iii) one year and (iv) more than one year. [136897]

Regional Government

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what the total budget for the Elected Regional Assembly Information Campaign was, broken down by main budget headings. [137153]

Mr. Raynsford: The information campaign is designed to inform members of the public about elected regional assemblies and referendums. The costs of the launch are estimated at £25,000. These costs included accommodation, venue hire, refreshments and transport.

Material produced for the launch of the campaign, such as exhibition stands and leaflets will continue to be used throughout the information campaign in the three northern regions. The estimated total cost for the "information campaign" for this financial year are expected to be £500,000.

Regional Housing Policies

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what rural proofing has been undertaken of the new regional housing policies. [137565]

Keith Hill: The Countryside Agency has been involved in the production of Regional Housing Strategies in all regions outside London. The agency is producing a checklist for rural proofing Regional Housing Strategies that will be used in developing the initial strategies. The housing funding allocations based on these initial strategies will deliver the Government's rural housing target of approving schemes for 3,000 affordable homes in settlements of below 3,000 people over the years 2004–05 and 2005–06.

Section 106 Agreements

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister which respondents to his Planning Green Paper supported the idea of a tariff system for section 106 agreements. [R] [137625]

Keith Hill: Of the 505 consultation responses received, 309 broadly agreed with the proposal to introduce a tariff, 150 were against the proposal and 46 expressed other views.

Sector	Broadly agreed	Broadly against
Business	54	83
Local authorities	168	20
Interest groups	72	36
Other	15	11

However, many respondents expressed views that were supportive of elements of the proposal while disagreeing with other aspects. The breakdown given in the table is therefore approximate.

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many planning permissions given on (a) call-in and (b) appeal to him in each of the last five years have involved a section 106 agreement. [R] [137627]

Keith Hill: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister is unable to provide this information in the time available but I will write to the hon. Member in due course.

Small Business

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what estimate he has made of the effect of Part 8 of the Local Government Act 2003 on the competitiveness of small business. [137606]

Mr. Raynsford: The effect of Part 8 of the Local Government Act 2003 on the competitiveness of small business was assessed in Regulatory Impact Assessments published during the passage of the Local Government Bill and in the final Regulatory Impact Assessment published on Royal Assent, which is available on the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister's website.

CABINET OFFICE

Departmental Energy Use

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how much (a) electricity and (b) other energy his Department has used in each year since 1997 (i) in total and (ii) per square metre; what the projected use is for each of the following years for which forecasts are made; what plans he has to reduce usage; and if he will make a statement. [135046]

Mr. Alexander: For answers in respect of parts (a) and (b) parts (i) and (ii) I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him by the Under-Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs, on 3 November 2003, Official Report, column 404W.

Given the current size of the Cabinet Office estate and information currently available we anticipate some reduction in real terms in our energy consumption in future years but I cannot yet quantify the change.

Improving energy efficiency is a continuing objective for the Cabinet Office and is an intrinsic part of our estate management activities. Since April 2002 we have worked in partnership with a Facilities Management provider to ensure the efficient use of energy throughout our operations, reflecting guidance on Government-wide energy efficiency initiatives and targets for energy use on the Government Estate. Continuing energy efficiency awareness campaigns encourage staff to conserve and make efficient use of energy.

Official Cars

Norman Baker: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office pursuant to his answer of 27 October 2003, Official Report, column 55W, on official cars, what accountability mechanism applies to the Leader of the Opposition. [136253]

Mr. Alexander: Individual office holders are responsible for ensuring appropriate use of Government cars in accordance with relevant guidance.

Parliamentary Ombudsman

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office in relation to the Parliamentary Ombudsman, how many cases were considered in the last year for which figures are available; how many cases were (a) upheld and (b) rejected; what the average time taken to consider cases was; and what the average cost was per case. [137157]

Mr. Alexander: The Parliamentary Ombudsman publishes information about the handling of cases in her annual report, copies of which are available in the Library of the House and on the Parliamentary Ombudsman's website at ww.ombudsman.org.uk. Information relating to the average costs associated with the Parliamentary Ombudsman's caseload is not held centrally.

HEALTH

Nurses

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the additional financial support offered to trainee NHS nurses since 1997. [136420]

Mr. Hutton: Following the report of the National Committee of Inquiry into Higher Education (the Dearing Report) in 1997, responsibility for nursing students training at degree level transferred from the Department for Education (now the Department for Education and Skills) to the Department of Health. From 1998 onwards, these students have been supported through the national health service bursary scheme and receive a more favourable package of support than other students in mainstream education.

NHS Bursary rates across all professions are considered each year and have been uplifted annually since 1998, including an increase of 10.4 per cent. (well ahead of inflation) in 2001.

The Department has made a number of other improvements to the scheme, including extension of eligibility for disabled students' allowances and hardship support to diploma level students, and more help with the costs of travel and accommodation. The Government have also committed to introduce help with the costs of child care from 2004.

My ministerial colleagues and I continue to keep NHS funded student support arrangements under review in order to ensure that they continue to meet our objectives for the service.

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance his Department issues to trusts for the recruitment of nurses from outside the UK. [136382]

Mr. Hutton: The Department has issued the following guidance to national health service trusts who are recruiting nurses from the outside the United Kingdom.

Guidance on International Nursing Recruitment (November 1999)

The Code of Practice for NHS employers involved in the international recruitment of healthcare professionals (October 2001)

Guide for the Provision of Adaptation for Nurses in the Independent and National Health Service Sectors (May 2003)

These documents are available on www.doh.gov.uk/international-recruitment.

Acute Hospital Beds

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many beds there were in acute hospitals in London in each year since 1997. [133748]

Mr. Hutton: Information on the numbers of beds by ward classification is collected for each national health service trust and not by individual hospital site or type of hospital. Information on the number of beds is published annually and is available from the Department's website at http://www.doh.gov.uk/hospitalactivity/.

Up to 1999–2000, this information was also published in paper form in Bed Availability and Occupancy: England, copies of which are available in the Library.

Angioplasty

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients undergoing angioplasty received titanium stents in each of the last five years for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement on the reliability of stents. [134243]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Department of Health does not hold this data centrally.

The National Institute for Clinical Excellence has recently conducted an appraisal and provided guidance on the use of coronary artery stents. The guidance recommends that stents should be used routinely for people with either stable or unstable angina or with acute myocardial infarction undergoing percutaneous coronary intervention.

Asbestos

Chris McCafferty: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what powers his Department has to require companies dealing with asbestos to release information regarding former employees who have contracted an asbestos-related disease. [136761]

Mr. Browne: I have been asked to reply.

Regulation 21 of the Control of Asbestos at Work Regulations 2002 (S.I. 2002 No. 2675) requires employers to keep their employee's personal health records for 40 years. The Regulation allows the Health and Safety Executive (HSE) to request copies of those records as and when they require. HSE could release such information they obtain only if the employee gave permission or if it were needed for legal proceedings.

Choice and Plurality

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will publish the reports on the two large scale simulations run by OPM to explore the potential effects of choice and plurality policies on the NHS; [129023]

(2) if he will publish the data reports for conferences organised by OPM on choice and plurality in the NHS for each strategic health authority in which they have taken place this year. [129024]

Mr. Hutton: A copy of the Department of Health Strategy Unit's summary of the two choice simulation events, ran for the Department by the Office of Public Management, has been placed in the Library.

Dental Laboratories

Richard Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many prosecutions have been brought under Regulation 14(a)(s) of the Medical Devices Regulations 1994 against dental laboratories which have not registered in accordance with the regulations since they came into force; what steps his Department is taking to identify those dental laboratories which are not so registering; and if he will make a statement. [135526]

Miss Melanie Johnson: No prosecutions have been undertaken against dental laboratories which have failed to register under the Medical Devices Regulations (now consolidated in SI2002 No. 618). The vast majority of breaches of the regulations are resolved with the co-operation of the manufacturer in line with the Governments Concordat on Enforcement without the need for prosecution. The Medicines and Healthcare products Regulatory Agency, which enforces the regulations in the United Kingdom, investigates and resolves all potential breaches that are drawn to its attention.

Dentistry

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he plans to take to increase provision of NHS dental services in Shropshire. [137509]

Dr. Ladyman: Oswestry dental access centre reopened in June 2003 following £160,000 refurbishment and expansion. This has increased the number of surgeries from three to four. The Department of Health has also provided funding for an additional dentist and dental nurse.

There is also an "Options for Change" field site in Oswestry, which is investigating the effective use of professionals complementary to dentistry.

Subject to Parliament, the Health and Social Care (Community Health and Standards) Bill will give new duties to primary care trusts (PCTs) from April 2005 to secure dental services and will enable them to provide assistance and support to dental practices with which they contract. From the same date, the £1.2 billion held centrally for dentistry will be devolved to PCTs to support them in delivering their new duties on dentistry. To enable PCTs to provide assistance to dental practices in advance of 2005, we have published the General Dental Services Incentive Schemes Directions 2003.

We have also set up an national health service support team to work with PCTs to tackle access problems and have provided new investment of £44 million for dentistry to support access, choice and quality. The NHS support team will be working with the NHS locally in Shropshire to see what assistance they can provide.

Drug Misuse

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to reduce the waiting time for treatment for drug abuse in Shropshire; and if he will make a statement. [137510]

Dr. Ladyman: Shropshire Primary Care Trust (PCT) is responsible for drug misuse services in Shropshire.

Shropshire and Staffordshire Strategic Health Authority reports that the PCT's drug action team has taken part in the 'Opening Doors' programme promoted by the National Treatment Agency for Substance Misuse and the NHS Modernisation Agency.

As a result, significant progress has already been made on waiting times in Shropshire. The latest figures show waiting times of between two and five weeks, depending on the kind of treatment.

Food Supplements Directive

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what plans he has to raise with the relevant European Commissioner the interpretation of Article 5 of the Food Supplements Directive; and if he will make a statement; [135263]

(2) what plans he has to liaise at a political level with other European member state governments as part of his strategy for achieving the best possible maximum permitted levels for nutrients under the provisions of the Food Supplements Directive. [135265]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Article 5 of the Food Supplements Directive lays out a framework for the future setting of maximum permitted levels of vitamins and minerals in food supplements. The United Kingdom continues to press for European Union maximum permitted limits to be set on a safety basis, and in doing so, is using its influence in both scientific and political forums. I intend to raise this issue with Ministers in other member states as and when appropriate. I am also seeking to arrange a meeting with Commissioner David Byrne at the earliest practicable opportunity.

General Practitioners

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made on implementing the target for 48-hour access to an appointment with a general practitioner. [136107]

Mr. Hutton: At September 2003, 93 per cent. of patients could be offered an appointment with a general practitioner within two working days. This represents considerable progress over the position in 1998, when only around 50 per cent. of people had this level of access.

Vera Baird: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what his policy is on ensuring adequate general practitioner coverage in communities without a local surgery. [136467]

Mr. Hutton: Each local primary care trust (PCT) is under a duty to secure provision of primary medical services for all people in its area. PCTs may deploy a variety of strategies to deliver this.

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the general practitioner vacancy (a) rate and (b) number was in each English region in each year since 1997. [137366]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 10 November 2003]: The Department's annual GP Recruitment and Retention Vacancy Survey started only from the year 2000.

The estimated three-month general practitioner (GP) vacancy rate for England in 2003 was 3.4 per cent. This is an increase from 2.7 per cent. in 2002. It is not possible to produce reliable estimates of the vacancy rate at strategic health authority (SHA) level. Estimated three-month vacancy rates are not available before 2002.

The number of GP vacancies for each SHA since 2000 is shown in the table. This represents a count of all GP vacancies that have occurred during each year. It will include turnover posts, and also posts created to boost expansion, even where they were filled very quickly. Thus, the increase in vacancies in part is a result of there being more posts overall, reflecting the Government's plan to increase the GP workforce.

Notes:

Finished Consultant Episode (FCE)

An FCE is defined as a period of admitted patient care under one consultant within one healthcare provider. Please note that the figures do not represent the number of patients, as a person may have more than one episode of care within the year.

Grossing

Figures are grossed for both coverage and missing/invalid clinical data, except for 2001–02 which is not yet adjusted for shortfalls.

All Operations count of Episodes

These figures represent a count of all FCE's where the procedure was mentioned in any of the 12 (four prior to 2002–03) operation fields in a HES record. A record is only included once in each count, even if an operation is mentioned in more than one operation field of the record.

Information Technology

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to sign the first local strategic partnership contracts under the national programme for NHS information technology. [133917]

Mr. Hutton: The first contract for a national electronic booking system was completed and announced on 8 October 2003.

The first contracts for local service providers for the national programme for information technology in the national health service will be for the North East and London Strategic Health Authority clusters and are expected to be awarded and completed in November 2003.

ME

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will break down by region the £8.5 million announced on 12 May to provide services for patients with symptoms of myalgic encephalomyelitis/chronic fatigue syndrome. [137820]

Dr. Ladyman: We are fully committed to improving services for patients with chronic fatigue syndrome/myalgic encephalomyelitis. We are currently considering the bids received from local health communities under this scheme. Funding will be made available to cover the two years from 1 April 2004. Funding decisions for year one will be announced towards the end of January 2004. The funding decisions for year two will be announced in June 2004.

NHS Disciplinary Cases

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what guidelines have been put in place to ensure that, in contentious disciplinary cases within NHS trusts, evidence submitted to an investigation is seen in full; [137148]

(2) what steps his Department takes to ensure that disciplinary procedures within the NHS trusts outstanding for 18 months are dealt with promptly. [137151]

Mr. Hutton: National health service trusts are responsible for the establishment of their own local disciplinary procedures.

We have been working very closely with the British Medical Association and British Dental Association to finalise a new national framework for doctors and dentists. The main elements of the framework were included in the joint statement of agreed principles which was published in September 2003 as part of the consultant contract consultation.

The Department has taken action to ensure that disciplinary cases are dealt with promptly. In the short term a senior human resources expert, working with the support of an expert steering group from across the Department, NHS and General Medical Council is available to help local management to resolve outstanding cases quickly. In addition, the National Clinical Assessment Authority is available to assist with case management.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what estimate his Department has made of the costs of (a) suspensions and (b) disciplinary procedures in the NHS for (i) Coventry, (ii) the West Midlands and (iii) England; [137150]

(2) how many suspensions lasting over 18 months there are in the NHS for (a) Coventry, (b) the West Midlands and (c) England. [137152]

Mr. Hutton: The Department routinely collects information on hospital and community medical and hospital dental staff suspended for more than six months. The information does not include cases where the practitioner is not suspended.

For the third quarter 2003, the latest date for which figures are available, there was one suspension reported to the Department lasting over 18 months in Coventry and a total of 13 in England. The total reported cumulative cost of suspensions lasting more than six months for the period 1 July-30 September 2003 in Coventry is £398,750, West Midlands (including Coventry) £489,755 and an estimated £3.5 million in England (including the above figures).

NHS Salaries

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list salaries and wages costs for (a) general and senior managers, (b) nurses and midwives and (c) administrative and clerical staff by NHS trust for the financial years (i) 2000–01 and 2001–02. [127342]

Mr. Hutton: This information has been placed in the Library.

Occupational Therapy

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many initial contacts there have been between NHS patients and occupational therapy staff in London in each of the past 10 years. [134854]

Mr. Hutton: Figures for occupational therapy initial contacts in London for the past 10 years are shown in the table.

Older People

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what use he will make of the skills profiles which general hospitals which care for older people have been asked to provide; and if he will make a statement; [137933]

(2) how many general hospitals have completed a skills profile of their staff in relation to the care of older people; and how many have in place a training programme to address the gaps identified. [137934]

Dr. Ladyman: It is for strategic health authorities to monitor achievement of the milestone in the older people's national service framework about general hospitals completing skills profiles of their staff in relation to the care of older people and developing appropriate training programmes. Information about progress is not collected centrally.

Patient Lists

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the average NHS patient list size is for (a) general practitioners and (b) dental practitioners. [137511]

Mr. Hutton: Data on the number of family doctors and patients are published annually. The latest edition, "Statistics for General Medical Practitioners in England: 1992–2002, is available at: http://www.doh.gov.uk/public/sb0303.pdf and shows that the average list is 1,838, four per cent. lower in 2002 than it was in 1992.

Dentists working in the general dental services (GDS) are free to register as many or as few patients as they choose. Patients who cannot, or who choose not to, register can still access national health service dental services through the personal dental service, community dental service, emergency dental service and the hospital dental service, and on an occasional basis, in the GDS.

At 30 June 2003, there were 16,326 principal dentists in the GDS in England and 23.5 million patients registered. On average, there were 1,436 registrations per principal dentist. Registrations cover patients seen in the last 15 months.

Patient Transport

Vera Baird: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what his policy is on the provision of transport to enable patients in areas where there is no general practitioner within walking distance to get treatment when it is needed. [136465]

Mr. Hutton: This is a matter for local decision by primary care trusts. However, if a patient's condition is such that he or she cannot get to the surgery, the general practitioner concerned is required to make a home visit.

Primary Care

Vera Baird: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he will take to protect current levels of primary care treatment of communities whose surgeries are removed to LIFT centres outside walking distance. [136463]

Mr. Hutton: We are committed to increasing the range and amount of treatment offered to patients outside of a hospital setting. New local investment finance trust developments bringing together a range of services into convenient locations will help improve patients' access to a range of services.

Primary Care Centres

Brian Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many one-stop primary care centres there are in England; where they are located; how many are proposed; where they will be located; and if he will make a statement. [135388]

Mr. Hutton: The NHS Plan announced the development of 500 one-stop primary care centres by the end of 2004. At the end of June 2003, 247 one stop primary care centres had been opened and local delivery plans suggest more than 500 will be open by the end of 2004. "Delivering the NHS Plan" (2002) announced an additional 250 centres by 2008, 125 of which are to be delivered by 2006

A detailed list of centres and their locations is not yet available but is being completed.

Quality Indicators

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to improve the ease of collection of quality indicators for general medical services practices through the introduction of new computer systems to the NHS. [136633]

Mr. Hutton: The Department is currently in discussion with the General Practitioners Committee and the NHS Confederation regarding the development of computer systems to support the quality and outcomes framework. The proposed solution will seek to minimise the practice work load by supplying practices and primary care trusts with systems which will support their business processes.

Respite Beds

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many respite beds there are in (a) Buckinghamshire, (b) South Buckinghamshire and (c) Wycombe constituency. [137903]

Dr. Ladyman: The data are not available centrally.

Speech/Language Therapy

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many initial contacts there were between patients and speech and language therapy staff in the NHS in London in each year since 1992. [134856]

Mr. Hutton: The information requested is shown in the table.

Trust Performance Ratings

Mr. Lyons: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the performance ratings for (a) acute and (b) specialist trusts for 2002–03. [135921]

Mr. Hutton: Information on the performance ratings for 2002–03 for all organisation types are available in the Library and on the Commission for Health Improvement's website at www.chi.nhs.uk/ratings.

Volatile Substance Abuse

Phil Sawford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to receive the Flemen report on volatile substance abuse. [127796]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Department of Health commissioned independent research work on volatile substance abuse (VSA) to inform future policy work on VSA and the national drug strategy. As is customary in such situations, there are no plans to publish this report.

CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

Magistrates Courts

Mr. Wood: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs whether the budget of magistrates' courts for administration of licensing will be transferred to local authorities when responsibility for the work is transferred [137313]

Mr. Leslie: On 10 July 2003, the Licensing Act received Royal Assent. The Act will transfer responsibility for the administration of licenses from the magistrates' courts to local authorities.

Under current arrangements, the principle is that the cost to magistrates' courts of the administration of licensing is covered by the licensing fees charged. As such, there is no separate budget in the magistrates' courts that is allocated to licensing that could be transferred to local authorities. The intention of the Department for Culture, Media and Sport, who have overall responsibility for the Act, is that a similar system will operate after the transfer of responsibility. I understand that licensing fees will be set at a level that will folly cover the administration, inspection and enforcement costs incurred by local authorities in relation to licensing.

Delayed Trials

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs how many trials were delayed because of late arrival of prisoners from (a) police cells and (b) prisons in 2002–03, broken down by court in Lancashire. [137342]

Mr. Leslie: Performance data was not collected centrally on late delivery of prisoners in 2002–03. However, I am able to provide data on late delivery between prisons and the Crown Court from July to September 2003.

Data for Lancashire Criminal Justice Area for this period reveals that an average of 8 trials per month in the Crown Court were delayed due to late delivery. This equates to an average of 5.6 per cent. of all cases listed for trial in any one month. The average delay was an hour and a half per case. The length of delay, however, varies significantly from 10 minutes to 3 and a half-hours.

Data by court average from July-September 2003

Lancaster Crown Court	None
Preston Crown Court	4.3 cases
Burnley Crown Court	0.3 cases
Carlisle Crown Court	3.7 cases

Unfortunately, I am unable to provide like data for the Magistrates' Courts relating to the late delivery of prisoners as this is not collected.

Divorced Parents

Sir Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs pursuant to his answer of 22 October 2003, Official Report, column 630, on divorced parents, if he will (a) commission research into the number of divorced fathers who maintain effective contact with their children and (b) take steps to monitor the welfare of children, when the children's mother is granted leave to remove them from the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [136101]

Mr. Lammy: Before granting leave to take children abroad, the courts will consider all the relevant issues and, as required by the Children Act 1989, have the best interests of the child as their paramount concern. Therefore, children will only be taken abroad with the leave of the court where it judges such a step to be in their best interests. Such children will be living in many parts of the world and it would not be appropriate or practical for the UK Government to exercise a monitoring role. There are, therefore, no current plans to commission research or to introduce a monitoring role in this area.

Electoral Fraud

Mr. Drew: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what research he has collated on the level of electoral fraud in (a) postal ballots and (b) voting in person. [137335]

Mr. Leslie: The independent Electoral Commission has evaluated every all-postal electoral pilot scheme undertaken since April 2002. The evaluations included consideration of the issue of fraud and the findings from the 2003 pilots informed the Commission's recent 'Shape of elections to come' report, which concluded that 'there is only very limited evidence of any increase in fraud linked to all-postal ballots.'

Mr. Drew: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what criminal sanctions there are in relation to electoral fraud. [137336]

Mr. Leslie: There are a number of offences relating to electoral fraud which carry a variety of penalties including a minimum fine of £200 (in some circumstances no maximum is specified) and custodial sentences ranging from 6 months to 2 years. In addition, these offences may be classified as either illegal or corrupt practices, which carry different sanctions, depending on the offence. These include disenfranchisement and disqualification from standing as a candidate for specified periods.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs if he will list cases of electoral fraud that have resulted in a custodial sentence in the last five years. [137337]

Mr. Leslie: I regret that information on electoral fraud cases has not been systematically collected or held centrally. The Electoral Commission is working with the Crown Prosecution Service to develop a process to identify and monitor electoral fraud cases.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what discussions he has had with the Electoral Commission on electoral fraud. [137338]

Mr. Leslie: My officials and I are in frequent communication with the Electoral Commission on a range of electoral issues, including electoral fraud. Following such discussions, and recommendations made by the Commission, consideration is currently being given to a number of changes to electoral procedures, some of which are aimed at fraud prevention. Meanwhile, we have included in the current European Parliamentary and Local Elections (Pilots) Bill, an extension of the offence of 'personation' (to cover remote voting) and a power to extend the time limit by which a prosecution for such an offence must begin.

Family Courts

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what representations he has received on the legal provisions which apply in relation to the division of property in family courts; and if he will make a statement. [137086]

Mr. Lammy [holding answer 10 November 2003]: Under current legislation, the courts are empowered to make a number of orders in relation to the division of family property and must consider a range of issues in each case. They have the discretion to make the orders that they see as appropriate and fair with regard to the specific circumstances of a case. The representations I receive are by way of correspondence from right hon. and hon. Members on behalf of their constituents and from members of the public. In the main they relate to general queries or complaints about the way the legislation will be or has been applied in particular cases.

House Sales

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs how many house sales there were at more than (a) £50,000, (b) £100,000, (c) £200,000, (d) £500,000, (e) £750,000 and (f) £1 million in the Chorley constituency in each year since 1997. [137343]

Mr. Lammy: The figures for each completed calendar year are as follows. The Land Registry collects residential property price data by specified price bands and it is not possible to provide figures for sales specifically at more than £750,000. Alternative ranges have therefore been provided.

£		1997	1998	1999	2000	2001	2002
50,001	100,000	770	806	932	1,056	1,060	1,193
100,001	200,000	261	332	385	437	579	845
200,001	500,000	16	29	39	39	73	168
500–001	600,000	0	1	0	0	0	2
600,001	800,000	0	0	1	1	0	5
Over 1 million		0	0	0	0	0	1

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs how many house sales of less than £20,000 in east Lancashire took place in each year since 1997. [136732]

Keith Hill: I have been asked to reply.

Calendar year	Sales below £20,000 in the area of east Lancashire as defined in note 1 below	Sales below £20,000 in the east Lancashire pathfinder area
1997	1,340	1,452
1998	1,461	1,482
1999	1,372	1,382
2000	1,683	1,702
2001	1,953	1,881
2002	2,821	2,463

1. The area of "east Lancashire" referred to in the first column of sales figures has been interpreted as comprising the districts of Burnley, Hyndburn, Pendle, Ribble Valley, Rossendale.
2. Sales are taken to mean the transfer of ownership for value of freehold and long leasehold residential properties, whether or not the purchase was supported by a mortgage.

Magistrates

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what advice the Lord Chancellor gives on the age of magistrates. [136914]

Mr. Leslie: I would refer my hon. Friend to the written ministerial statement on 6 November 2003, Official Report, column 43WS concerning the Secretary of State and Lord Chancellors' National Strategy for the Recruitment of Lay Magistrates. That records the Secretary of State and Lord Chancellor's decision that there need be no lower age limit for applicants to the magistracy who can show that they have the key qualities needed for appointment. This is intended to help in achieving a more diverse and better-balanced bench. The upper age limit for recruitment of magistrates is 65. The training to serve as a magistrate takes approximately two years to complete, and at least two—three years on the bench is needed to recoup the cost of training before a magistrate reaches the statutory retirement age of 70.

Mental Health

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs if he will bring forward proposals in the draft Mental Incapacity Bill to prevent (a) medical staff and (b) carers from withholding care to people who are mentally incapacitated. [136625]

Mr. Lammy: The Draft Mental Incapacity Bill establishes a framework under which decisions can be made on behalf of adults who lack capacity. The Bill contains a requirement that all decisions must be made in the best interests of the person. The current law is that, in certain circumstances, care that involves the provision of medical treatment may be withheld by medical staff if this is in the best interests of the person because the continuation of such care would serve no beneficial purpose and would be burdensome. The Bill would not change this. However the Bill adds a new safeguard of a criminal offence of ill-treatment and neglect. This would mean that wilfully neglecting someone by withholding care could lead to prosecution.

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what discussions his Department has had with (a) charities, (b) religious groups, (c) legal professionals and (d) medical professionals about provisions on the withholding of care in the draft Mental Incapacity Bill. [136659]

Mr. Lammy: My Department has had a large number of discussions with a wide range of stakeholders on all aspects of the draft Bill and we set up a Consultative Forum in September 2002 to facilitate this. We have engaged with a number of lay and religious groups, for example Alert and CARE, in order to learn more about their views on healthcare decision-making, including the circumstances in which medical treatment is withdrawn or withheld. We have also similarly engaged with legal and medical professional organisations, including the Law Society and the British Medical Association. We are committed to maintaining contact with these and other groups with an interest in the draft Bill.

Paper Deeds

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs whether all paper deeds will be returned to the registered land and home owners rather than destroyed in the process of putting the Land Registry on-line. [136704]

Mr. Lammy: When making an application to Land Registry, a customer may now request the return of any of the documents lodged with the application subject, in most cases, to providing a certified copy.

For documents lodged on or before commencement of the Land Registration Act 2002 on 13 October 2003, registered owners have five years from that date to request the return of a document lodged by them or by a previous owner.

No decision has yet been made by Land Registry as to whether, and if so in what circumstances, documents will be destroyed. However, the Land Registration Rules 2003 require that before any documents are destroyed (and subject to the five year period for certain documents, as mentioned above) the Chief Land Registrar must be satisfied that either he has made a sufficient copy of the document or that further retention is unnecessary.

Written Answers to Questions

Wednesday 12 November 2003

LEADER OF THE HOUSE

Constituency Offices

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Leader of the House how many honourable Members have constituency offices that are registered under the Office, Shops and Railway Premises Act 1963; and what advice hon. Members are given about such registration of constituency offices. [137186]

Mr. Hain: This information is not collected centrally. I understand that the House authorities do not provide any such advice, but the Speaker's Advisory Panel on Members' Allowances has been asked to consider how best to ensure that Members are aware of the need to register their offices.

Parliamentary Bills

Mr. Jack: To ask the Leader of the House if he will list, for each bill considered by the House in this session of Parliament, how much time was spent on debate on each clause during (a) committee stage and (b) report stage. [137693]

Mr. Hain: The information requested is a matter of public record, obtainable from Hansard, but could be collated only at disproportionate cost.

ADVOCATE-GENERAL

Partnership Law

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Advocate-General pursuant to her Answer of 9 September, Official Report, column 158, on partnership law in relation to Scottish land law, whether any representations have been made. [136728]

The Advocate-General for Scotland: I am informed that no representations by landowners have been received by the Office of the Advocate-General about the matter of partnership law in relation to Scottish land law.

SCOTLAND

Scottish Agricultural Sector

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had with (a) the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs and (b) the Scottish Executive on the Scottish agricultural sector. [135828]

Mrs. McGuire: My right hon. Friend has regular discussions with his ministerial colleagues and with the Scottish Executive on a wide range of issues.

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations his Department has made to the European Union regarding the Scottish agricultural sector. [135829]

Mrs. McGuire: The Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs represents the United Kingdom's views on agricultural issues in regular discussions in the European Union. In doing so, it takes account of the views of the Scottish Executive and the other Agriculture Departments.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL

Iraq

Llew Smith: To ask the Solicitor-General pursuant to her answer of 23 October, Official Report, column 693W, on Iraq, what considerations underpinned the decision to override the convention of non-publication of the Law Officers' advice to Government when the Attorney-General published a summary of his advice on 17 March. [135627]

The Solicitor-General: The Attorney-General's advice was not disclosed. In view of the high level of public interest in this issue, the Attorney-General, exceptionally, made a written statement in Parliament on 17 March 2003, setting out his view of the legal basis for the use of force against Iraq.

TRANSPORT

Accident Report (Salisbury)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will request a report on the accident on 6 November at Broken Cross Bridge near Salisbury; and if he will make a statement. [137767]

Mr. Jamieson: I understand that investigations into the circumstances surrounding the accident at Broken Cross Bridge, including the condition of the parapet, are on-going.

Given the general concern over highway accidents that result in vehicles ending up on railway tracks, the Government are keen to learn of such incidents as one part of our work to meet road safety targets.

I will therefore request that copies of the accident report are made available to my officials in order to assess whether there are any lessons to be learned. Until then I believe it would be inappropriate to make any further statement.

EU Committees

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the dates of meetings of (a) the EU Committee for the implementation of the directive relating to the availability of consumer information on fuel economy and carbon dioxide emissions in respect of the marketing of new passenger cars and (b) the EU

Committee on the control of major accident hazards involving dangerous substances (SEVESO II) during the Danish and Greek presidencies; what items were on each agenda; what representative of the Scottish Executive was present on each occasion; what preparatory meetings were held for each meeting; which officials were present at each preparatory meeting; and if he will make a statement. [132683]

Mr. Jamieson: During the Danish and Greek presidencies the Committee of Directive 99/94/EC met on one occasion, on 13 December 2002. On the agenda were a review of the state of play of legal implementation of the Directive in member states, a draft Directive adapting the base Directive with relation to displaying of CO_2 information in car showrooms, a recommendation to extend the Directive to other media, and a discussion of segmentation of the vehicle fleet for CO_2 labelling purposes.

Fuel consumption and CO_2 labelling are a reserved issue and the Committee meeting was attended by officials of the Department for Transport only. However, UK officials consult widely and the views of the devolved administrations, including the Scottish Executive, are fully reflected at Committee meetings.

Mersey Bridge

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what the Government's policy is on integrating the new Mersey Bridge with the transport network of (a) St. Helens, (b) Merseyside and (c) the north west region. [137987]

Mr. Jamieson: Halton borough council submitted a detailed proposal to my Department in July 2003 for the funding of a New Mersey Crossing. The implications of such a crossing for the transport networks of St. Helens, Merseyside and the north west region will be considered as part of our assessment of this proposal.

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the cost of linking the transport links of St. Helens with the new Mersey Bridge; and what additional resources he will make available for this purpose. [137988]

Mr. Jamieson: Halton borough council submitted a detailed proposal to the Department for Transport in July 2003 for the funding of a New Mersey Crossing. No separate assessment has been carried out by the Department of the cost of linking the transport links of St. Helens with a new crossing. The provision of additional resources for such transport links would be considered in the light of any proposals submitted by the relevant authorities in the context of the Local Transport Plan for Merseyside.

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many jobs the Government estimates will be created by the building of the new Mersey Bridge. [138006]

Mr. Jamieson: Halton borough council submitted a detailed proposal to my Department in July 2003 for the funding of a New Mersey Crossing. My Department has not made any separate estimates of the number of jobs that might be created by such a proposal.

Norwalk Viruses

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many passengers on board UK-registered cruise ships have been affected by Norwalk viruses in each year since 1997; and if he will make a statement. [137850]

Mr. Jamieson: This information is not available.

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many recommendations from planning inquiry inspectors he has (a) accepted and (b) rejected in each year since 1997. [137943]

Mr. McNulty: The Department for Transport was formed on 29 May 2002. Since its formation, the Secretary of State has accepted 44 recommendations made by public inquiry inspectors and rejected none.

Railways

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proportion of trains left (a) London's Kings Cross, (b) Euston, (c) Victoria, (d) Liverpool Street, (e) Marylebone, (f) Paddington, (g) Waterloo and (h) Charing Cross behind schedule in the first week of each month in 2003. [137318]

Mr. McNulty: This information is not collected by the Government or the Strategic Rail Authority. Punctuality is based on time of arrival at final destination stations.

Road Safety

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to make using a hand-held mobile phone while driving an endorsable offence. [137180]

Mr. Jamieson: As announced in the Department's decision letter of 24 June 2003, the Government plans to make the new offence endorsable when a suitable legislative opportunity arises.

Work-related Stress

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many cases of work-related stress have been reported in his Department in each of the last three years; how much compensation has been paid to employees; how many work days have been lost due to work-related stress, and at what cost; what procedures have been put in place to reduce work-related stress, and at what cost; and if he will make a statement. [136850]

Mr. McNulty: The Department for Transport was established following machinery of Government changes in May 2002. For the period 2002–03 there have been 16 cases of alleged work-related stress in the Department for Transport (excluding its Agencies). There have been no compensation claims for work-related stress. The Department does not have details of the days lost and associated cost for work-related absence.

The Department has a Stress at Work Policy in place, which is supported by practical guidance issued to staff on dealing with the issue. In addition, the Department has access to a counselling and support facility. The Department is committed to meeting the targets for reducing the number of days lost due to work related injuries and ill health arising from the Government's Revitalising Health and Safety initiative.

ENVIRONMENT, FOOD AND RURAL AFFAIRS

Agriculture Sector (Losses)

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will estimate the annual economic loss sustained by the agricultural sector from infestation by (a) rabbits, (b) voles, (c) rats and (d) mice. [137253]

Mr. Bradshaw: In the 1980s the Department estimated the total cost of rabbit damage to agricultural crops in Britain to be approximately £100 million per annum. The Central Science Laboratory has derived a current estimate, based on extrapolation from the 1980s, of approximately £115 million per annum with the total cost of rabbit control activity being approximately £5 million per annum.

There are no figures available for economic losses to the agricultural sector caused by voles, rats or mice, as Defra does not collate these data.

Antibiotics

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the use of antibiotics in imported meats. [137288]

Mr. Bradshaw: Residues of antibiotics, other veterinary medicines and banned substances in meats imported from third countries are controlled at two levels. First, the European Commission requires all third countries wishing to export food products to the EU to submit annual residue monitoring plans. These must demonstrate that the third country understands that exports to Member States should not contain substances banned in the EU, or authorised veterinary medicines in excess of the EC Maximum Residue Limit. These arrangements replicate the obligations placed on Member States to ensure that any residues of veterinary medicinal products in foodstuffs produced in the EU are at a level safe for consumers. The European Commission's Food and Veterinary Office also carries out missions to third countries to inspect and audit the arrangements they have in place to meet this requirement. Secondly, imports into the UK are randomly sampled at Border Inspection Posts and, to a lesser extent, at retail outlets. These samples are tested for a range of residues, including antibiotics. Any positives are considered for their consumer safety implications by toxicologists and the importing country's authorities are asked to investigate. Results of all the tests are reported on the Veterinary Medicines Directorate's website and in their quarterly newsletter.

Beef Exports

Mr. Flook: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what action the British Government are taking to ensure that the French Government pay their fine for breaching the rules allowing British beef to be exported to France. [136898]

Mr. Bradshaw: The European Commission withdrew its case in the European Court of Justice seeking a daily fine on France after France lifted its ban. Therefore, no fines were payable, but the Commission asked the Court to order that costs of the case be borne by France. The UK Government regretted the decision by the European Commission not to pursue the case for penalties against France. The UK supported the Commission throughout and believed that pressing this case would have sent a firm message to member states that no one country can avoid its obligations and responsibilities.

Bovine Tuberculosis

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what factors determine compensation payment levels for bovine TB factors in (a) England, (b) Wales, (c) Scotland and (d) Northern Ireland. [136408]

Mr. Bradshaw: The Brucellosis and Tuberculosis (England and Wales) Compensation Order 1978 (as amended) specifies that the level of compensation payable for animals slaughtered for tuberculosis in England and Wales shall be their market value. Analogous legislation in Scotland and Northern Ireland similarly provide for compensation to be made at the market value.

The legislation covering compensation in respect of bovine tuberculosis is the Tuberculosis Control Order (Northern Ireland) 1999. Article 11(1) of the legislation states that where the Department slaughters or causes an animal to be slaughtered under Article 10(1), the compensation payable by the Department for the animal shall be the market value of the animal.

Correspondence

Clare Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when she will reply to the letter of 29 September from the right hon. Member for Birmingham, Ladywood, on behalf of Ms Archer, a constituent, regarding the welfare of racing greyhounds. [136591]

Mr. Bradshaw: I responded to my right hon. Friend on 5 November 2003.

Cruelty to Animals

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs under what legislation people who are cruel to animals may be prosecuted; and if she will make a statement. [134594]

Mr. Bradshaw [holding answer 27 October 2003]: A person can be prosecuted for cruelty to animals under the Protection of Animals Act 1911 (in England and Wales, 1912 Act in Scotland) in relation to acts of cruelty against captive and domestic animals; the Wild Mammals (Protection) Act 1996 in relation to acts of cruelty against wild mammals; the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 (as amended) in relation to acts of cruelty against other wild animals; and the Protection of Badgers Act 1992 in relation to acts of cruelty against badgers.

My Department is currently reviewing the legislation relating to the welfare of captive animals with the intention of updating and consolidating it into one statute—the Animal Welfare Act. Offences of cruelty and the associated penalties are included as part of the review.

Dairy Farming

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many dairy cows there were in each of the past five years; and what the average size of dairy herds was in each year. [135746]

Mr. Bradshaw: Data for dairy cows are collected annually from the June agricultural and horticultural census as a total.

For the last five years the figures are:

Dairy cows and dairy herd size 1998 to 2002

	Dairy cows	Average dairy herd size
1998	1,642,636	83.9
1999	1,659,210	88.5
2000	1,575,320	89.8
2001	1,490,224	91.6
2002	1,462,155	87.9

Notes:
1. Dairy herd—holdings with dairy cows producing milk.
2. Dairy cows—all cows and heifers that have calved.
3. 1998 and 1999 figures refer to main holdings only. 2000 onwards—main and minor holdings.

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of the impact on dairy farmers of the (a) contractual and (b) price setting behaviour of the largest five UK supermarket chains. [135774]

Mr. Bradshaw: We have made no specific assessment of the impact on dairy farmers of the contractual and price setting behaviour of the largest five UK supermarket chains. However, a detailed investigation into the supply of groceries from supermarkets was carried out by the Competition Commission in 1999–2000. The Commission concluded that, taking all matters into consideration, the industry was broadly competitive. It did, however, identify three situations where competition was distorted and operates against the public interest. These concerned the relationship between supermarkets and their suppliers and certain pricing practices. The Commission's report, which was published in October 2000, can be found at http://www.competition-commission.org.uk/inquiries/completed/2000/index.htm

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what estimate she has made of the likely effect of reform of the Common Agricultural Policy on future prices per litre of milk. [134379]

Mr. Bradshaw: When fully implemented, the reforms agreed in June in Luxembourg will reduce the support price for butter by 10 per cent. more than the 15 per cent. reduction originally agreed for both butter and skimmed milk powder under Agenda 2000 (ie a 25 per cent. cut in the support price for butter). If farmgate prices were to fall to the same extent, the price per litre might be reduced by a further 0.95p beyond the impact of Agenda 2000. However, we share the European Commission's assessment that farmgate prices are unlikely to settle at this level: indeed, the overall package of compensation agreed reflects this. (Producers will be compensated through an increase in the level of direct payments of a further 0.74ppl over and above the compensation originally agreed in Agenda 2000.) The figures quoted above are based on an exchange rate of 70p/euro.

Our economic assessment indicates that decoupling of direct payments from production will have a beneficial effect on farm incomes; we would expect the main dairy-specific price impact to be in relation to the value of milk quota.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how she will double the rate of energy efficiency improvement in order to meet targets for 2020 set out in the Energy White Paper. [133255]

Mr. Bradshaw: The Energy White Paper makes clear that energy efficiency is expected to deliver about half the carbon savings needed to meet our carbon emission reduction goals for 2020. This will mean roughly doubling the rate of energy efficiency improvement of recent decades.

A wide range of policies and measures to encourage energy efficiency across the economy is already in place, including Climate Change Agreements, the work of the Energy Saving and Carbon Trusts to promote energy efficiency in the household and business sectors, the Energy Efficiency Commitment, UK Emissions Trading Scheme (ETS), and updated Building Regulations.

Key measures proposed in the White Paper include extension of the Energy Efficiency Commitment beyond 2005 at possibly twice its current level of activity; further improvements in the Building Regulations, faster improvements in the standards of new household appliances; and consultation on economic instruments to improve household energy efficiency, as well as other measures for the business and public sectors.

The Government intend to publish an Energy Efficiency Implementation Plan within a year of the White Paper's publication, which will provide further detail on all of these policies.

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on plans to improve energy efficiency in the UK. [133283]

Mr. Bradshaw: The Energy White Paper details the steps being taken to encourage greater energy efficiency in the UK, and sets out an ambitious strategy for energy efficiency up to 2010 and beyond. Energy efficiency is expected to deliver about half the carbon savings needed to meet our goals for 2020. This will mean roughly doubling the rate of energy efficiency improvement of recent decades.

Key measures proposed in the White Paper include extension of the Energy Efficiency Commitment beyond 2005 at possibly twice its current level of activity; improvements in building standards through further revisions to the Building Regulations; and faster improvements in the standards of new household appliances.

The Government intend to publish an Energy Efficiency Implementation Plan within a year of the White Paper's publication, which will provide further detail on all of these policies.

Farm Borrowing

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the (a) total level of borrowing of British farmers and (b) average level of borrowing per farm in the United Kingdom was in the last year for which figures are available. [137255]

Mr. Bradshaw: The information is as follows:

(a) In 2001, the liabilities of United Kingdom agriculture amounted to £9.5 billion. This figure includes: mortgages; bank loans; family loans; leasing; hire purchase; trade credit; bank overdrafts; and other liabilities.

(b) In 2001–02, the average closing value of borrowings on farm businesses in England was nearly £91,000. This estimate is based on Farm Business Survey data, which are a sample of full-time farm businesses. Farms in the sample subject to compulsory cull due to foot and mouth disease in 2001–02 have been excluded. Average borrowings for the United Kingdom are not available, but estimates for the other UK countries are available separately in the publication "Farm Incomes in the United Kingdom" (http://statistics.defra.gov.uk/esg/publications/fiuk/default.asp)

Farm Diversification

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assistance is being provided for farmers to (a) diversify and (b) generate income from new sources. [137265]

Alun Michael: The Government's Strategy for Sustainable Farming and Food clearly sets out the scope of the assistance available to help farmers diversify their sources of income and to generate income from other sources.

Defra offers grants for good diversification projects under the Rural Enterprise Scheme, which forms part of the England Rural Development Programme. The Department also provides free consultancy advice on land use planning issues to farmers who intend to pursue a diversification project through the Rural Enterprise Scheme. Defra's Rural Development Service has been running business planning seminars in a number of regions to help potential applicants work up project proposals which meet the scheme requirements.

There are many types of farm business and no single approach to income generation will be appropriate to all. The England Rural Development Programme provides support for a range of other opportunities, including organic farming, processing and marketing primary agricultural products, establishing energy crops and woodland, environmental stewardship under the agri-environment schemes, and training in the skills farmers may need to pursue new opportunities.

The Department is also considering how to improve the provision of help and information to farmers considering the diversification of their business base. The Farm Business Advice Service provides up to three days of free advice based around a business health-check and results in a business action plan. The service can help farmers decide whether or not to diversify and will direct them to other sources of support.

Farm Incomes

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what estimates she has made of overall farm income in (a) 2001 and (b) 2002. [137254]

Mr. Bradshaw: Total income from farming in the UK is estimated to have increased by 15 per cent. (14 per cent. in real terms) from £2.0 billion in 2001 to £2.4 billion in 2002.

Total income from farming per whole-time person equivalent rose by 19 per cent. (18 per cent. in real terms) from £9.3 thousand to £11.1 thousand between 2001 and 2002.

Total income from farming is income generated by production within the agriculture industry, including subsidies. It represents business profits plus remuneration for work done by owners and other unpaid workers.

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what estimate she has made of the level of income in (a) farming, (b) pig production and (c) other livestock production in the last year for which figures are available. [137271]

Mr. Bradshaw: The following table gives estimated average net farm incomes[1] for different types of farm businesses in England for 2001–02. Farms in the sample subject to compulsory cull due to Foot and Mouth disease in 2001 have been excluded. Estimated incomes for 2002–03 will be published on 27 November 2003.

Farm Medicines

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what recent representations she has received about the cost of farm medicines; and if she will make a statement. [137287]

Mr. Bradshaw: Following earlier complaints about the cost of veterinary medicines from both farmers and other animal owners, MAFF Ministers referred the issue to the Office of Fair Trading. The Competition Commission then carried out an inquiry into the distribution of prescription only veterinary medicines in the UK. The Competition Commission published their Report on 11 April 2003 which included 9 remedies addressed to the Office of Fair Trading and 11 recommendations addressed to the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs and the Royal College of Veterinary Surgeons. The Government response to the Report was issued on 9 July 2003.

I met with representatives of the BVA on 9 September 2003 to hear their views on the Competition Commission's recommendations and I have received 8 letters following the Commission's Report from veterinary surgeons and veterinary organisations about the cost of farm medicines. The Competition Commission's recommendations that the Government has accepted are being implemented in consultation with interested parties.

Farm Produce Prices

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what resources will be available to assist farming communities affected by the fall in produce prices. [137256]

Mr. Bradshaw: Overall income from farming in the UK rose 15 per cent. in 2002, with the average full-time farmer earning £11,107. This was the second year running that there was an increase in farm incomes. This upward trend looks set to continue due to a recovery in the euro so far in 2003, which has led to a rise in prices across a range of commodities and will result in higher direct sterling subsidy payments.

It is important to note that for most farm households, incomes will be enhanced by other sources of income. Furthermore, for a significant number of these households diversified income is at present higher than the income earned from farming.

Government policy is not to attempt to intervene in the market to try and artificially increase incomes, but to facilitate the right economic framework to enable farmers to succeed, compete successfully internationally and have a profitable future.

The Strategy for Sustainable Farming and Food, launched on 12 December 2002, sets out how Government, industry and consumers will work with the whole of the food chain to secure a sustainable future for English farming and food industries, as viable industries contributing to a better environment and healthy and prosperous communities.

Farm Subsidies

Mr. Weir: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how much has been paid to small farmers, broken down by region and nation of the UK, in respect of set aside in 2002. [138236]

Alun Michael: £1,462,507.39 was paid to small producers in England in respect of set-aside land under the 2002 Arable Area Payments Scheme broken down by the regions covered by the former MAFF Regional Service Centres as follows. The details for the other nations of the UK are a matter for their own devolved Assemblies.

	Value of payments (£)
Wessex	77,251.61
Anglia	357,857.83
Northern	54,357.30
North Mercia	75,573.83

Farmers (Age Profiles)

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the average age is of British farmers; and how this has changed over the last 30 years. [137283]

Mr. Bradshaw: The average age of holders in the United Kingdom has increased from 53 in 1975 (the earliest year for which figures are available) to 54 in 2000. The available data are shown in the table:

	Estimated Average age of UK holders
1975	53
1990	53
1993	53
1995	54
1997	53
2000	54

Notes:
The EC Farm Structure Survey is held across all Member States of the European Union four times each decade, to assess the agricultural situation across the Community and to monitor trends in the structure of holdings.
The holder is defined as the (natural or legal) person in whose name the holding, be a hereditary long-term leaseholder, or a usufructuary or a trustee.
The data are collected in age bands. The average age has been calculated by utilising the mid-point of each age band. A mid point of 67 is assumed for the age band "Aged 65 and over".

Farmers (Bankruptcy)

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what percentage of farmers have become bankrupt in each of the past five years. [137277]

Mr. Bradshaw: Data on farming bankruptcies for England and Wales are given in the table. The last whole year for which bankruptcy figures are available is 2002, figures for 2003 are for the first two quarters.

Between 1998 and 2002 total farming bankruptcies have been between 200 and 300; this represents less than 0.1 per cent. of farmers, partners and directors and their spouses[1] in England and Wales.

Farmers Markets

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will list the regional farm produce markets in England. [137274]

Mr. Bradshaw: This information is not held centrally but a list of farmers' markets selling regional farm produce can be found on the National Association of Farmers' Markets website http://www.farmersmarkets.net.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many farmers are working in (a) the north west, (b) Lancashire and (c) the Chorley constituency. [136919]

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the viability of the farming industry in East Sussex. [137275]

Mr. Bradshaw: The Government wants the whole country's farming industry to succeed. That is why we launched the Strategy for Sustainable Farming and Food on 12 December 2002. The Strategy builds on the work of Sir Don Curry's Policy Commission on the Future of Farming and Food and provides a clear and strategic long-term direction towards a more sustainable future. The Government will work in partnership with industry and other stakeholders to implement the strategy, providing the leadership to allow farmers to flourish by their own efforts and to become better connected to markets and consumer requirements.

We are making good progress towards delivering these objectives. Most recently through June's CAP reform agreement which represents a real shift in agricultural policy. It sets out a new course for agriculture in Europe: a sustainable future where farmers do not farm for subsidy but produce what consumers want to buy, delivering a key aim of the Strategy—reconnecting farmers to the market.

The Government has also established an Implementation Group of nine senior independent members, chaired by Sir Don Curry, to oversee delivery. Regional delivery plans have been drawn up to co-ordinate the approach within and between different areas of the country and the delivery plan for the south-east is now in the final stages of development.

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many farmers farm in East Sussex; and how many farmed there in 1993. [137251]

Mr. Bradshaw: Data for the total number farmers, partners, directors and spouses combined are collected annually from the June agricultural and horticultural census as a total.

Figures including main holdings are available only up to 1999.

Farming Industry

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what percentage of farmers she expects to leave agricultural production in the next five years. [137289]

Mr. Bradshaw: There is no estimate made of the number of farmers expected to leave the industry in the future.

Great Bustard

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what plans there are to reintroduce the great bustard in England; and if she will make a statement. [137122]

Mr. Bradshaw: On the 31 October, I approved a 10-year trial reintroduction of the Great Bustard onto Salisbury Plain. This species has been extinct from England since 1832.

The Licence permits the Great Bustard Consortium, a conservation group, to release up to 40 chicks per year onto Salisbury Plain. The first releases are not likely to be before September 2004. A further licence under the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species (CITES) will be required to permit the import of the chicks from Russia.

The Department will review the trial on an annual basis in consultation with, among others, English Nature, the Joint Nature Conservancy Committee and the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds. It will be terminated in the event of evidence of harm to the donor population in Russia, or to native biodiversity.

Growth Promoters

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what steps she is taking to restrict the use of growth promoters in (a) animals and (b) fish destined for human consumption. [137558]

Mr. Bradshaw: The authorisation and use of antimicrobials used in farming to promote growth is subject to strict controls set down by the European Union (Council Directive 70/524/EC amended). Under these rules such products cannot be authorised unless they satisfy statutory criteria designed to ensure that, at the level permitted in feedstuffs they will not adversely affect human or animal health or the environment.

Additionally they may only be used in accordance with the terms set out in an annex to the Directive, which specifies the species in which they may be used, authorised dosage rates and the withdrawal periods that must be applied before animals can be slaughtered for human consumption.

The UK Government supported the recent adoption of a new Regulation that will replace Directive 70/524/EEC from September next year. One of the major consequences of this change will be the phasing out, across the EU, of all remaining antimicrobial growth promoters by 1 January 2006, as a precautionary measure.

In the meantime the Government are continuing to work closely with the industry's Responsible Use of Medicines Alliance (RUMA) both to promote the responsible use of these products and in drawing up plans to assist industry to adjust to their use being banned from January 2006.

Japanese Knotweed

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make it her policy to amend the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 to make it a legal obligation on landowners to clear Japanese knotweed when it spreads within a site. [134227]

Mr. Bradshaw: Section 14 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 makes it an offence for any person to plant or otherwise cause to grow in the wild any plant listed in Schedule 9 of the Act, including Japanese knotweed. I have no current plans to amend the Act as the hon. Gentleman proposes.

The Rural White Paper for England "Our Countryside; Our Future" made a commitment to review the provisions of Part 1 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 with a view to rationalising the identification and protection of rare and endangered species. This Department aims to consult on this in the near future.

Livestock Industry

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will list those livestock auction markets which (a) operated in 1997 and (b) operate currently. [136193]

Mr. Bradshaw: The list of livestock auction markets operating in 1997 is not readily available.

Meat Imports

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what studies she has received of (a) policy on and (b) the cost of meat import controls from areas of high disease risk in (i) other EU member states and (ii) other countries. [136219]

Mr. Bradshaw: We received the Cabinet Office report which included information on other EU member states. A summary of which can be found in section four of the Cabinet Office Review The Organisation of the Government's Controls of Imports of Animals, Fish, Plants and their Products' on the Cabinet Office website. We have received no further studies since then.

The issue of controls on personal imports continues to be discussed regularly in meetings of the Standing Committee on the Food Chain and Animal Health in Brussels.

Mr. Weir: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of the impact of the proposed reform of the Common Agricultural Policy on the importation of meat to the UK from South America. [133227]

Mr. Bradshaw: The reform of the Common Agricultural Policy agreed in Luxembourg in June does not affect tariffs and duties on imports of meat from third countries.

Milk

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what recent discussions she has had with the Department for Education and Skills regarding (a) the provision of free school milk and (b) the extension of the provision of free school milk to all those aged 11 and under. [136034]

Mr. Bradshaw: We have not recently held any discussions with the Department for Education and Skills relating to school milk.

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what recent assessment she has made of the farmgate prices for milk in the UK; and what the farmgate prices are for milk in other EU nations. [135775]

Mr. Bradshaw: The table gives the most recent data available from Eurostat on the average farmgate price of milk of 3.7 per cent. fat content in euros per 100 kg for the EU 15.

This data show the UK farmgate prices are consistently below the EU average. The reasons for this were examined by KPMG in their report on "Prices and Profitability in the British Dairy Chain", which was commissioned by the Milk Development Council. The report concluded that the lower prices were the result of the structure of the UK dairy sector, the comparatively low value of the mix of dairy products in the UK and a low level of innovation. It also suggested a number of areas where the efficiency of the dairy supply chain could be improved.

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what proportion of the UK milk quota was leased in each of the last 10 years. [135747]

Mr. Bradshaw: The table gives details of the amounts of quota leased in each of the last 10 years, both in terms of volume and as a percentage of total UK quota.

Quota year	Amount leased (million litres)	Percentage leased
1994–95	1,230	8.69
1995–96	1,327	9.37
1996–97	1,381	9.75
1997–98	1,490	10.53
1998–99	1,552	10.96
1999–2000	1,490	10.52
2000–01	1,445	10.20
2001–02	2,116	14.93
2002–03	2,039	14.39
2003–04	[1]194	1.37

[1] The figure for 2003–04 represents the current total as at 29 October. It is significantly lower than previous years, in part because the figure is not for a complete year, but also because of the effects of the Thomsen ECJ judgment (which has meant that non-producing quota holders will no longer be able to lease out their quota indefinitely). Quota holders who are no longer in active milk production will, by 31 March 2004, have to sell their milk quota, resume production, or otherwise have their quota confiscated.

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what (a) amount and (b) proportion of the UK national milk quota was unused in each of the last 10 years. [135748]

Mr. Bradshaw: The table gives the total amounts of unused quota in the UK for the period 1993–94 to 2002–03. The entire national quota allocation (some 14.2 billion litres) was used in the years 1993–94 to 1999–2000 because the UK ended each of them slightly over the quota threshold.

Quota year	Amount unused (million litres)	Percentage unused
1993–94	0	0.00
1994–95	0	0.00
1995–96	0	0.00
1996–97	0	0.00
1997–98	0	0.00
1998–99	0	0.00
1999–2000	0	0.00
2000–01	307.4	2.17
2001–02	81.9	0.58
2002–03	119.4	0.84

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how much of the UK milk quota has been held by the Government in the national reserve in each of the past five years. [135749]

Mr. Bradshaw: The table gives the total amount of quota in the national reserve for each quota year from 1998–99 to 2003–04. The national reserve quota is divided between two 'pots'—the confiscated reserve holding quota to which the right to restoration applies, and the remainder holding quota which is currently used in the Temporary Reallocation of Quota scheme (designed to help producers who exceed their quota due to herd movement restrictions). Where quota is confiscated, the quota holder from whom the quota is taken reserves the right to apply for the restoration of the confiscated quota within a certain period if production recommences on the holding. At present, the period in which quota can be restored is six years; however, this has been reduced to two years under the new EU Council Regulation which comes into force on 1 April 2004.

Quota year	Confiscated reserve (litres)	National reserve (litres)	Total	Total as percentage of UK quota
1998–99	2,193,571	3,232,752	5,426,323	0.04
1999–2000	2,181,337	3,232,752	5,414,089	0.04
2000–01	2,180,719	4,608,324	6,789,043	0.05
2001–02	6,558,258	4,820,256	11,378,514	0.08
2002–03	10,511,463	7,255,287	17,766,750	0.13
2003–04	20,431,426	7,342,507	27,773,933	0.20

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what plans she has for the future of the milk quota system; and if she will make a statement. [135776]

Mr. Bradshaw: We have made it clear that we would like to see the milk quota system abolished. It is a bureaucratic constraint on production, it distorts the market, and it adds to the industry's costs. It was, therefore, disappointing that the Luxembourg agreement on CAP reform extended the quota system to 2014/15.

We carried out a consultation exercise on proposed amendments to our national Dairy Produce Quotas Regulations 2002 earlier this year. The proposals related to the possible introduction of two discretionary elements of the Council Regulation on milk quotas, breaking the link between quota and land and a 70 per cent. usage rule, and also some administrative changes. A summary of the responses we received is available on our website at www.defra.gov.uk/corporate/consult/responses.htm. We intend to make an announcement shortly on how we will proceed.

Organic Farming

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the level of financial support in the EU for organic farming. [137272]

Mr. Bradshaw: It is not possible to comment on the direct level of financial support available in other member states since the mix of land types and crops on which aid is based varies so greatly. The latest information we have on aid available elsewhere in the European Union however suggests that the recent increase in support payments being made available under the Organic Farming Scheme (OFS), which is part of the England Rural Development Programme (ERDP) and which encourages the expansion of organic production, is generally comparable to what is available elsewhere in the Community.

Under the OFS, farmers moving from conventional to organic farming methods receive financial help during the conversion process. From 30 May, assistance is now also being made available under the scheme for existing organic farmers who comply with certain environmental measures. The following table shows Defra's spending in the financial year 2002–03 on financial and other support for organic farming:

Category of support	Total spend 2002–03
Financial support: Under the Organic Farming Scheme (OFS)	12,567,000
Other support: Defra funding for the Organic Conversion Information Service (OCIS)	301,000
Defra funding for research for development purposes which includes a large component dealing with research on organic farming	1,809,000

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what (a) financial and (b) other support was provided to organic farming in the last year for which figures are available. [137273]

Mr. Bradshaw: The following table shows Defra's spending in the financial year 2002–03 on financial and other support for organic farming:

Category of support	Total Spend 2002-03
(a) Financial support: Under the Organic Farming Scheme (OFS), which is part of the England Rural Development Programme (ERDP).	12,567,000
(b) Other support: Organic Conversion Information Service (OCIS).	301,000
Defra funding for research for development purposes which includes a large component dealing with research on organic farming.	1,809,000

Pet Ownership

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how she communicates messages on responsible pet ownership to pet owners; and if she will encourage pet owners to insure their pets. [137062]

Mr. Bradshaw: Local and national media, including specialist magazines, leaflets, advertisements and the internet are used to communicate messages from welfare organisations and pet owners' groups on the care of pets. A decision on whether to take out pet insurance is for individual owners.

Pig Farming

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the size of the national pig herd is; what estimates she has made of the likely size of the pig herd over the next five years; and if she will make a statement. [137259]

Mr. Bradshaw: The provisional results of the June 2003 survey of agriculture show that the UK pig herd had fallen to 5,039 thousand head. This is a 38 per cent. decline in the size of the UK pig herd since June 1998 (five years ago) when the UK pig herd was 8,146 thousand head. The future size of the pig herd will depend on the profitability of the sector. Profitability will be influenced by several factors, including exchange rates, the expansion of the EU and the ability of the industry to deal with diseases that are currently affecting sow productivity.

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the viability of the British pig industry. [137284]

Mr. Bradshaw: Profitability in the pig sector typically fluctuates over time as market prices follow a cyclical path. Productivity and performance also vary considerably within the sector. Average profitability has generally been positive in 2003 largely due to weaker sterling and stronger prices. Raising the average level of performance across the industry will be key to sustaining industry profitability over the longer term. Estimates of 2003 net margins in the pig sector are found in the report 'Economic Position of the farming industry', published on the Defra Website at http://statistics.defra.gov.uk/esg/reports/repfi.pdf.

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what recent assessment her Department has made of the effectiveness of the enforcement of welfare standards for pigs. [134188]

Mr. Bradshaw: The primary responsibility for enforcing the new pig welfare regulations—The Welfare of Farmed Animals (England) (Amendment) Regulations 2003 (S.I. 2003 No. 299)—and checking that the pig welfare codes are being observed—lies with the State Veterinary Service (SVS) and local authorities.

The SVS check welfare on pig farms on both random and targeted bases and also make checks following complaints from the public. The SVS measure welfare on pig farms by assessing levels of compliance with standards set by the legislation and Code of Recommendations for the Welfare of Livestock: Pigs. In cases of non-compliance, the action to gain a resolution is taken, ranging from advice to prosecution.

The detailed computerised system which reports the results of welfare inspections by the SVS was upgraded on 1 January 2000. The data on checks on farms are analysed to enable the SVS better to target inspections. A summary of the results of checks conducted on pig farms by the SVS in 2002 was published in the report of the Chief Veterinary Officer "Animal Health 2002" (Defra Publication PB 8258, or at www.defra.gov.uk/corporate/publications/pubcat/cvo/2002/index.htm).

Sheep Exports

Mr. Prosser: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs which port the MV Caroline is using to carry live sheep exports from the UK. [135930]

Mr. Bradshaw: The MV Caroline has used the ports at Dover and Berwick upon Tweed for exports of live sheep from the UK.

Mr. Prosser: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many live sheep were exported from Berwick to continental Europe on 26 August; when and where health certification was carried out in respect of the sheep; how many of the sheep were rejected as unfit for the intended journey (a) during inspection for health certification purposes and (b) at the docks, and to where those sheep were taken; and what the address was of the final destination given on the route plan for each of the consignments. [135931]

Mr. Bradshaw: The information requested is as follows:

Sheep Exports

26 August 2003
Total animals	1,711
Where consignments were certified	England and Scotland
Animals rejected at certification	75
Animals rejected at Berwick docks	0
Destination	Netherlands

The sheep for the consignment above were certified within 24 hours prior to export. There were 75 animals rejected during health certification which remained in Great Britain. The consignment was for sheep for further fattening which were transported to holdings in Netherlands.

Mr. Prosser: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many live sheep were exported from Dover to continental Europe on 11 September; when and where health certification was carried out in respect of the sheep; how many of the sheep were rejected as unfit for the intended journey, (a) during inspection for health certification purposes and (b) at Dover docks and to where those sheep were taken; and what the address was of the final destination given on the route plan for each of the consignments. [135932]

Mr. Bradshaw: The information requested is as follows:

Sheep Exports

11 September 2003
Total animals	2,726
Where consignments were certified	England and Scotland
Animals rejected at certification	18
Animals rejected at Dover docks	0
Destination	Netherlands and France

The sheep for the consignment above were certified within 24 hours prior to export. There were 18 animals rejected during health certification which remained in Great Britain. The consignment was for sheep for further fattening which were transported to holdings in France and Netherlands.

Sustainable Development

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what recent discussions she has had with colleagues in other Departments on (a) delivery of sustainable development and (b) promoting sustainable energy sources. [136108]

Mr. Bradshaw: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs chairs the Sustainable Development Task Force, which is focused on the delivery of sustainable development and brings together Ministers and key stakeholders. At the last meeting, on 15 October, papers on progress on renewable energy and energy efficiency; water and sanitation; and sustainable consumption and production were discussed. Task Force papers and minutes can be found on the Government's sustainable development website (www.sustainable-development.gov.uk).

My right hon. Friend and the Secretary of State for the Department of Trade and Industry co-chair a new Ministerial Implementation Group that oversees delivery of the objectives set out in the Energy White Paper, including development of sustainable energy sources. The first two meetings of the Committee were held on 10 July and 9 October.

Wildlife Protection

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what recent measures she has put in place to improve protection for wildlife. [137290]

Mr. Bradshaw: The Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 (as amended) is the principal source of legislation which offers protection for native wildife. The Countryside and Rights of Way Act 2000, which came into force in January 2001, also introduced stronger enforcement powers for police officers investigating native species wildlife offences, and tougher penalties—including prison sentences—for people found guilty of committing offences under the 1981 Act.

Protection of wildlife often involves the protection of their habitat. The Countryside and Rights of Way Act 2000 introduced substantial improvements to the legislative regime protecting our nationally important designated areas for wildlife and geology, more commonly known as Sites of Special Scientific Interest (SSSIs).

The Conservation (Natural Habitats, &c.) Regulations 1994, implements the EC Habitats Directive in Great Britain, and provides further protection to various species and their habitats. The Government has consulted on a number of further improvements to the Habitat Regulations and on regulations to transpose the Habitats Directive to cover an area offshore. To date the Government has classified 242 Special Protection Areas under the EC Birds Directive and submitted 601 candidate Special Areas of Conservation to the European Commission under the EC Habitats Directive in the UK. Additionally 27 new Ramsar sites in the UK have been notified since 1999.

In addition to species protection through the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 and the Habitats Regulations 1994 this Government also puts great effort into supporting the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species of wild fauna and flora (CITES). This regulates trade in endangered or vulnerable animals and plants, and products derived from them, to ensure that the trade is sustainable. For example, at last year's Conference of Parties in Chile, the UK successfully proposed the listing of basking sharks on Appendix II of the Convention, protecting them from unsustainable and unregulated international trade.

The Department, together with HM Customs and Excise and the police, rigorously enforces the UK's commitments under CITES, campaigns vigorously to increase public awareness of the CITES controls, and takes firm action against anyone caught illegally importing endangered species in breach of the European CITES Regulations.

The Government also launched the National Wildlife Crime Intelligence Unit in 2002. It is a national focal point for gathering and analysing intelligence on serious wildlife crime, and is making an important contribution to the fight against these crimes at the national and international levels.

In addition to the range of protective measures, the Government has also put in place a number of measures to encourage efforts to deliver benefits for wildlife, such as Species and Habitat Action Plans and agri-environment schemes.

Action plans for the conservation and enhancement of 45 habitats and 391 species have been published under the UK Biodiversity Action Plan. Under section 74 (2) of the Countryside and Rights of Way Act 2000 a list of habitats and species of principal importance for the conservation of biological diversity in England was published in December 2002. The list can be viewed at http://defraweb/wildlife-countryside/cl/habitats/habitats-list.pdf.

Section 74 (3) of the Act requires the Secretary of State to take or promote the taking by others of steps to further the conservation of the habitats and species of principal importance in England. In October 2002 the Government published Working with the grain of nature—a biodiversity strategy for England. The strategy aims to ensure that consideration of biodiversity is embedded into all relevant areas of public and private policy. It is the principal means by which we will comply with the duty under section 74 (3), including through continued implementation of the habitat and species action plans. The strategy can be viewed at http://defraweb/wildlife-countryside/ewd/biostrat/index.htm

Considerable efforts are currently being made to increase the efforts we put into farmland biodiversity including encouragement to enhance wildlife populations. Significant funding is provided for agri-environment schemes promoting environmentally sustainable farming practices; more than £1 billion has been made available for the seven-year period 2000 to 2007.

As part of our aim of streamlining and simplifying existing schemes whilst also improving their effectiveness we introduced in February this year a pilot entry level scheme to reward simple management practices designed to benefit a range of biodiversity and landscape objectives. If successful the Government will roll out the scheme throughout England in 2005.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Ethiopia

7. Julie Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State, Department for International Development what plans he has to provide aid to address health problems in Ethiopia. [137789]

Hilary Benn: We support health in Ethiopia in a number of ways. Our plans for development partnership include direct budget support to assist the implementation of Ethiopia's poverty reduction strategy, This should benefit health, in accordance with Ethiopia's own priorities. Details of this are set out in our Country Assistance Plan for Ethiopia; an initial contribution of £10 million budget support was made earlier this year.

In addition we contribute to the health sector through our support to help improve the effectiveness of the national response to HIV/AIDS, and we support emergency humanitarian health interventions where urgent needs are identified.

15. Mr. Borrow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment his Department has made of the famine relief programme in Ethiopia in 2002–03. [137797]

Hilary Benn: The famine relief programme was reasonably timely, well resourced, and well implemented The possibility of famine was identified early and help was quickly sought from external donors who responded generously. The primary response was the provision of food aid to selected communities and targeted households with communities. Our monitoring indicates that the food was sent and distributed according to the plan.

In some areas high level of humanitarian need persisted in spite of the provision of food aid, reflecting the need for medical and public health interventions. DFID also provided this additional support in these areas.

Looking ahead we recognise that food aid is not always the best, or only vehicle. We are looking into alternative approaches with other donors and with the Government of Ethiopia.

Afghanistan

8. Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State, Department for International Development what steps he is taking to assist farmers in Afghanistan with the introduction of crops other than opium. [137790]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: We have doubled our alternative livelihoods budget for Afghanistan to £20 million over 3 years. This includes a £5.4 million contribution to the £70 million UK Drug Strategy for Afghanistan. We are designing a fund to research into alternative crops. It is equally important, however, to develop non-farm alternative livelihoods to ensure longer term sustainability. DFID projects in Badakshan and Eastern Hazarajat are developing sustainable economic alternatives and social incentives to enable farmers to stop growing poppy.

9. Paul Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State, Department for International Development what assessment he has made of the value of UK development aid to Afghanistan in the last two years. [137791]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: The UK has provided £150 million in development assistance over the last two years, Afghanistan has make tremendous progress although great challenges remain and it will take time to reduce poverty. We have supported the establishment of the new government in Afghanistan with financial assistance and technical advice. We have also supported UN efforts to re-open schools and provide health care.

UN Special Session

10. Mr. Colman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if he will make a statement on the outcome of the UN General Assembly Special Session on financing for development. [137792]

Hilary Benn: The United Nations High Level Dialogue on Financing for Development confirmed the continuing engagement of the international community in the process begun at Monterrey in 2002. There was consensus on the need to get the Doha Development Agenda back on track; provide more and better aid; improve the Highly Indebted Poor Countries (HIPC) initiative; and overcome obstacles to achievement of the Millennium Development Goals such as HIV/AIDS and conflict, I confirmed UK commitment to multilateralism, especially on trade; promoted our proposals for an International Finance Facility; and called for a better managed international and UN response to conflict and humanitarian crises.

Kenya

11. Mr. Grogan: To ask the Secretary of State, Department for International Development if he will make a statement on development assistance for Kenya. [137793]

Hilary Benn: The aim of British development assistance to Kenya is to reduce poverty. Direct assistance in 2002–03 totalled over £42 million, including an allocation of £10 million to respond to the new Government's drive towards universal free primary education. We also support HIV/AIDS prevention and care, reproductive health care, malaria prevention, private sector development, public sector reform and initiatives to promote civic education and improved access to justice for poor people. In addition Britain contributes substantially through multilateral agencies, including over £4 million towards EC budget support for Kenya provided in June 2003.

Drinking Water

12. Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if he will make a statement on the steps being taken by the Government towards meeting target 10 of the UN Millennium Development Goals on the supply of potable water. [137794]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: The Government are committed to achieving the Millennium Development Goal targets on water and sanitation. These include halving, by 2015, the proportion of people without sustainable access to safe drinking water and the adoption of national policies and strategies for integrated water resources management in all developing countries by 2005. In 1999–2001 the UK was the fourth largest donor in the water sector, behind Japan, the United States and Germany.

Our strategy is described in 'Addressing the Water Crisis—Healthier and More Productive Lives for Poor People', which was launched in March 2001. It stresses the importance of the improved management of water resources to benefit the lives of the world's poor. A copy has been deposited in the Library. Our development assistance is provided in response to our partner countries' needs as driven by their Poverty Reduction Strategy Papers (PRSPs). We are working actively with their governments to support production of PRSPs and to ensure that water and sanitation issues are adequately represented.

Iraq

13. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if he will make a statement on his Department's aid programme in Iraq, with particular reference to the protection and safety of aid workers. [137795]

Hilary Benn: DFID has committed £209 million towards humanitarian and reconstruction assistance in Iraq. About £151 million of this funding is being channelled through the United Nations, the Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement and non-governmental organisations. At the Madrid Donors' Conference on Iraq, on 23 to 24 October, the Government announced that the UK would commit a further £296 million towards reconstruction in Iraq up to March 2006, including £29 million as our share of planned European Community spending.

In the current security circumstances in Iraq, the safety of aid workers is of particular concern. In view of recent attacks on their offices, it is fully understandable that the International Committee of the Red Cross and the United Nations should review their security procedures and ways of working, even if that means temporarily reducing their presence in the country. DFID has offered £3 million towards UN security measures in response to an appeal following the bombing of the UN Headquarters in Baghdad in August. DFID has also offered additional finance, if needed, for increased security provisions for those NGOs that we are supporting in Iraq. DFID, and other Government Departments, have put in place special security provisions for their own staff working in Iraq.

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development whether he estimates there is adequate clean water for the rations of infant formula being delivered in Iraq; and what measures are being taken to encourage breast feeding. [136986]

Hilary Benn: 50 per cent. of Iraqis now have access to piped water and the Ministry of Public Works plan to increase this to 70 per cent. by December 2004. In addition, water tankering by UNICEF provides 14.6 million litres of water to deprived areas of Baghdad, Basra, Mosul, and Kirkuk, benefiting over 825,000 people.

UNICEF promotes breast feeding among its activities for child development, and assists malnourished children in therapeutic feeding centres. Despite the security situation, they are still implementing a number of programmes including health education and breastfeeding promotion.

Palestine

14. Mr. Walter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of UK aid to the occupied Palestinian territories. [137796]

Hilary Benn: Working closely with other donors, and maintaining flexibility, are key ways in which we seek to maintain effectiveness in the current volatile political, social and economic environment. Lately the international development effort has moved towards shorter-term support for the immediate needs of the Palestinian people. According to World Bank analysis, direct budget support has proved to be the most effective aid instrument in the current circumstances, allowing the Palestinian Authority to maintain basic service delivery, while providing significant macro-economic benefits. The welfare impact of this support has been significant: as poverty and unemployment levels have risen, the extended coverage of public sector salaries has provided an essential safety net for many families and communities. Our support for service delivery through UNRWA and NGOs has also been important in mitigating the effects of the worsening humanitarian situation.

There are, however, limits to what development assistance can achieve. Poverty reduction can only be addressed significantly in the context of a just peace settlement and the creation of a viable Palestinian state, What is most needed to reduce poverty is relaxation of Israeli curfews, closures and checkpoints, and eventual withdrawal, so the economy can grow again.

Aceh

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment his Department has made of the impact the imposition of martial law in Aceh on 15 May has had on the work of aid workers; what representations he has made to the head of the Aceh Martial Law Administration, and when; and if he will make a statement. [137518]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: The imposition of martial law in Aceh on 15 May, and the subsequent increased restrictions on access for non-Indonesians, have severely impacted on the ability of aid workers to operate in Aceh. No international NGOs are currently working in Aceh, and the UN has only a very limited presence in the province. However most aid organisations have found ways of working through local partners.

The UK, through the Tokyo Group of donors in Jakarta (the United States, Japan, European Union and the World Bank), are encouraging a return to negotiations and a peaceful solution to the conflict in Aceh. The recent Tokyo Group statement calls for improved access for international agencies, NGOs and for the impact on the people of Aceh to be minimized. In addition to this, the British Ambassador to Indonesia wrote to the Indonesian Government in August 2003 requesting that NGOs be granted permission to return to Aceh, and my right hon. Friend the Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, stressed to President Megawati in June 2003 that Indonesian military action in Aceh should be proportionate and in accordance with international standards on human rights. We have not approached the head of the Aceh Martial Law Administration as our concerns about the situation in Aceh are raised through the Indonesian Central Government.

Baku-Ceyhan Pipeline

Mr. Best: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the Government's policy is on the proposed oil pipeline from Baku to Ceyhan. [137520]

Hilary Benn: I refer my hon. Friend to the written statement made on 5 November, which sets out DFID's position on funding by the International Finance Corporation (IFC) of the World Bank Group, for the Baku-Tbilisi-Ceyhan (BTC) pipeline.

On 11 November the Executive Board of the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development (EBRD) also approved non-concessional funding for the pipeline. DFID took the same position on funding for the BTC project by EBRD as we did by IFC.

Bechtel

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if he will list the contracts for consultancy and other work carried out by Bechtel for agencies responsible to his Department in each year since 1997, stating in each case (a) the nature of the work, (b) the value of the contract and (c) the duration of the contract; and if he will make a statement. [138062]

Hilary Benn: There have been no contracts issued by DFID.

Control Risk Group

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if he will make a statement on the purpose of the contract awarded to Control Risk Group for an armed protection team. [137741]

Hilary Benn: The contract to Control Risks Group is to provide security support services for DFID staff working in Iraq.

Croatia

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what the results were of the £315,756 contract awarded to P-E International PCL to offer support to Ministry of European integration in Croatia; and if he will make a statement on its priority within his Department's budget. [137743]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: It is too early to assess the results of the £315,756 contract awarded to PE International PCL. However, the Croatian Government has indicated the importance it attaches to this support. The project commenced in February 2003 and is due to be completed in February 2004. DFID's support is assisting the Croatian Ministry of European Integration to plan and manage the process of European Integration. The assistance is a key component of DFID's bilateral programme to Croatia, supporting national and European Union objectives. Public administration reform will continue to be a priority for the DFID's work in Croatia.

Debt Management

Mr. Best: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development whether the UK is supporting debt management capacity-building programmes; and whether this support is available to all heavily indebted poor countries. [137637]

Hilary Benn: Since 1998, the UK has been co-financing the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries (HIPC) Capacity Building Programme (CBP) with four other donors; two further donors have since joined the consortium. The Programme aims to build the capacity of HIPC countries to analyse and manage their debt position, and to negotiate debt relief with creditors and the International Financial Institutions. The CBP works with four regional organisations—three based in Africa and one in Latin America. The Programme is now in its third phase. One of the main objectives of this phase is to turn these organisations into centres of excellence, so that they are able to provide lasting high quality training, advisory and advocacy support to their HIPC member states in key issues of debt management. DFID has committed over £4 million to the Project and, through its bilateral programmes, has also funded individual activities under the CBP, such as Debt Advisers for Guyana and Rwanda and strategy workshops in Ghana, Tanzania and Uganda. To date, 36 out of a total of 42 HIPC countries have benefited from the Programme.

Ghana

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development when he expects Ghana to receive benefit from being a qualifier for highly indebted poor country debt relief; and if he will make a statement. [137688]

Hilary Benn: Ghana qualified for relief under the enhanced Heavily Indebted Poor Countries (HIPC) Initiative in February 2002, when it started to receive debt relief. Under the Initiative, countries qualify for relief in two stages. The first stage is Decision Point, when they start to receive interim relief on their "flow" of payments. During this interim period, countries such as Ghana are not required to service their debt and cease to make debt service payments. The second stage, Completion Point, is reached when HIPC governments have demonstrated progress in tackling poverty. At this final stage they receive an irrevocable reduction in their stock of debt. HIPC countries spend the savings from debt relief on their poverty reduction programmes, thereby increasing resources for social expenditure. Ghana is expected to reach its Completion Point in mid 2004, provided its poverty reduction strategy is implemented satisfactorily.

Global Fund

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what the total funding contributed in 2003 by the United Kingdom to the Global Fund to Fight AIDS, TB and Malaria was; and what plans there are to increase the contribution for 2004. [137658]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: Since 1997, the Department for International Development has stepped up its spending on HIV/AIDS from £38 million in 1997–98 to more than £270 million in 2002–03. According to UNAIDS, UK is currently the second largest bilateral donor active in the field of HIV/AIDS.

Since May 1997 DFID has committed over £1.5 billion to support the development of health systems in partner countries. This will help to build capacity to deliver medicines to the poor and assist them in making effective choices about the selection of drugs.

The UK has a long-term commitment to the Global Fund to Fight HIV/AIDS, TB and Malaria and recognises that in order to be effective it needs predictable and sustainable financing. The UK recently extended its pledge by a further two years to 2008 bringing our total contribution to US$280 million.

The pattern of our disbursements has been agreed with the Global Fund Secretariat—for the financial year 2003–04 the UK has provided £25 million, and for the financial year 2004–05 we will provide £30 million.

UK funding will be subject to the GFATM reflecting a clear poverty focus, achieving a better financing system, integrating the Fund's activities more effectively with national programmes and meeting agreed benchmarks to monitor its effectiveness. I am pleased to report that good progress was made at the recent sixth board meeting in Thailand on many of these issues.

Land Mines

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if he will make a statement on aid to fund land mine clearance. [137116]

Hilary Benn: DFID is a strong supporter of global humanitarian demining. Since 1997 the Department has provided in excess of £70 million for Global Demining. The following table provides a breakdown.

Figures for Global Demining 1997–2003

£ million

HIV/AIDS Drug Programme

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how much the Department is contributing to the World Health Organisation's AIDS/HIV drug procurement programme; and if he will make a statement. [135992]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: The WHO's HIV/AIDS drug procurement programme is an initiative that we welcome and look forward to its launch on 1 December. I will write to my hon. Friend for Leeds, West with more details once the programme has been launched.

Democratic Republic of Congo

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development, how many (a) UN Force and (b) UN Mission in the Democratic Republic of Congo representatives there are in the Democratic Republic of Congo; what plans there are to increase this number; what plans there are to send British troops; and if he will make a statement. [136859]

Mr. Rammell: I have been asked to reply.

Currently there are 8,045 military personnel and 61 civilian police personnel in the UN Mission in the Democratic Republic of Congo (MONUC). There are also 606 international civilian staff and 704 local civilian personnel. UN Security Council Resolution 1493 of 28 July 2003 increased the authorised maximum troop level to 10,800 and there are plans to increase the actual number of military personnel to 10,300 by mid-November 2003. At present, there are six UK personnel in MONUC in key HQ positions.

Market Research

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if he will list each item of market and opinion research commissioned since May 1997 by (a) his Department and (b) agencies and non-departmental public bodies for which his Department is responsible; what the purpose of each item was; and whether the results were published. [137017]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: In 1998, the Department for International Development (DFID) undertook baseline qualitative and quantitative research among the UK public and opinion leaders. The purpose was (1) to explore existing attitudes to and perceptions of Britain's overseas development programme; (2) to understand how language and communications relating to international development work might be improved; (3) to pre-test new concepts and identify approaches that achieve real domestic resonance. The results of the research are published on the Department's website.

DFID commissions two annual public opinion polls. Both polls monitor public attitudes to and support for international development. One (undertaken annually since 1999) monitors the opinion of the UK adult population and the results are used to inform, and monitor the impact of, the development awareness work of the Department. The second (undertaken annually since 2000) monitors the opinion of schoolchildren and the results are used to inform, and monitor the impact of, the development education work of the Department. The results of both polls are published on the Department's website.

This year, DFID commissioned focus group research. The purpose is to research how we can increase levels of understanding of, and support for, international development within the UK. When the results are available, they will be published on the Department's website.

Since May 1997, no DFID agencies or non-departmental public bodies have commissioned market or opinion research.

Meteoric Tactical Solutions

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what the purpose was of the contract awarded to Meteoric Tactical Solutions (PTY) Ltd. for close protection. [137742]

Hilary Benn: The contract awarded to Meteoric Tactical Solutions (PTY) Ltd. is to provide security support services for DFID staff working in Iraq.

Millennium Development Goal

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment his Department has made of progress towards the Millennium Development Goal to halve the proportion of people in the world without safe access to water and sanitation by 2015; and what additional funds will be made available to water and sanitation projects to reach the Millennium Development Goal. [137175]

Hilary Benn: The Global Water Supply and Sanitation Assessment 2000, produced by the World Health Organisation (WHO)/United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF)) Joint Monitoring Programme, provides baseline figures on progress towards the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs). Among the main findings are:

(a) The percentage of people served with some form of improved water supply rose from 79 per cent. in 1990 to 82 per cent. in 2000. Over the same period the proportion of the world's population with access to sanitation facilities increased from 55 per cent. to 60 per cent.;

(b) At the beginning of 2000 one-sixth (1.1 billion people) of the world's population was without access to improved water supply and two fifths (2.4 billion people) lacked access to improved sanitation The majority of these people lived in Asia and Africa;

(c) Although an enormous number of people gained access to services between 1990 and 2000, with approximately 816 million additional people gaining access to water supplies and 747 million people gaining access to sanitation facilities, the percentage increases appear modest because of global population growth during that time;

(d) The water supply and sanitation sector will face enormous challenges over the coming decades. The assessment estimates that, to achieve the 2015 target in Africa, Asia and Latin America and the Caribbean alone, an additional 2.2 billion people will need access to sanitation and 1.5 billion will need access to water supply by that date.

The Joint Monitoring Programme is continuing. DFID has provided substantial financial support and technical assistance to this initiative from the outset. The Government remains firmly committed to the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs). The MDG targets for water and sanitation are central to DFID's approach to poverty reduction and sustainable development and they remain important priorities for DFID.

We are working actively with partner country governments to support production of their own agendas for development, known as Poverty Reduction Strategy Papers, and toensure that water and sanitation are adequately represented in them.

Southern African States

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what recent assessment he has made of the policies of southern African states towards minority groups. [137691]

Hilary Benn: The only recent assessment my Department has made on this subject is a study commissioned in 2002 on options for the international community to respond to the situation of the San in Botswana. This has been placed in the Library of the House.

Uganda

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if he will make a statement on aid to Uganda for HIV projects. [137117]

Hilary Benn: We are addressing HIV/AIDS in Uganda through an HIV Umbrella Programme, which has an allocation of £6.2 million for 2002–2005. Our Programme's purpose is to improve the coordination and monitoring of the Uganda's Strategic HIV/AIDS Framework. This Framework is an important component of Uganda's overall Poverty Eradication Action Plan (PEAP), and aims to: monitor HIV prevalence; provide guidance for activities aimed at preventing the spread of HIV/AIDS and mitigating its effects; and help mobilise resources to implement national AIDS programmes. UK assistance also supports the Government of Uganda's improving its own capacity to take effective action against HIV/AIDS, plus service delivery and research on HIV/AIDS by civil society organisations.

Women's Poverty

Mr. Best: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what measures his Department is taking to address women's poverty. [137636]

Hilary Benn: The majority of the world's poor are women. Women's empowerment and equality are central preconditions for sustainable poverty elimination.

The elimination of women's poverty, and the pursuit of gender equality in all areas of development, lie at the heart of DFID's work. The focus is on supporting changes in policy, laws and attitudes, while maintaining links with work at the grassroots. This combines specific activities aimed at empowering women with a commitment to put concerns about gender equality into the mainstream of development programmes. DFID supports action through three channels; support to government, civil society and the private sector; collaboration and coordination with international development organisations such as the United Nations; and through building capacity and information through research and knowledge development.

More details about DFID's strategy and programmes are set out in the DFID publication 'Poverty Elimination and the Empowerment of Women'. I shall send a copy to my hon. Friend.

Zimbabwe

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what recent reports he has received from departmental officials on feeding schemes in Zimbabwe; and if he will publish them. [137102]

Hilary Benn: DFID officials provide frequent reports on the humanitarian situation in Zimbabwe. As we move into the period of more serious food shortages this material will be used to update Parliament and the public, including through the DFID website. Public reporting of DFID-funded food aid programmes in Zimbabwe is already extensive. The UN World Food Programme (WFP) reports quarterly on the Emergency Operation. The reports are distributed to all interested parties and are published on the WFP website. The latest WFP quarterly report (July to September) has just been released. DFID's recent pledge of £5 million to WFP will enable them to increase the coverage of their monitoring and also the frequency of their reports to a monthly basis.

The UN website for Humanitarian Information (Reliefweb) provides published reports on NGO and non-food operations in addition to WFP reports. Other relevant information can be found on the website of the Southern African Humanitarian Information Management System (SAHIMS).

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assistance his Department is giving to those countries bordering Zimbabwe to help them deal with people who are fleeing across the border from Zimbabwe; and if he will make a statement. [137689]

Hilary Benn: To date the Governments of Botswana, Mozambique, South Africa and Zambia have not sought specific assistance from the UK to cope with this issue, additional to our ongoing programmes directed to poverty reduction. We are keeping in touch with relevant authorities and non-government organisations in the region about migration issues. We stand ready to respond to requests for help if necessary.

MINISTER FOR WOMEN

Equality

Vera Baird: To ask the Minister for Women what duty the new Equality and Human Rights Commission will have to promote equality in all areas. [137064]

Ms Hewitt: Promoting equality and diversity will be fundamental to the role of the Commission for Equality and Human Rights. As I said in my written statement to the House of 30 October, I shall be establishing a task force with members representing the interests concerned to provide advice on key issues for the CEHR in preparation for a White Paper setting out proposals for the CEHR in the spring. These will include proposals for the CEHR's statutory powers and duties.

Vera Baird: To ask the Minister for Women what plans she has to introduce a public sector duty to promote gender equality. [137063]

Ms Hewitt: The Government are taking forward a significant legislative agenda on equality matters, and has committed itself to introduce a duty on public bodies to promote equality of opportunity for women and men generally when parliamentary time allows.

Women's Appointments

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Minister for Women what steps she is taking to increase the number of women in senior positions which require professional qualifications. [134735]

Ms Hewitt: We are working in partnership with organisations to increase the number of women in senior positions across the labour market, including women with professional qualifications.

Earlier this year, I asked Derek Higgs to look into the role and effectiveness of non-executive directors and have welcomed his proposals on how to widen the pool from which non-executive directors are drawn, which could bring more women into the boardroom.

Following his findings I then asked Laura Tyson from the London Business School to look specifically at how we might encourage greater diversity of directors on boards. Her recommendations include more rigorous and transparent selection processes; training for board members and measurement of board diversity.

We recognise that we must work in partnership with business to achieve change. That is why I am meeting with some of the Chairs and Chief Executives of the FTSE 100 to encourage greater diversity on their boards and to ask them to consider what other steps they might take.

In April this year the Government published A Strategy for Women in Science, Engineering and Technology to improve the position of women in SET in employment, education and policy-making in the United Kingdom. The Strategy is our response to the "SET FAIR report" from Baroness Greenfield which was published in November 2002.

Our approach builds on mainstream policies with a series of action points in employment, education, and science and it draws support from recent measures to secure gender equality. It is aimed at academia, industry and public service equally. It sets out new initiatives which we believe will contribute significantly to improving the participation of women in SET. (http://www2.set4women.gov.uk/set4women/research/the_greenfield_response.htm)

We want women to achieve their full potential whatever career they choose and we are committed to encouraging more women into politics, local government and public appointments. Within the Civil Service women comprise just over 26 per cent. at the senior civil servant level.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Communication Technologies (Disabled Access)

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment she has made of the impact of the Communications Act 2003 on access by disabled people to modern communication technologies. [137911]

Mr. Timms: The Communications Act only received Royal Assent on 17 July 2003. It is too early to assess the impact. The Communications Act contains specific measures to improve access to modern communications technologies for disabled users. The Universal Service Order made under the Communications Act sets out specific obligations on access to communications services for disabled users. Ofcom has responsibility to ensure compliance with these obligations. Section 10 of the Communications Act creates a new duty on Ofcom to encourage the availability of easily usable apparatus for all consumers, including disabled users, and sections 303 to 308 deal with the provision of television services for the deaf or visually impaired. Ofcom will report on the progress it has made in these areas as part of its annual report.

Industrial Action

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps her Department is taking to limit the (a) number and (b) impact of unofficial strikes in the United Kingdom. [137421]

Mr. Sutcliffe: The Government encourage parties to resolve their industrial disputes through negotiation, and the Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service stands ready to assist where the parties request their involvement. While the number of stoppages in the last year—official and unofficial combined—is a record low, the Government, where necessary, make contingency plans to ensure key services are delivered.

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the unofficial strike action among Royal Mail staff in the south of England. [137425]

Mr. Timms: No one will benefit from industrial action by postal workers in London. It will disrupt services to consumers and businesses that rely on Royal Mail's services.

Resolution of disputes is a matter for the management of Royal Mail and the Communication Workers' Union.

The Government have continued to encourage them to sit down together and reach a settlement. The Government welcome the talks that are taking place at ACAS to resolve the outstanding issues.

Market Research

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will list each item of market and opinion research commissioned since May 1997 by (a) her Department and (b) agencies and non-departmental public bodies for which her Department is responsible; what the purpose of each item was; and whether the results were published. [132013]

Ms Hewitt: The Department does not centrally collect the information sought at the required level of detail and to provide it would entail disproportionate cost.

Statistical surveys to businesses and local authorities conducted by the Department and its agencies are monitored centrally to facilitate control of compliance costs to business and departmental expenditure on survey activity. It is not possible, however, to determine with any degree of accuracy which surveys fall into the categories of market and opinion research, or which contain an element of these. The answer would incur disproportionate cost because of the need to ask all Directorates in DTI, plus agencies and associated non-departmental public bodies, to attempt to provide details of each survey and piece of research commissioned since 1997.

Fireworks

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the Government's estimate is of the number of Chinese bomb fireworks imported into the United Kingdom in each of the last four years. [137975]

Mr. Sutcliffe: The information requested is not available because the system of classification used to record trade does not separately identify Chinese bomb fireworks.

Small Businesses (Start-ups)

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the start-up rate for small businesses in (a) Haltemprice and Howden constituency, (b) the East Riding of Yorkshire, (c) Hull, (d) Humberside and (e) the UK was in each year since 1997. [136714]

Nigel Griffiths: The numbers of businesses that registered and de-registered for VAT in each calendar year since 1997, and the number of businesses that were registered at the start of each of these years (stocks), in the United Kingdom, are available at: www.sbs.gov.uk/statistics/vatstats.php

The latest year for which VAT registration data are available is 2002. Data are not available for parliamentary constituencies.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many businesses in Pendle (a) registered and (b) de-registered for VAT in each year since 1997. [138101]

Nigel Griffiths: The latest year for which VAT registration and de-registration data are available is 2002.

The numbers of businesses that registered and de-registered for VAT in Pendle, Lancashire county, the North West Government Office Region (GOR) and the United Kingdom in the calendar years 1997–2002 are as follows:

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Powerboats (Lake Windermere)

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will make available alternative facilities for powerboat users following the Lake District National Parks Authority decision to introduce a 10 mph speed limit on Lake Windermere. [137848]

Mr. Caborn: During the inquiry into the implementation of the Byelaws at Lake Windermere, Sport England along with the British Water Ski Federation considered the issue of the displacement of motorised watersports from the Lake. Sport England and the British Water Ski Federation continue to work together with those affected by the Byelaws to negotiate access to suitable areas of water for the continuation of these sports.

The Government would not seek to impose specific alternative venues on those affected by the Navigation Byelaws on Lake Windermere. We believe it is for individuals to find convenient sites that will enable them to pursue water skiing and the other motorised water sports that will be affected by the Byelaws.

Correspondence

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when she will reply to the letter of 11 April from the hon. Member for Birmingham, Selly Oak (Minister's reference 0301088). [134639]

Tessa Jowell: I wrote to my hon. Friend on 10 November 2003. I apologise for the delay in replying.

Investigatory Powers

Brian White: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what statutory investigatory powers the Department has; which ones will be superseded by use of the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act 2000; and what plans she has for removing these legacy powers. [136129]

Mr. Caborn: Under section 10(8) of the Football Spectators Act 1989 it is a condition of every 'Licence to Admit Spectators' that the Football Licensing Authority (FLA) be entitled (a) to enter at any reasonable time any premises at which a designated match is being played or is to be played (b) make such inspection of the ground and such inquiries relating to them as necessary and (c) to examine any records relating to the operation of the national football membership scheme on the premises, and take copies of such records. Under section 13 (6) of the Act, any inspector appointed by the Licensing Authority may (a) enter at any reasonable time any premises at which a designated football matches are played (b) make an inspection of the premises and such inquiries relating to the ground as necessary and (c) to examine the safety certificate and any records kept under the Sports Ground Safety Act 1975, or part of that Act, and take copies of such records.

Section 43 of the Gaming Act 1968 gives the Inspectors of the Gaming Board of Great Britain the rights to entry to licensed premises and other related rights. In relation to Society Lotteries, Section 12 of Schedule 1A (b) (c) and (d) allows the Gaming Board to inspect and take copies of documents and computer records, information kept "otherwise than in writing" and any aspect of the management of these lotteries. This also applies to powers to deal with the registration of lottery managers under Schedule 2a of the Act.

None of these existing powers will be superseded by use of the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act 2000 and consequently there are no plans to amend or repeal any of these powers.

Museums (London)

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will list the museums in London to which her Department contributes, that charge for entry; and in each case what level of the entry charge is for adults. [137835]

Estelle Morris: The independent Design Museum, which receives a contribution from my Department towards educational programmes, charges £6.00 for adult admission. The Wellington Museum at Apsley House, to which grant-in-aid is contributed currently through the Victoria & Albert Museum, charges £4.50 for adult admission. In addition, the Cabinet War Rooms and HMS Belfast, which are entirely self-supporting branches of the Imperial War Museum, charge adults admission at £6.00 and £7.00 respectively. In all cases, concessionary rates and reduced rates for adult groups are available.

Voluntary Youth Football Teams

Mrs. Brooke: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport whether all those assisting with voluntary youth football teams require Criminal Record Bureau checks; and what representations she has received on this issue. [138239]

Mr. Caborn: All those who assist with voluntary youth football teams and have unsupervised access to children are checked and screened against the Criminal Records Bureau in the interest of child protection.

As part of one of the most comprehensive child protection processes in sport, 53,000 people, so far, have completed the Football Association's course in Child Protection and Best Practice. I am not aware of any representations to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on this issue.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) Royal Navy, (b) Royal Marine, (c) Army and (d) RAF personnel are stationed in Wales, broken down by location; and if he will make a statement. [137311]

Mr. Caplin: The number of UK Regular Forces Personnel located in Wales, by local authority area as at 1 July 2002 were as follows.

Armed Forces Strength

Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the percentage shortfall of personnel is in each service of the armed forces. [137487]

Mr. Ingram: The percentage deficit of Full Time Trained personnel against the Trained Requirement for each Service at 1 September 2003 are as follows:

Service	Deficit (percentage)
All services	3.0
Naval services	2.8
Army	3.6
Royal Air Force	1.9

These figures include trained United Kingdom Regular Forces, Full Time Reserve Service personnel and trained Gurkhas. They exclude trained personnel in the Royal Irish Regiment (Home Service, full and part time), Gibraltar Permanent Cadre and mobilised reservists.

Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many vacancies there are for each of the armed forces; and how many there were on the corresponding date for each of the last six years for which figures are available. [137488]

Mr. Ingram: The information is in the table:

Civil Contingency Reaction Forces

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many reservists have signed up for the Civil Contingency Reaction Forces; what percentage of the (a) operational requirement and (b) Government target this represents; and if he will make a statement. [137673]

Mr. Ingram: To date, some 5,000 volunteers have signed up to serve in a Civil Contingency Reaction Force (CCRF). This figure represents around 70 per cent. of the Government's target. CCRFs remain on target to achieve operational capability by the end of this year.

Cluster Munitions

Norman Lamb: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of cluster munitions delivered by British forces during the conflict in Iraq were manufactured by Israeli Military Industries. [135858]

Mr. Ingram: Two types of cluster munitions were used by British Forces during the Iraq conflict; RBL 755 cluster bomb and Shell 155mm Extended Range

Bomblet Shell (ERBS). Only ERBS is manufactured by Israel Manufacturing Industries. Final details of ERBS usage during the Iraq conflict are not yet available.

Fylingdales

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make it his policy to order a full environmental impact study prior to the Fylingdales base accepting United States missile defence technology; and if he will make a statement; [137899]

(2) what research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated on the effects of the base at Fylingdales on the environment of the local area; and if he will make a statement. [137916]

Mr. Ingram: It is already the Ministry of Defence policy to carry out environmental impact assessments of all new projects and training activities. To this end, the MOD commissioned some time ago from independent consultants an Environmental and Land Use Report on the planned upgrade of the RAF Fylingdales radar for missile defence purposes. This report was passed to the local planning authorities in June 2003 and can be accessed on the MOD website. It confirms our view that nothing in the package of work involves an environmental impact or change of use, and that radar emissions are well within health guidelines. Nevertheless, in order to reassure the public, monitoring of the radar emissions will continue and the data made available publicly. Separately, an epidemiological study is being undertaken by the local NHS Primary Care Trust to determine if there is any evidence of increased rates of disease in the area which might warrant further investigation.

Procurement Budget (Wales)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the total expenditure was on procurement by each of the services in the last year for which figures are available; and how much of the procurement budget for each was spent in Wales. [137308]

Mr. Ingram: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by the then Under-Secretary of State on 17 December 2002, Official Report, column 715W, to the hon. Member for Moray (Angus Robertson). The latest figures for spend on procurement in terms of Service or environment remain those for 1998–99, and were published by the Defence Analytical Services Agency in the United Kingdom "Defence Statistics" for 2000 available in the Library of the House.

The Ministry of Defence systems changed following the introduction of Smart Acquisition and the move from cash accounting to resource accounting and budgeting. Consideration moved from recording and analysing inputs to the armed forces to providing capability.

The latest figures regarding expenditure by the Defence Procurement Agency, broken down by capability, are expected to be published later this month and copies will be placed in the Library of the House. The figures are not broken down into spend in regional areas.

Territorial Army

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the total strength is of the Territorial Army; how many members of the Territorial Army (a) collected their bounty and (b) voluntarily left the service in each month since April; and if he will make a statement. [136597]

Mr. Caplin: The total strength of the Territorial Army as at September 2003 is 36,900. This includes 4,160 mobilised reservists. Information on those who have voluntarily left since April 2003 is shown in the table:

	Voluntarily left the TA
April	100
May	90
June	120
July	80
August	80
September	80

Note:
Data have been rounded to the nearest 10.

Information on the number of TA personnel who have collected their bounty is not yet available. I will write to the hon. Member once the data has been collated and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

HEALTH

Accident and Emergency Services

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many and what proportion of patients have been treated within the four-hour accident and emergency waiting time target in each of the past 12 months (a) in England and (b) broken down by strategic health authority. [135418]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Information on the total time patients spend in accident and emergency departments from arrival to admission, transfer or discharge is collected each quarter from national health service trusts and is routinely published on the Department's website at: http://www.doh.gov.uk/hospitalactivity/ Copies of the information for England and for each NHS trust and strategic health authority are available in the Library.

Age-related Macular Degeneration

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to implement National Institute for Clinical Excellence guidance on photodynamic therapy for age-related macular degeneration. [136158]

Ms Rosie Winterton [holding answer 3 November 2003]: Implementation of the National Institute for Clinical Excellence (NICE) guidance has already begun. Patients are already receiving photodynamic therapy (PDT) treatment on the national health service and we expect the implementation of the NICE guidance to have been fully implemented by the middle of 2004. We will be working with the NHS to facilitate the implementation to give patients increased access to PDT during this time.

It was the Department's assessment, informed by advice from NICE, that the NHS would be unable to implement the guidance in full within the usual three-month period. We have previously varied the direction on five occasions when it was required to implement effectively the guidance to provide the service to patients.

The extension was given because of concerns about the lack of capacity, for example, in reading centres, to implement the recommendations. Within the nine months allowed for full implementation, commissioners are expected to expand the service in a planned way to ensure there is sufficient capacity which is appropriately located to meet patient need, a fully trained workforce and access to expert diagnostic services. This will include the creation of new, and the expansion of existing, PDT centres and expert reading centres.

The guidance issued to primary care trusts (PCTs) on PDT asks that PCTs should make funds available within nine months. We expect implementation to have been fully achieved within this timeframe, with all eligible patients having access to available treatment. PCTs may complete implementation earlier should their service planning enable them to do so.

Ambulance Services

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much was spent on consultancy fees by Mersey Regional Ambulance NHS Trust in each of the past five years; if he will list each consultant employed by the Trust; and on what matters they were requested to advise. [137779]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 11 November 2003]: The financial returns submitted by Mersey Regional Ambulance National Health Service Trust for the years 1998–99 to 2002–03 indicated that there was no expenditure on external contract staffing and consultancy.

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much has been claimed in expenses by the Chief Executive of Mersey Regional Ambulance Trust since his appointment; and what his salary was in the past two years, including bonuses, where payable. [137781]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 11 November 2003]: The current salary for Chief Executive of Mersey Regional Ambulance Service, Ms Janet Davies, is £88,060. The expenses claimed for the period November 2001 to October 2003 was £69.50.

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much was spent on travel by directors of the Mersey Regional Ambulance Trust in each of the past five years. [137782]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 11 November 2003]: Information on expenditure on travel by directors of the Mersey Regional Ambulance Service National Health Service Trust in each of the past five years, is shown in the table.

Year	Amount
2003–04	2,479.00
2002–03	3,793.00
2001–02	6,433.00

1999–2000	4,309.00

Ambulances

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the recent sector report from the Commission for Health Improvement; and what the CHI found in ambulance trusts. [138070]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Department welcomed the report by the Commission for Health Improvement, which brought together information from the previously published clinical governance reviews of ambulance trusts.

The report recognised the value both patients and the general public place in the ambulance service, together with how services are meeting the challenge of dealing with increased emergency calls.

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations his Department has received from (a) patient and consumer organisations and (b) professional and trade asscociations in relation to the Ambulance Service. [138072]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Department receives regular representations from patient and consumer organisations together with professional and trade associations in relation to the Ambulance Service.

Asbestos

Chris McCafferty: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people contracted (a) mesothelioma and (b) other asbestos-related diseases in the last five years for which figures are available; where this information is publicly available; and from what year his Department's records began. [136762]

Mr. Browne: I have been asked to reply.

No source of information provides a complete count of the number of people contracting mesothelioma but one indication is the number of people who have died as a result of contracting mesothelioma.

Mesothelioma deaths in Great Britain 1997–01

	Mesothelioma deaths
1997	1,367
1998	1,541
1999	1,615
2000	[1] 1,631

Mesothelioma register.

The annual number of mesothelioma deaths continues to increase. Because there is typically a long period between asbestos exposure and the onset of disease, many of the deaths occurring now are a result of exposures during the 1970s and earlier decades when work with asbestos was less tightly controlled.

The HSE mesothelioma register began keeping records of mesothelioma deaths in 1967.

No source of information provides a complete count of the number of people contracting asbestosis or diffuse pleural thickening. However, one indicator used is the annual number of awards of Industrial Injuries Disablement Benefit Scheme.

Department of Work and Pensions Industrial Injuries Disablement Benefit Scheme.

Data are available from 1948 from the Industrial Disablement Scheme (pneumoconiosis caused by asbestos) and from 1985 for diffuse pleural thickening.

Statistics on the annual number of asbestos related lung cancer cases are not available. Deaths from asbestos related lung cancer cannot be individually distinguished from lung cancers due to other causes such as smoking. However, it is estimated that there were between approximately 1,750 and 3,500 deaths in 2001.

Asbestos related disease statistics are published on the statistics pages of the Health and Safety Executive (HSE) Website.

Care Homes

Mr. Collins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions he has had with representatives of the Leonard Cheshire Organisation regarding capital costs associated with improving their properties to meet national care standards. [137923]

Dr. Ladyman: I am meeting with representatives from Leonard Cheshire on the 20 November and they will be able to raise this issue on that occasion.

Cervical Cancer

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of deaths from cervical cancer occurred in women (a) over the age of 60 and (b) under the age of 30 in (i) 2001 and (ii) 2002; and if he will make a statement. [136879]

John Healey: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Dr. Vincent Cable, dated 12 November 2003:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your recent question asking what proportion of deaths from cervical cancer occurred in women (a) over the age of 60 and (b) under the age of 30 in (i) 2001 and (ii) 2002; and if he will make a statement. (136879)

The figures requested are given in the table.

Commission for Patient and Public Involvement in Health

Mr. Colman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of the budget of the Commission for Patient and Public Involvement in Health in (a) 2003–04 and (b) 2004–05 is allocated to the running costs of its nine regional offices. [136773]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Commission for Patient and Public Involvement in Health (CPPIH) has an annual allocation of £34.5 million. This financial year, 2003–04, the Department has made additional funding available for staff training, taking the total up to £35.4 million. It is for the CPPIH to determine how best to meet its business needs within this budget.

The Department's role in the CPPIH's finances is to monitor for propriety, regularity and value for money through the annual report and end of year accounts.

Dentistry

Sir Paul Beresford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will publish an order under section 60 of the Health Act 1999 to amend the Dentists Act 1984 to introduce Clinical Dental Technicians and other Professions Complementary to Dentistry; what consultation period will be specified for the order; and if he will make a statement. [138045]

Ms Rosie Winterton [holding answer 11 November 2003]: I expect to publish the Order in the spring. Consultation on the draft Order will run for three months, as required by the Health Act, 1999.

Dr. Jack Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of (a) the availability of and (b) access to national health dental services in Copeland and West Cumbria. [137092]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 10 November 2003]: At the end of June, in the West Cumbria primary care trust area, there were 43 dentists who provided national health service dentistry in the general dental service (GDS). In addition, 70,000 patients were registered with a GDS dentist. This represents 54 per cent. of its resident population and 51 per cent. of adults and 67 per cent. of children.

Registrations cover patients seen within the last 15 months.

A dental access centre in Egremont, West Cumbria also provides routine and emergency NHS treatment to patients.

Departmental Energy Use

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much (a) electricity and (b) other energy his Department has used in each year since 1997 (i) in total and (ii) per square metre; what the projected use is for each of the following years for which forecasts are made; what plans he has to reduce usage; and if he will make a statement. [135054]

Ms Rosie Winterton: I refer the hon. Member to the response given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs on 3 November 2003, Official Report, column 404W, setting out detail of energy used from 1997.

The Department does not forecast usage of energy for its administrative estate. However, it has adopted the target published in the "Sustainable Development in Government First Annual Report" to reduce greenhouse emissions to air by one per cent. per annum.

Diabetes

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people in each of the last 10 years have been diagnosed with Type 2 diabetes. [134834]

Ms Rosie Winterton: This information is not available in the form requested. However, based on information from the Health Survey for England, the following figures may be estimated.

	Number of people with diabetes in the UK
1994	1,378,707
1998	1,684,111

Data are not routinely collected on the number of people being diagnosed with diabetes. Local health care providers will, however, increasingly gather information as they build registers of people with diabetes as they begin to implement the national service framework.

Diagnostic and Treatment Centres

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the diagnostic services provided by the diagnostic and treatment centres announced so far. [129597]

Mr. Hutton: Treatment centres will provide safe, fast, pre-booked surgery and diagnostic tests for patients, by separating scheduled treatment from emergency pressures, in some of the specialties with the highest waiting times. These will cover mixed surgical procedures, and in particular, patients waiting for treatment in orthopaedics and ophthalmology.

The diagnostic services provided in both the national health service and independent sector treatment centres will include endoscopy, radiology and pathology.

Diet and Nutrition

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the most recent National Diet and Nutrition Survey was published; what percentage of women aged 35 to 49 it found had a total daily folic acid intake of less than 400 microgrammes; and what his Department's recommended total daily folic acid intake is from (a) the normal diet and (b) supplemental sources for women in that age group. [137053]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The latest National Diet and Nutrition Survey, published in July 2003, showed that 84 per cent. of women aged 35 to 49 had folate intakes below 400 micrograms per day. The recommended intake for folate from diet for these women is 200 micrograms per day. The Department recommends that all women planning a pregnancy should take 400 micrograms per day of folic acid (a synthetic form of folate) as a daily supplement to reduce the risk of neural tube defects.

EU Clinical Trial Directive

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evaluation his Department has made of the long term effects of the EU Clinical Trial Directive on clinical research in the UK. [132585]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 20 October 2003]: The European Directive on the conduct of clinical trials was adopted in February 2001. The main aim of the Directive is to simplify and harmonise procedures across the Community whilst ensuring the protection of trial subjects and providing a safe environment for the development of new medicines. Member states are required to implement the Directive fully by 1 May 2004.

The scope of the Directive is wide and the UK Regulations will apply to all clinical trials on medicinal products for human use conducted in the UK, including academic and healthy volunteer studies, with the exception of non-interventional trials.

The former Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health, my noble Friend Lord Hunt of Kings Heath, invited the Medical Research Council (MRC) and the Academy of Medical Sciences to co-ordinate a report on the impact of the Directive on academic studies. The impact assessment, prepared by the MRC with the active support of others including Cancer Research UK, the National Co-ordinating Centre for Health Technology Assessment and a number of academic experts formed the basis for a response to the Medicines and Health products Regulatory Agency (MHRA) consultation on the draft regulations to implement the Directive into UK law earlier this year.

In responding to concerns, and to provide an environment in which patients are protected but high quality research is not inhibited, the Government have taken steps to attempt to influence the Commission in its consideration of a Commission Directive on Good Clinical Practice (GCP) and also in reviewing guidance that the Commission published earlier this year.

In another initiative, the Department and the MRC have announced a joint project to work with experts to find practical solutions to the issues identified in the impact assessment. Details of the project can be found on www.ncchta.org/eudirective/index.asp.

With our careful exploration of the impact on publicly-funded research and organisations that support it and delays in the Commission finalising the GCP Directive and other guidance, the United Kingdom's implementing regulations are not expected to be made until early in 2004.

Further information on the scope of the Directive and the proposed UK implementing regulations is available on the MHRA's website www.mhra.gov.uk on the Clinical Trials Directive pages.

Food Supplements

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will compensate manufacturers and retailers for the cost of destroying products which will become illegal in July 2005 under the provisions of the Food Supplements (England) Regulations on the basis that they contain ingredients missing from the list of permitted nutrients and nutrient sources. [136627]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Government have no such plans.

Genito-urinary Medicine

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people have waited (a) up to three months, (b) up to six months and (c) up to nine months for an appointment at a genito-urinary management clinic in (i) Chesham and Amersham and (ii) Buckinghamshire in each year since 1996. [136573]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 5 November 2003]: No patients have been reported by provider trusts for the Chesham, Amersham and Buckinghamshire area as waiting up to three months, six months or nine months for an outpatient appointment for genito-urinary medicine.

Health Care (Gloucestershire)

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what discussions he has had with (a) Gloucestershire primary care trusts and (b) Gloucestershire hospital trusts about their budgetary shortfalls for 2003–04; and if he will make a statement; [134045]

(2) if he will make a statement on the proposed cuts in services (a) at Tewkesbury Hospital and (b) in Gloucestershire. [134046]

Ms Rosie Winterton [holding answser 23 October 2003]: In line with the Government's policy of shifting the balance of power, responsibility for performance and financial management of local national health servie organisations now rests with strategic health authorities (SHAs).

The Avon, Gloucestershire and Wiltshire SHA is working closely with all organisations within the local health community to ensure that robust plans are in place to achieve year end financial balance and achievement of NHS plan targets. The SHA is having regular meetings with all three local primary care trusts (PCTs) and the hospital trust to monitor progress.

The PCTs and the hospital trust are reviewing service provision and are currently considering a range of measures, including the utilisation of community hospital beds.

Health Care (York)

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what NHS revenue funding (a) in cash terms and (b) at current prices was provided for (i) York NHS Trust services and (ii) York Primary Care Trust for community and mental health services transferred to it from the NHS Trust, in each year since 1992. [135959]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information requested is shown in the table.

Notes:
1. It is not possible to provide information on funding to NHS Trusts and PCTs for Community and Mental Health Services (including Learning Disabilities). Expenditure information by providers is included in financial returns, which are submitted on an annual basis. This expenditure information provides the closest to that required in the question.
2. The figures contain expenditure on Learning Disability services which cannot be disaggregated from certain mental health services.
3. In 1996–97, York Health Services NHS Trust submitted no information on Community Health Services and services commissioned through Royal Colleges. Therefore, information for 1996–97 is incomplete.
4. Current prices have been calculated using the gross domestic product deflator at market prices.

Health Visitors

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate his Department has made of the number of health visitors at Grade G due to retire in the next (a) five and (b) 10 years; and what efforts his Department has made to maintain or improve numbers of health visitors. [136294]

Mr. Hutton: Information on the number of health visitors at Grade G due to retire in the next five and 10 years is not available.

The total number of qualified health visitors broken down by gender in age bands 50–54 and 55 or over are shown in the table.

The Government is implementing a range of measures to recruit and retain more healthcare professionals, including health visitors. These include improving pay and conditions, encouraging the National Health Service to become a better, more flexible and diverse employer, increasing training, investing in childcare and continuing professional development, attracting back returners and running national recruitment campaigns.

Heath Care (Bath/North East Somerset)

Dan Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much was spent on primary health services in Bath and North East Somerset in (a) 1996–97 and (b) 2003–04; and what that investment represents per head of population. [136326]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The information is not available in the format requested. Bath and North East Somerset Primary Care Trust (PCT) did not come into existence until 2001–02. Therefore, figures are provided for the Somerset Health Authority (HA) area for 1996–97, and for the Bath and North East Somerset PCT area for 2002–03. These figures are not, therefore, comparable.

Expenditure on primary health services is the total primary healthcare commissioned by the HA and by the PCT. Expenditure per head is normally expressed by weighted head of population, but this is not possible for 2002–03, because weighted population data are not available for PCT areas. Therefore, in this case, resident population figures have been used.

Commission of primary health care: expenditure and expenditure per head

1996–97
Somerset HA area
Expenditure	55,641,000
Expenditure per head	121.65
2002–03
Bath and North East Somerset PCT area
Expenditure	37,525,000
Expenditure per head	222.22

Notes:
1. The PCT expenditure figures are not comparable as the areas are different between the two years provided.
2. Allocations per weighted head of population provide a much more reliable measure to identify differences between funding of HAs and PCTs.
3. Expenditure is taken from audited HA accounts and PCT summarisation schedules, which are prepared on a resource basis and therefore differ from cash allocations in the year. The expenditure is the total commissioning of primary health care by Somerset HA and by Bath and North East Somerset PCT. The majority of general dental services expenditure is not included in the HA or PCT summarisation forms and is separately accounted for by the Dental Practice Board. An element of pharmaceutical services expenditure is accounted for by the Prescription Pricing Authority and not by HAs or PCTs.

1. Somerset HA audited annual accounts 1996–97.
2. Bath and North East Somerset PCT audited summarisation schedules 2002–03.
3. HA weighted population figures for 1996–97.
4. PCT resident population figures for 2002–03?2002–03 data remain provisional.

Dan Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much is being spent per person in Bath and North East Somerset on all local health services in 2003; and what was spent in 1997. [136328]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Bath and North East Somerset Primary Care Trust (PCT) did not come into existence until 2001–02, so figures are provided for the Somerset Health Authority (HA) area for 1996–97 and for the Bath and North East Somerset PCT area for 2002–03.

Expenditure is the total expenditure by the HA and the commissioner net operating costs of the PCT. Expenditure per head is normally expressed by weighted head of population, but this is not possible for 2002–03, because weighted population data are not available for PCT areas. In this case, resident population figures have been used.

Total expenditure per head

1996–97	Somerset HA area	608.58
2002–03	Bath and North East Somerset PCT area	821.14

Notes:

1. In many HAs there are factors which distort the expenditure per head. These include: the HA acting in a lead capacity to commission healthcare or fund training on behalf of other health bodies; and asset revaluations in NHS trusts being funded through health authorities or primary care trusts. For these reasons, expenditure per head cannot be compared reliably between HAs.

2. Allocations per weighted head of population provide a much more reliable measure to identify differences between funding of HAs.

3. Expenditure is taken from audited health HA accounts and PCT summarisation schedules, which are prepared on a resource basis and therefore differ from cash allocations in the year. The expenditure is the total expenditure by the Somerset HA for 1997 and the net operating commissioner costs of the Bath and North East Somerset PCT for 2002–03. The majority of general dental services expenditure is not included in HA accounts or PCT summarisation schedules and is separately accounted for by the Dental Practice Board. An element of pharmaceutical services expenditure is accounted for by the Prescription Pricing Authority and not by HAs or PCTs.

Hull and East Yorkshire NHS Hospitals Trust

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospital managers there are in the Hull and East Yorkshire NHS Hospitals Trust. [136059]

Miss Melanie Johnson: There are 198 managers employed by Hull and East Yorkshire Hospitals National Health Service Trust as at 30 September 2002. This figure is a headcount.

This figure includes 37 managers in posts that require them to be a qualified nurse, midwife or health visitor, a qualified therapist or a qualified scientist.

IVF Treatment

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on IVF treatment in the UK. [136673]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 6 November 2003]: In vitro fertilisation (IVF) treatment in the United Kingdom is regulated by the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority. It is provided by the national health service and by the private sector. In England, access to NHS infertility treatment varies according to location. Therefore, the Government has asked the National Institute for Clinical Excellence to prepare a guideline on the assessment and treatment of people with fertility problems. The guideline is due for publication in February 2004.

Mental Health

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the service improvements set out in the document, "Sign of the Times", will be implemented in the NHS. [134767]

Ms Rosie Winterton: "Sign of the Times" was a consultation document on improving mental health services for deaf people. The consultation continued until April of this year and officials are currently considering how best to represent the many high quality and detailed responses received.

MRI Scanners

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the hospitals in London using MRI scanners; and when each scanner was installed. [137365]

National Tariff

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to his answer of 16 October 2003 to the right hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson), Official Report, columns 338–89W, if he will list the regional variations in (a) wages and (b) other costs of service delivery in the standard national tariff, broken down by region. [136543]

Mr. Hutton: The national tariff is adjusted to give a local tariff for each provider. This is done using a market forces factor (MFF). The MFF takes account of unavoidable differences across the country in the costs of staff, land and buildings. Other running costs are assumed not to vary. The MFF is not a regional adjustment, but is specific to each provider. A table listing the MFF adjustment for each provider has been placed in the Library.

NHS Finance

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the funding per head of population in each English primary care trust area for financial year 2003–04. [136725]

Mr. Hutton: Primary care trusts revenue allocations per weighted and unweighted head of population in 2003–04 have been placed in the Library.

NHS Staff (Attacks)

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he is taking to reduce the number of violent attacks on NHS staff. [136419]

Mr. Hutton: The Counter Fraud and Security Management Service (CFSMS) was launched in April 2003 with a remit encompassing policy and operational responsibility for the management of security in the national health service.

Specific measures on tackling violence were announced in April by my right hon. Friend the Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn), as follows:

a national and consistent incident reporting system for recording physical assaults, and a consistent local reporting system for non-physical incidents, using clear and legally based definitions with the ability to track cases from start to conclusion, allowing for monitoring and intervention where necessary. to ensure the best possible outcome for the person assaulted;

from 2004–05, the CFSMS will begin training nominated staff from health bodies for the new role of local security management specialist (LSMS). The LSMS staff will work with and assist the police in investigating cases of assault in order to increase the number of successful prosecutions. However, as an interim measure to cover the period until the LSMS staff are in place, the CFSMS will use its existing highly trained and professional operational service in this role; and a new legal protection unit to work with health bodies and provide them with advice on cost-effective methods of pursuing a wide range of sanctions against offenders, and also to work with the police and the Crown Prosecution Service to increase the prosecution rate of individuals who assault staff and professionals working in the NHS.

Older People

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how his Department has audited the production of audits by local health care providers of their risk management procedures to reduce the risk of older people falling. [137930]

Dr. Ladyman: Data has not been collected centrally. This is a matter for local health and social care communities and part of their planning to ensure integrated falls services are in place by April 2005.

Ophthalmology Services

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what consultation he has had with (a) ophthalmologists in Buckinghamshire, (b) the Buckinghamshire Association for the Blind, (c) primary care trusts in Buckinghamshire and (d) the Buckinghamshire hospitals NHS Trust about his plans for a diagnostic and treatment centre for ophthalmology in Buckinghamshire and Oxfordshire; [130808]

(2) what assessment he has made of the impact on ophthalmology services at Stoke Mandeville hospital of his plans for a diagnostic and treatment centre for ophthalmology in Buckinghamshire and Oxfordshire; [130809]

(3) what arrangements he is proposing for managing (a) operative and (b) post-operative complications at the planned diagnostic and treatment centre for ophthalmology for Buckinghamshire and Oxfordshire; [130810]

(4) what representations he has received from local doctors about the accuracy of the information on the demands for cataract surgery on which he has based his plans for a diagnostic and treatment centre for ophthalmology in Buckinghamshire and Oxfordshire. [130870]

Mr. Hutton [holding answers 18 September 2003]: Local primary care trusts (PCTs) have met with ophthalmologists and they have been actively involved in refining the proposal for a treatment centre for cataract surgery in Buckinghamshire and will continue to be involved in further developing the plans. Buckinghamshire hospitals trust has also been involved and will continue to be. Links are also being developed with local groups including patient support groups and the PCTs will be looking to work with them as the treatment centre plans progress.

Treatment centres in Oxfordshire and Buckinghamshire will provide more choice for patients and provide services closer to home. Existing local services are held in high regard and an important outcome for local hospitals will be the opportunity of developing further their specialist service and chronic disease management. Clinicians and managers at Buckinghamshire hospitals trusts are involved in these discussions.

Discussions have taken place with Stoke Mandeville hospital to ensure that the viability and quality of the current service will not be adversely affected.

The treatment centre will offer additional opportunities for care of patients by increasing capacity and bringing down wait times and are a service enhancement to the PCT population.

Treatment centres will be expected to be able to deal with typical surgical problems to at least the same standard as national health service providers. Local trusts, PCTs and new providers will agree protocols for referring and transferring patients who require emergency or urgent care that cannot be provided by the treatment centres.

In autumn 2002, the NHS undertook a national capacity planning process led by local NHS commissioners. This identified a range of capacity gaps that needed to be met for the NHS to meet the waiting time target set for 2005. Where the NHS was not able to demonstrate robust plans to meet this demand the residual activity was included in the independent sector treatment centre programme.

Advice and guidance has been made available to local NHS sponsors who are responsible for running an appropriate consultation with the patients and staff. I have been assured by the Thames Valley Strategic health authority that the treatment centre offers the opportunity to reduce waiting lists for cataract surgery further, with all the benefits that cataract surgery brings to the quality of life for older people. It also creates capacity in the ophthalmology departments of local trusts to enable more complex eye surgery to be carried out.

The details of the scheme, together with a wider review of ophthalmology services generally, will be worked out locally with clinicians and other stakeholders. The specific issues raised in these questions will be managed locally as the NHS makes these new units a success.

Letters have been received at the SHA from ophthalmologists in Buckinghamshire and Oxfordshire outlining local concerns. These have been addressed in meetings with clinicians and managers.

Prescriptions

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what assessment he has made of the changes in workload for clerical staff, which may arise from the decision to reduce the maximum length of a prescription from three months to one month; [136711]

(2) what estimate he made of the costs that will arise from the decision to reduce the maximum length of a prescription from three months to one month. [136712]

Ms Rosie Winterton: We have made no such estimates. It is for prescribers to determine the duration of prescriptions, based on their clinical assessment of patients and other relevant factors, including the minimisation of waste. We have not issued guidance on the duration of prescriptions. However, it is common practice for general practitioner prescriptions to be issued for one month or 28 days at a time.

Road Safety

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the cost to the NHS of road traffic accidents was in 2002–03. [136047]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Under the provisions of the Road Traffic (NHS Charges) Act 1999, £105 million was recovered and paid to national health services hospitals in England and Wales and Scotland for treating those injured in road traffic accidents in 2002–03. This amount is not the full cost of treating road traffic casualties. However, as costs are recovered only where the injured person receives personal injury compensation, it includes only hospital treatment costs, and the tariff system under which the scheme operates reflects average costs rather than actual costs.

Information on the total cost to the NHS of treating all road traffic accident victims is not held centrally.

Smoking

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment his Department has made of the effect of raising the minimum age for smoking to (a) 18 and (b) 21 years old, with particular reference to the development and health of young people. [136811]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 10 November 2003]: The Government is aware of the difficulties in enforcing the existing age limit for smoking. We are not convinced that raising the minimum age to 18 or 21 will resolve the problem of teenage smoking. The key is to improve enforcement of existing legislation. The Department continues to work closely with representatives of Trading Standards and the Local Authorities Co-ordinators of Regulatory Services to achieve this.

STDs

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many finished consultant episodes for sexually transmitted diseases there were in each English region in each of the last six years. [137368]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 10 November 2003]: The number of finished consultant episodes for sexually transmitted diseases diagnosed in genitourinary medicine clinics in each of the English national health service regions (up to 2002) are shown in the table.

Data for episodes diagnosed and treated in other settings, such as contraception services, are not held centrally. Nor does the data identify the grades of staff undertaking the diagnoses, therefore it will include diagnoses and treatment undertaken by other clinic staff, such as nurses, as well as consultants.

Termination Payments

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many termination payments have been made by NHS trusts to (a) chief executives and (b) senior managers since January 2000; and what the total amount paid was for each trust. [138100]

Mr. Hutton: This information is not collected centrally as determination of such payments are a local matter.

HOUSE OF COMMONS COMMISSION

Mr. Flook: To ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire, representing the House of Commons Commission when the ticket office on College Green will be dismantled. [136945]

Sir Archy Kirkwood: The work will be carried out later this month.

EDUCATION AND SKILLS

Class Sizes

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the average class size of (a) primary and (b) secondary schools in the Vale of York was for each of the previous three academic years. [137002]

Mr. Miliband: The information requested is shown in the table.

Euro K4

Mr. Michael Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will list the local authorities allocated money under the Euro K4 project. [135649]

Alan Johnson: Euro K4 is a project run by Worcestershire county council. No other local authorities receive funding from the project.

Graduate Tax

Paul Farrelly: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) what the expected deficits or surpluses are over the first 20 years for the Government in relation to higher education spending under the present proposals for income-contingent loans, assuming a zero real rate of interest; [137685]

(2) whether his Department has commissioned outside institutions and individuals to model variants of a graduate tax; [137686]

(3) what discussions his Department has had with outside bodies regarding the hypothecation of revenues from a graduate tax for use solely in funding higher education; [137687]

(4) how many (a) variants of a time-limited graduate tax, (b) principal variants of a quantum-limited graduate tax and (c) variants of a graduate tax were modelled by his Department in connection with its plans to fund higher education; [137744]

(5) which securitisation and bond issuance schemes his Department has assessed to fund or bridge the cash flow gap in the first years of the main variants of a graduate tax; [137753]

(6) if he will publish the estimated cash flow profile over 20 years for Government receipts under his present proposals for income-contingent loans; [137754]

(7) what assessment he has made of alternative models of a graduate tax based on an increase in national insurance contributions payable by graduates and businesses during (a) all and (b) part of a graduate's working life; [137755]

(8) what mechanisms his Department has assessed to fund or bridge the cash flow gap in the first years of the main variants of graduate tax modelled by his Department; [137756]

(9) what the cash flow profiles over 20 years are of the principal variants of a graduate tax which his Department has assessed; and what the main assumptions underlying them are; [137757]

(10) what (a) the average monthly repayments, (b) total payment made by the student and (c) the shortfall/surplus at a zero real rate of interest under a graduate tax levied would be at (i) 1p, (ii) 2p and (iii) 3p in the pound of income above £15,000 for (A) 10 years, (B) 15 years, (C) 20 years, (D) 25 years and (E) 30 years after leaving university. [137758]

Alan Johnson: I refer my hon. Friend to my answer of 30 October 2003, Official Report, column 429, and also to the two letters to my hon. Friend from my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Skills, dated 11 April 2003 and 3 June 2003. Copies of both letters are in the House Library.

Higher Education

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what research he has commissioned on Government expenditure on higher education in EU member states. [137678]

Alan Johnson: My Department has not directly commissioned any specific research in this area. My Department uses OECD's annual "Education at a Glance" publication as the best source of comparative information of this nature, and we contribute both financially and in time spent by our statisticians, to its production. It gives statistical information on Government expenditure on higher education in all the current EU member states and in four of the states due to accede in 2004: Poland, Hungary and the Czech and Slovak republics.

In "Education at a Glance", each country's expenditure on higher education is reported as a percentage of total public expenditure and as a percentage of Gross Domestic Product. The publication also gives the relative proportions of public and private expenditure on higher education institutions, for both 2000 and 1995.

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what additional resources the Government have allocated to higher education establishments in each of the last five years in (a) the north west region and (b) St. Helens. [138012]

Alan Johnson: The table shows the resources for higher education provided via the Higher Education Funding Council for England in St. Helens and for the north west region in each of the last five years.

£ million

	North West	St. Helens
1999–2000	471.7	2.2
2000–01	488. 1	2.4
2001–02	505.8	2.5
2002–03	539.0	2.6
2003–04	576.3	2.5
Total	2,580.9	12.1

As a result of the 2002 Spending Review publicly planned spending per FTE in higher education will rise by 7 per cent. in real terms between 2002–03 and 2005–06. Higher education in the north west will receive its share of this increase.

Higher Education White Paper

Paul Farrelly: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills in which category postcards from students at (a) Loughborough and (b) other universities to the Prime Minister were placed in the Government's response to the consultation on the Higher Education White Paper. [137552]

Alan Johnson: We have received postcards from students at various universities in a number of campaigns over the last year. However, we received no such postcard campaigns in response to the higher education White Paper, during the period for comment which ran until 30 April.

Paul Farrelly: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills in which category of response the submission by the hon. Member for Newcastle-under-Lyme was placed in the responses to the consultation on the Higher Education White Paper. [137553]

Alan Johnson: The hon. Member's letters to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Skills were responded to separately and in full by my right hon. Friend. They were accordingly not included in the commentary of responses which was published on 28 July.

Independent Adjudicator (Higher Education)

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the estimated annual case workload of the Independent Adjudicator for higher education is; and what annual resources have been allocated for this function. [137875]

Alan Johnson: We are informed by the Office of the Independent Adjudicator for Higher Education (OIA) that its annual case workload is estimated initially to be around 300 cases a year. The Department is providing up to £1 million in total over the two financial years 2003–04 and 2004–05 to establish the OIA. Thereafter, the OIA is expected to be funded by institutions.

Knowledge Transfer Centres

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what representations he has received on the Higher Education White Paper proposals for regional centres for knowledge transfer. [137876]

Alan Johnson: The Higher Education Funding Council for England (HEFCE) has been seeking views on the knowledge transfer proposals in the Higher Education White Paper through its consultation on the future development of the Higher Education Innovation Fund (HEIF). This included the role of knowledge exchanges to spread good practice in interactions between higher education and business at regional level. The consultation exercise closed on 24 October and the HEIF 2 guidance is currently being reviewed in the light of the responses received.

Qualifications

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what research he has conducted into the differential in the qualifications required for future jobs between (a) newly-created jobs and (b) replacement jobs; and what estimate he has made of the number of jobs in each category. [136458]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: Research conducted by the Department into the area in question consists of the Projections of Occupations and Qualifications 2000/2001 commissioned from the University of Warwick Institute for Employment Research and Cambridge Econometrics and covering estimates for the period 1999 to 2010. New projections have been commissioned by the Sector Skills Development Agency and will be published in early 2004.

This research estimates that about two million additional jobs will be created over the period 1999 to 2010. However, there will be a net requirement for about 13.5 million job openings to cover these new jobs and to replace people retiring and dying and moving into and out of their jobs.

The research did not cover the differential in the qualifications required for these two categories of jobs. However, the same research suggests that, between 1999 and 2010, the number of people employed with qualifications at levels 4 and 5 will increase from 7.10 million to 9.43 million, the number of people employed with level 3 qualifications will increase from 5.10 million to 5.38 million, the number of people employed with qualifications at level 2 will fall from 6.17million to 6.12 million and the number of people employed with qualifications at level 1 will increase from 5.78 million to 6.25 million.

School Pupil Statistics

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the breakdown by (a) gender and (b) ethnic groups as a percentage of (i) primary and (ii) secondary school pupils was in each local education authority as at 1 January. [137172]

Mr. Miliband: The information requested has been placed in the House of Commons Library.

Scientific Careers

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what is being done to promote scientific careers to school students; and what involvement professional bodies have in such information and promotion schemes. [137539]

Alan Johnson: Our strategy for science, engineering and technology was set out in "Investing in Innovation" published in July 2002 in response to the recommendations made in Sir Gareth Roberts' report "SET for Success". Our response to Baroness Greenfield's report "SET Fair" outlines our strategy to tackle under-representation of women in science. Both of these included looking at the promotion of science careers. We are working closely with colleagues at the DTI and the Promoting SET for Women Unit to take forward the recommendations in those reports.

We believe that a good way of promoting science, including careers, in schools is by introducing current scientific developments into the classroom. As well as making science both exciting and relevant this will give young people an understanding of the role of science in society. We are working with a range of bodies, including professional bodies, to achieve this. We have consulted on the programme of study for science at Key Stage 4, following a review by the QCA. The new programme of study will set out a core for science, suitable for all learners, to increase flexibility of qualifications at Key Stage 4. From September 2003, a new science GCSE, "Science in the 21st Century" will be piloted in 50 schools. It aims to provide a sound and stimulating science education that will engage all students with contemporary science issues; and to increase the number of young people studying science subjects post-16. Connexions Personal Advisers provide independent advice to students on all careers, including scientific careers.

The Science and Engineering Ambassadors' scheme (SEAs) launched jointly by this Department and the DTI in January 2002, aims to show young people the links between what they learn at school and the world of work. Ambassadors work with young people across the key stages and give them an understanding of the opportunities that a science, engineering or technology based career can offer.

Specialist Status Colleges

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills pursuant to his answer of 27 October 2003, Official Report, column 80W, whether, with reference to specialist status colleges, a school's previous performance in value added terms is a factor in any bid for specialist status. [137890]

Mr. Miliband: A school's previous performance in value added terms is taken into account by the Department's specialist school assessors.

Student Finance

Mr. Dhanda: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what plans he has to increase financial support for undergraduate students of medicine. [137098]

Alan Johnson: Undergraduate medical students already receive more help overall than other higher education students.

For the first four years of their courses, English domiciled medical students receive support from my Department. Students from poorer backgrounds receive means-tested grants for fees of up to £1,125 per year (2003/04 rate). For years five and six, support is provided by the Department of Health, and currently students in those years pay no fee contributions. Most of the cost of their courses is met by the Government through HE Funding Council support.

Medical students will benefit from the new Higher Education Grants of £1,000 to be introduced in academic year 2004/05, which three in 10 of all students will receive in full and an additional number will receive in part. And in addition to the non means-tested loans undergraduate medical students receive from the Student Loans Company, they can receive means-tested bursaries from the Department of Health in years five and six.

Students Charter

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills when the Students' Charter was last revised; and if he will make a statement. [137877]

Alan Johnson: The Charter for Higher Education was published in 1993 by the last Government and an addendum was produced in 1997. The document is now obsolete and no longer issued by the Department. Information about students' general entitlements and responsibilities while at university is best prepared at a local level, allowing it to be tailored to reflect the circumstances of the particular institution. Many universities do publish charter-type documents of their own and there are no plans to republish a central document. In addition, our proposals for improving student information mean that institutions will be publishing far more information than ever before about the quality and standards of their provision.

Teaching Assistants

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what national standards his Department (a) sets and (b) recognises for the employment of teaching assistants in schools, with particular reference to (i) pay and (ii) training. [137578]

Mr. Miliband: Pay for support staff including teaching assistants is a matter for local determination: the government believes that this is the best way of ensuring a flexible system that can respond to local needs and circumstances. It is also for employers to decide what skills, experience and qualifications are needed for teaching assistant posts and the training of support staff is the responsibility of local authorities and schools.

In October the National Joint Council (NJC) for Local Government Services published guidance on the employment and grading of school support staff including examples of job profiles that can be used to support job evaluations and advice on training and development. The development of this guidance has been recognised by all signatories to the National Agreement on Raising Standards and Tackling Workload as an important step to support the implementation of the agreement.

My Department supported the development of the National Occupational Standards for Teaching Assistants by the Local Government National Training Organisation, published in September 2001, which awarding bodies have used to develop NVQs at levels 2 and 3 available from September 2002.

We have also supported the development of standards for the new higher level teaching assistant (HLTA) role by the Teacher Training Agency (TTA). These were published in September 2003 and link to the standards for qualified teacher status (QTS). We continue to support the TTA as they develop an HLTA assessment and training programme which will be widely available from April 2004.

The Department has in addition, for the first time, introduced regulations which define the conditions under which school support staff can undertake specified work under the direction and supervision of a teacher. The new Education (Specified Work and Registration) (England) Regulations 2003 emphasise the importance of headteachers satisfying themselves that the member of support staff has been adequately trained and refer to the HLTA standards.

Top-up Fees

Paul Farrelly: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills who he intends will be responsible for raising the maximum cap on top-up fees; and by what mechanism. [137554]

Alan Johnson: I can assure my hon. Friend that the £3,000 fee cap will not be raised by more than the rate of inflation for the lifetime of the next Parliament.

The precise mechanism for raising the fee cap will be established under the proposed legislation. Under the current arrangements, the standard fee can be uprated for inflation by negative resolution of the House. However, it can only be increased by more than inflation by affirmative resolution, which would require a debate and vote in both Houses.

Tuition Fees

Paul Farrelly: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what estimate he has made of the amount that would be raised for higher education per £100 increase in annual tuition fees by all universities. [137569]

Alan Johnson: For every £100 increase in annual tuition fees by all universities, the higher education sector would receive approximately £75 million in additional income.[1] This figure was set out in the letter to my hon. Friend from my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Skills dated 11 April 2003, a copy of which is in the House Library.

[1] This is in addition to fee income to universities from the standard fee of £1,125, not including full time post graduates (apart from PGCE students). All figures are for students at English HE Institutions for 2003–04.

Paul Farrelly: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) what estimate he has made of the additional amount that will be raised by universities if his proposals for variable top-up fees are implemented; [137161]

(2) what estimate he has made of the amount that would be raised for universities if tuition fees rose to (a) £1,500, (b) £2,000, (c) £2,500 and (d) £3,000 per annum for all universities. [137163]

Alan Johnson: From 2006, universities will be able to set their fees above the current standard fee, provided they have an access agreement approved by the Office for Fair Access.

The following table sets out the approximate extra income from fees if all universities set their fee for all courses at the levels specified[1]:

[1] All figures are for students at English HE Institutions for 2003/04.

£ million

Level of higher fee	Approx. additional income from fees[1]
£1,500	280
£2,000	660
£2,500	1,035
£3,000	1,410

[1] This is in addition to fee income to universities from the standard fee of £1,125, not including full-time post graduates (apart from PGCE students).

Paul Farrelly: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what assessment his Department has made of the impact on access by poorer students to medical places if they are charged the maximum tuition fee. [137214]

Alan Johnson: The Government have made a number of proposals to safeguard access to higher education for those from low income families. Such students will continue, as now, to have the cost of the standard tuition fee (£1,125 in 2003/04) met by the Government. Around three in 10 students will also receive means tested Higher Education Grants of £1,000 and, in addition, many students from lower income families will be eligible for partial fee remission and HE grant as well as bursaries and other support from universities under arrangements agreed by the Office of Fair Access.

Fees for English domiciled medical students in years five and six are currently paid by the Department of Health. These students also qualify for means tested NHS bursaries in their fifth and subsequent years of study. Department of Health Ministers have indicated that they will, if necessary, take measures to ensure that any increase in the level of tuition fees will not have an adverse impact on the supply, retention, diversity or quality of students on health professional courses, including medicine.

Arrangements for repayment of fee loans will, for all graduates, be heavily subsidised: graduates will repay their loans at zero real rate of interest and only when their income exceeds £15,000 per year. Repayments will then be made at a rate of 9 per cent. of income above £15,000. Figures collected in March 2003 show that 73 per cent. of newly qualified medical graduates in hospital posts earn £34,533 per annum. This compares very favourably with the salaries of other newly qualified graduates. According to Graduate Prospects, the average starting salary for graduate-level jobs was £18,000 in 2002/03.

Finally, I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave on 6 November in which I stated that I had placed in the House Library copies of a number of pieces of international research on the impact on social access to a range of university courses.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will break down by (a) region and (b) local education authority the proportion of students (i) not paying tuition fees and (ii) receiving a contribution towards tuition fees. [137476]

Alan Johnson: In England and Wales students on full-time undergraduate courses and their families are expected to make a contribution towards the cost of their tuition only if they can afford to do so.

The percentage of students in England and Wales in academic year 2001/02 (latest year for which data are available) who have been assessed to make a nil or partial contribution towards the cost of their tuition is shown in the table:

Student support scheme students[1]: 2001/02

Academic year	Percentage
Nil contribution towards the cost of tuition from student/parents/spouse/partner[2]	43
Partial contribution towards the cost of tuition from student/parents/spouse/partner	16

[1] Contributions towards the cost of tuition are assessed by local education authorities in England and Wales for students normally domiciled in their area and studying in the UK.

[2] Includes students on courses where the fee support was not subject to income-assessment (e.g. PGCE courses, and some other ITT courses; and designated courses at private institutions).

F503G survey of local education authorities

National level data are published annually in the Department's Statistical First Releases (SFRs) (SFR 11/2003 for 2001/02). Data are collected from the Local Education Authorities (LEAs) to produce national estimates and the data collection exercise does not allow for the production of firm figures below this level, and therefore data by region and local education authority are not available.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills whether he plans to provide assistance for graduate teachers in the repayment of graduate contributions towards tuition fees and loans; and what assessment he has made of the effect of his proposals for graduate contributions on teacher recruitment. [137522]

Alan Johnson: Since September 2002, the Repayment of Teachers' Loans Scheme has been available on a pilot basis for new teachers of priority subjects taking up employment in maintained schools. This scheme supplements the £6,000 training bursaries and £4,000 Golden Hellos that have been offered to eligible graduate trainees since September 2000. Any changes to these arrangements would be announced at the appropriate time.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) what research he has undertaken into the impact of tuition fee increases on student demand for university courses; [137654]

(2) what research he has undertaken to establish the level of tuition fees that would set supply equal to demand for particular university courses; [137652]

(3) what research he has undertaken to establish the impact of differential tuition fees on the pattern of student demand for different university courses. [137653]

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what research has been commissioned by his Department on the effect of (a) upfront tuition fees, (b) deferred repayment of tuition fees and (c) variable tuition fees on university applications. [137473]

Alan Johnson: Evidence from research into the impact of variable fees overseas indicates that there is little impact on demand for higher education. I have placed a number of pieces of relevant research in the House Library.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what assessment he has made of the impact of variable tuition fees on (a) the number of young people deciding to pursue degree courses and (b) the long-term consequences on (i) skills and (ii) employability of the work force. [137679]

Alan Johnson: Evidence from research into the impact of variable fees overseas indicates that there is little impact on demand for higher education. I have placed a number of pieces of relevant research in the House Library. The HE White Paper also explained that research[1] demonstrates that the number of jobs in occupations most likely to be filled by those who have been through Higher Education will grow by over one and a half million over the next decade.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Burma

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has held with United Nations partners on the Burmese Government's atrocities against the (a) Karen, (b) Karenni and (c) Shan people; and what evidence he has collated on crimes against humanity committed in Burma. [135919]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: There is no doubt that appalling human rights violations have taken place in Burma over many years and that the ethnic minorities have suffered disproportionately. We regularly discuss these issues with our UN partners at the UN Commission on Human Rights and at the United Nations General Assembly.

We do not currently have independent verification of crimes against humanity in Burma. However, we receive regular reports from the UN's Special Rapporteur for Human Rights in Burma, the British embassy in Rangoon, and International Non Government Organisations detailing human rights abuses in Burma.

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many times the Government has raised concerns with Burma's regime regarding the Burmese military's atrocities against the Karen, Karenni and Shan people in the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement. [135920]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We regularly raise human rights abuses, including those against the Karen, Karenni and Shan people, with the Burmese regime.

Concern over the treatment of ethnic groups in Burma was raised (with the Burmese) at the UN Commission on Human Rights in April 2003 and in last November's UN General Assembly resolution on Burma. Human Rights abuses against the ethnic nationalities were also highlighted by the EU when it strengthened the EU Common Position on Burma earlier this year.

Central African Republic

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment his Department has made of the security situation in the Central African Republic; how it has developed since September 2002; and if he will make a statement. [136635]

Mr. Mullin: In a military coup of 15 March 2003, forces loyal to General Bozize took over the capital Bangui, ousting the incumbent President Patasse. After an initial spate of looting and retribution, troops of the Communaute Economique et Monetaire de l'Afrique Centrale helped restore control. The situation remains volatile outside Bangui, where remnants of Patasse's supporters and local militia have taken advantage of the instability. The transitional government is gradually restoring calm. The government supports international efforts to restore stability to the country.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with members of the governments of (a) EU member states, (b) EU candidate countries, (c) member states of the Economic Community of Central African States, (d) South Africa and (e) the USA on the developments in the (i) political and (ii) humanitarian situation in the Central African Republic since March; and if he will make a statement. [136641]

Mr. Mullin: Since March this year, the Government has had regular discussions with international partners in the EU, UN and the region on the political and humanitarian situation in the Central African Republic, and has supported efforts to restore peace and stability there.

Colombia

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps the Government is taking to assist the Colombian authorities in their fight against terrorist organisations. [136769]

Mr. Rammell: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Newport, West (Paul Flynn) on 5 November 2003, Official Report, column 654W.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Colombia regarding the legalisation of paramilitary organisations. [136784]

Mr. Rammell: We are unaware of any moves to legalise paramilitary organisations in Colombia. We have concerns, however, about Decree 128 (2003) which is relevant to the peace process with the AUG. We have stressed to the Colombian Government that in pursuing a peace process with any of the illegal armed groups there should be no general amnesty or pardon for those who have committed human rights violations, and that all negotiations should be open, transparent and treated on the same basis.

East Timor

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs further to his answer of 22 October 2003, Official Report, columns 615–16, if he will publish official statements on East Timor and discussions with the head of the diplomatic service in Jakarta in October 1975. [136200]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: In accordance with the Public Records Acts the papers relating to the then Permanent Under-Secretary's visit to Indonesia in 1975 will be reviewed in 2005 for release on 1 January 2006. I agreed to the early release of the 1975–76 files relating to the Balibo case on a one-off basis. The release of these files should therefore not be taken as a precedent.

India and Pakistan

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with (a) members of the Government of Pakistan, (b) members of the Government of India, (c) members of the governments of EU member states, (d) members of the governments of EU candidate states and (e) members of the Administration of the USA concerning (i) the confidence-building measures proposed by India last week and (ii) the reaction of Pakistan; and if he will make a statement. [136352]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary released two press statements following the Indian announcement of a further package of proposals of ways to improve relations with Pakistan, and Pakistan's formal response. The first statement made on 22 October is available on the Foreign and Commonwealth Office website: www.fco.gov.uk/policy/news/press-releases. The second statement made on 31 October was released locally by our British High Commissions in New Delhi and Islamabad, a copy of which is available on our High Commission in Islamabad's website: britainonline.org.pk/highcomm/downloads/31octa.pdf.

The Foreign Secretary has also had discussions with both Indian Foreign Minister Sinha and Pakistani Foreign Minister Kasuri over the last week. Both the Foreign Secretary and I met Foreign Minister Kasuri on 4 November in London, during which we discussed the measures proposed by India and Pakistan to further improve relations between the two countries. Foreign Minister Kasuri said that he hoped both sides would implement quickly the steps on which they agree and work together to close the gap on those where there is less common ground. I also met Tariq Aziz, the Secretary to the National Security Council in Islamabad on 23 October. We remain in regular contact with the US and EU member states over our shared concern to encourage India and Pakistan to work together towards normalising their relations and resolving their differences, including over Kashmir.

Iraq

Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the compatibility of order 39, issued by the Coalition Administration of Iraq, with (a) paragraph 43 of the 1907 Hague regulations, (b) the 4th Geneva Convention and (c) UNSCR 1483. [135761]

Mr. Rammell: The Government are satisfied that UNSCR 1483 (2003) provides a sound legal basis for the CPA Foreign Investment Order. Resolution 1483 authorises the Coalition to undertake activities to promote economic reform in Iraq, in coordination with the Special Representative of the UN Secretary General.

Linda Perham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has (a) to contribute funds to the reconstruction of Iraq and (b) to develop and implement investment programmes to aid in that reconstruction. [136586]

Mr. Rammell: At the Iraq Donors Conference held in Madrid on 23 and 24 October my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for International Development (Hilary Benn) announced the UK contribution of £544 million for reconstruction and investment projects in Iraq.

Linda Perham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to help with the repayment of Iraqi debt. [136587]

Mr. Rammell: The UK is playing a very active role in achieving a sustainable solution to Iraq's debt. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer is promoting a multilateral settlement through the Paris Club. G7 Finance Ministers have called for this to be achieved by the end of 2004, and for non-Paris Club members to co-operate with this process. A moratorium on debt repayment has been agreed by the members of the Paris Club for that period.

Kashmir

Mr. Weir: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the governments of (a) India and (b) Pakistan on the situation in Kashmir; and if he will make a statement. [137068]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Hendon (Mr. Dismore) today (UIN136828).

Narcotics Trade

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps the Government is taking to assist South American governments in (a) combating the production of and (b) tackling the international trade in narcotics. [136770]

Mr. Rammell: The Government are working closely with Latin American and Caribbean countries to address the serious problem of drugs, particularly the production and trafficking of cocaine.

In FY 2002–03, the FCO's Drugs and Crime Fund (DCF) provided over £5 million in counter-narcotics related assistance to priority countries in Latin America and the Caribbean where illegal drugs are produced or trafficked. This has led to the seizure of over 11 tonnes of cocaine, worth over £662 million, throughout the region so far this year.

UK counter-drugs assistance focuses on improving local law enforcement capabilities primarily by providing law enforcement training and drug detection equipment. The UK also has 23 Drug Liaison Officers (DLOs) and three Crime Liaison Officers (CLOs) stationed in the region.

DCF has also supported several UNODC projects in the region, such as training in precursor chemicals in Colombia and illicit coca crop monitoring surveys in Colombia and Peru, which will lead to improved understanding of the nature and scale of the drug problem.

Occupied Territories

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with his colleagues in the EU concerning the expansion of Israeli settlements in the occupied territories. [136212]

Mr. Rammell: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary discussed continuing settlement expansion with his EU counterparts at the General Affairs and External Relations Council in Luxembourg on 13 October. The European Council Declarations of 17 October called on Israel to reverse its settlement policy and dismantle settlement outposts.

We fully support the roadmap's requirement that Israel should immediately freeze all settlement activity, including "natural growth" and dismantle the outposts erected since March 2001. The continuing expansion of settlements in the Occupied Territories threatens the basis for a viable Palestinian state and makes a negotiated settlement more difficult to reach.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has made to the US Administration concerning Israeli activity to expand settlements in the occupied territories. [136213]

Mr. Rammell: My noble Friend the Baroness Symons of Vernham Dean expressed our concerns about Israeli settlement activity to the US Assistant Secretary of State, William Burns, on 24 September. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for International Development also raised the matter with Elliott Abrams, Senior Director of the US National Security Council on 8 October. Our embassy in Washington continues to discuss Israeli settlements in the occupied territories as part of regular discussions with the US Administration on the Middle East Peace Process.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Israeli Government concerning its efforts to expand settlements and encourage new outposts in the occupied territories. [136214]

Mr. Rammell: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary expressed our concerns about settlement expansion to the Israeli Prime Minister, Ariel Sharon, when he visited London on 14 July, and the Israeli Foreign Minister, Silvan Shalom, on 18 July. My noble Friend the Baroness Symons of Vernham Dean reiterated these representations when she met Mr. Shalom in Jerusalem on 30 September. She also raised settlements and Israeli authorisation of settlement outposts with Yosef Paritzky, the Israel Minister for National Infrastructure on 29 October.

Regions of Knowledge

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what applications the Government has made to the European Commission to ensure that the United Kingdom benefits from the Commission's Regions of Knowledge initiative; what the Government's assessment is of whether this is a productive use of EU funds; and if he will make a statement. [135883]

Ms Hewitt: I have been asked to reply.

Regions of Knowledge is a pilot initiative of the European Parliament which is being administered by the Commission. It invited regional consortia to bid for funds, and consequently it was not appropriate for Her Majesty's Government to apply directly. We are aware that several bids including UK participants were prepared, but those submitted are currently confidential.

Science research and innovation are key drivers of regional development. The potential value added of this initiative is considerable in comparison to the modest €2.5 million funding proposed.

Sri Lanka

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on discrimination against Christians in Sri Lanka. [136004]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We are concerned about reports of discrimination against religious minorities (including Christians) in Sri Lanka and regularly raise this, and other human rights issues, with the Sri Lankan Government. Our High Commission monitors the situation closely, and is in regular contact with religious leaders. The right to freedom of religion is enshrined in the Sri Lankan Constitution, and there are dedicated ministries for Christian as well as Hindu, Buddhist, and Muslim affairs.

Subcontinent

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on current India-Pakistan relations. [136828]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has had discussions with both Indian Foreign Minister Sinha and Pakistani Foreign Minister Kasuri in the last week. Both the Foreign Secretary and I met Foreign Minister Kasuri on 4 November in London during which we discussed the measures proposed by India and Pakistan to further improve relations between the two countries. He urged both sides to implement quickly the steps on which they agreed and work together to close the gap on those where there is less common ground. In particular, he urged both governments to find a way forward on the Srinagar-Muzaffarabad bus route, a proposal that was welcomed by Kashmiris on both sides of the Line of Control. The Foreign Secretary also encouraged both governments to continue to work together towards normalising their relations and resolving their differences, including over Kashmir.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment his Department has made of the Pakistani Foreign Minister's comments on 29 October concerning the proposed confidence building measures initiated by India; what impact those comments have had on the dialogue between the two countries; and if he will make a statement. [136904]

Mr. Mullin: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Hendon (Mr. Dismore) today (UIN136828).

Western Sahara

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with Mr. Kofi Annan on the Western Sahara, with particular reference to Moroccan engagement with the latest Baker Plan. [136005]

Mr. Rammell: Officials have been in contact with their United Nations counterparts over this issue, particularly in the lead up to the unanimous adoption of UN Security Council (UNSC) resolution 1513 on 28 October 2003 which extended the mandate of the UN Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara (MINURSO) until 31 January 2004.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Correspondence

Dr. Jack Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will reply to the letters of 10 March and 5 September of the right hon. Member for Copeland concerning a constituent awaiting release from prison. [137089]

Paul Goggins [holding answer 10 November 2003]: I wrote to the right hon. Member on 12 November.

Criminal Records

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how long on average it took to process an application for screening for criminal records of care home workers in (a) July 2002, (b) October 2002, (c) January 2003, (d) April 2003 and (e) July 2003. [127463]

Paul Goggins: The information is not available in the form requested, as there are currently no IT procedures to extract this information from the Criminal Records Bureau (CRB) database. It is expected that, as systems develop, this information will become available at some point in the future.

Average turnaround times for Standard and Enhanced Disclosures during the periods specified are shown in the table:

Days

	Standard	Enhanced
July 2002	16.71	21.04
October 2002	16.75	32.00
January 2003	26.00	47.72
April 2003	12.27	23.18
July 2003	19.25	25.91

The turnaround times for January are higher than usual because of lost production days between Christmas and New Year due to staff holidays, and a training and consolidation exercise of new PNC procedures.

The CRB has been steadily improving its performance since October 2002. The increase in July can be attributed to a surge in applications during the last two weeks in June in advance of the increase in fees which came into effect on 1 July. Approximately 50,000 extra applications were received in addition to the Bureau's normal intake at that time of about 43,000 applications per week. While these extra applications temporarily increased the turnaround times for applications, the CRB nevertheless continued to meet its service standard targets.

Euro

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much has been spent in each year by his Department in preparing for UK entry to the euro; how much his Department plans to spend on preparations for UK entry to the euro for each year from the current financial year up to and including 2005–06; and what estimates he has made of the total costs to his Department of changeover to the European Single Currency. [131592]

Caroline Flint: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Financial Secretary on 14 October 2003, Official Report, column 142W.

Miscarriages of Justice (Compensation)

Mr. Dhanda: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people freed from prison due to miscarriages of justice, after serving less than 20 years, have received an interim payment for compensation; and what proportion have waited more than nine months for compensation. [133571]

Paul Goggins [holding answer 21 October 2003]: This information is not readily available. Interim payments are considered only after eligibility for compensation has been determined. There is then a target to refer any written request for an initial interim payment to the Assessor within five working days.

Prisons

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the (a) built capacity and (b) number of inmates are for each of Her Majesty's Prisons for each of the last three years. [137549]

Paul Goggins: Figures for operational capacity and population for each prison service establishment in England and Wales in the last three years are set out in the table. These figures represent the position as regards operational capacity and population at end of June for each year:

[1] Altcourse increased its operational capacity to 1,010 in July 2002.
[2] Dovegate opened in July 2001.
[3] Rye Hill opened in January 2001.

The figures in the "Capacity" columns of the table refer to operational capacity: the total number of prisoners that an establishment can hold, taking into account control, security and the proper operation of the planned regime. It is determined by area managers on the basis of operational judgement and experience.

The figures in "Population" columns in the table may include prisoners out on authorised absence, which can cause the official population to appear slightly higher than the operational capacity.

Entertainment

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much was spent by his Department in the last 12 months on entertainment, broken down by the costs of (a) food and (b) drink. [135899]

Mr. Blunkett: Home Office expenditure on official entertainment is made in accordance with departmental guidance on financial procedures and propriety based on the principles set out in Government Accounting.

In 2002–03, the cost of hospitality (entertaining non-civil servants) and management entertainment of civil servants was £72,000. This was about 0.006 per cent. of the Home Department's Administration Costs in the 2002–03 Resource Accounts. The Department does not separately identify the costs of food and drink.

Recovered Assets Incentive Fund

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which organisations, and at which level, will be able to bid for sums from the Recovered Assets Incentive Fund; whether bids will be permitted direct from (a) police operational command units and (b) local crime and disorder partnerships; against what criteria bids will be assessed; what amount he expects to be available under the Fund in (i) this and (ii) the next financial year; and if he will make a statement. [133906]

Caroline Flint: The Recovered Assets Incentive Fund was set up this financial year to incentivise asset recovery by asset recovery agencies including law enforcement and prosecuting authorities. £15.5 million a year for three years has been allocated to the Fund. The funds have been fully committed over the next three years to projects agreed by the Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO) and others, that will increase the confiscation of criminal assets. The fund is not open to bids from other organisations or partnerships.

Of £46.5 million that will be available under the Fund over the next three years, up to £38 million will be spent on funding an ACPO proposal to set up an additional four multi-agency regional asset recovery teams to disrupt organised crime groups and to confiscate criminal assets. The teams will comprise staff from the police, National Crime Squad, Her Majesty's Customs and Excise, National Criminal Intelligence Service, Crown Prosecution Service, Assets Recovery Agency and Inland Revenue. The balance of the Fund will be spent on asset recovery projects managed respectively by the Crown Prosecution Service, the Department for Constitutional Affairs, and the Assets Recovery Agency.

An additional £7 million a year for three years has been made available separately from the Recovered Assets Incentive Fund for community projects. This year £4 million has been allocated to the Adventure Capital Fund to regenerate communities. The Adventure Capital Fund Round 2 is open to applications from community-based organisations operating anywhere in England, which are engaged in specified areas of activity including crime reduction and drug prevention, and which are seeking to achieve sustainability through enterprise, while investing surpluses for community benefit. The Adventure Capital fund is not open to bids from other organisations or partnerships.

£1.5 million has been allocated to anti-gun crime initiatives. £1.2 million of this is being disbursed by eight of the regional government offices to projects that will help local communities in the most affected areas in tackling gun crime and gun culture. The money has now been allocated and is not open to bids. £300,000 is being used to support the Disarm Trust, and it is open to projects working to tackle gun crime in local communities to seek support or funding from the Trust. A further £1.5 million has been allocated to regional government offices to fund capacity building in crime and disorder reduction partnerships.

Of the £7 million available for next year, £3 million has been committed to fund community justice centre pilot schemes. The balance of £4 million is not yet committed but there are no plans to invite specific bids.

Sentencing

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many criminal convictions (a) carried a prison sentence and (b) carried a community-based sentence, in each year from 1990 to 2002; and if he will make a statement. [124593]

Paul Goggins: The available information is contained in the table.

Statistics for 2002 will be published in the autumn.

Number of offenders sentenced to a community sentence or immediate custody for all offences at all courts[1]

England and Wales 1990–2001	Community sentence	Immediate custody

2000[2]	155,538	106,187
2001	164,997	106,273

[1] These data are on the principal offence basis.
[2] Staffordshire Police Force were only able to supply a sample of data for magistrates courts proceedings covering one full week in each quarter for 2000. Estimates based on this sample are included in the figures, as they are considered sufficiently robust at this high level of analysis.

Terrorism Offences

Patrick Mercer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been (a) convicted and (b) acquitted of offences under the (i) Terrorism Act 2000 and (ii) Anti-Terrorism, Crime and Security Act 2001. [137370]

Mr. Blunkett [holding answer 11 November 2003]: According to Home Office records cross-referenced with records held by the National Joint Unit in New Scotland Yard and the Crown Prosecution Service show that 25 individuals have been convicted under the Anti-Terrorism, Crime and Security Act 2001. There have been no acquittals.

Figures on how many individuals have been convicted and acquitted under the Terrorism Act 2000 are published annually in the Criminal Statistics for England and Wales supplementary tables. The latest published figures are for the financial year 2001–02 and show that two individuals were convicted and two were acquitted. The Terrorism Act provides a range of important powers for the police to conduct investigation. Many of these arrested under its provisions are subsequently charged under other criminal legislation.

Figures for 2002–03 are due to be published later this year. Figures for 2003–04 will be published when the relevant data has been collated and verified.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Belfast-Larne Railway

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the speed restrictions that apply to the Belfast to Larne railway line. [137667]

Mr. Spellar: The details in the table show all the permanent speed restrictions on the Belfast/Larne line. There are currently no temporary speed restrictions on the line at this time.

Translink anticipate that once the track relay between Bleach Green Junction and Whitehead is complete and tested trains can revert to the line speed which is appropriate for track geometry for that section of line.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many of the new trains and rolling stock for the Northern Ireland network will be allocated to serve on the East Antrim line between Belfast to Larne; and when these trains and rolling stock will be operational in (a) East Antrim and (b) other areas of Northern Ireland. [137668]

Mr. Spellar: Translink advise that they have set up a team to determine optimum use of the new train sets on the basis of accessibility and logistics, potential for passenger growth, current infrastructure constraints and other criteria including improvement of network integration. They will announce their intentions for the new train sets when this work is complete. It is intended that the first new train set should be in operation in mid 2004 with the remaining 22 sets coming into service progressively during the rest of 2004 and 2005.

Community and Voluntary Sector

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the results of the Department of Social Development study into whether a section of the community and voluntary sector in Northern Ireland requires an alternative to lottery-based funding will be published; and if he will make a statement. [137666]

Mr. Spellar: The Voluntary and Community Unit (VCU) within the Department for Social Development (DSD) commissioned research jointly with the Community Relations Council to assess the level of access to lottery funds by religious groups and the impact on groups with religious objections to applying for lottery funding. Work is under way to prepare a summary publication of the results of the research for general release. There is no specific date for publication but it is anticipated that this will take place in the new year.

The Department for Culture, Media and Sport (DCMS) has overall policy responsibility for lottery funding and officials from VCU will discuss the research findings with DCMS in due course.

Curriculum

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the results of the review of the enriched curriculum trial in the Belfast Education and Library Board area will be made available. [137660]

Jane Kennedy: This is a four-year study and the results should be available around the autumn of 2004. Some interim results on pupils at the end of year 3 have been made available to individual schools in the Shankill area of Belfast for information.

Disabled Grants Scheme

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many applications to the Disabled Grants Scheme are outstanding; and what plans he has to introduce targets to speed up the application process. [137664]

Mr. Spellar: I will write to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible and a copy of the letter will be placed in the Library.

Eastern Board GPs

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many GP practices within the Eastern Board are (a) accepting and (b) refusing to accept new patients onto their lists. [137807]

Angela Smith: There are 184 GP practices in the Eastern Board and according to the information currently held by the Central Services Agency (CSA) they are all accepting patients, and no GP has notified the CSA that they have closed their list.

Employment

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) jobs have been lost and (b) new jobs have been created in Northern Ireland in the past year. [137804]

Mr. Pearson: Over the 12 months to 7 November 2003, there were 4,957 redundancies in Northern Ireland confirmed to the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment.

Information on the number of jobs created is not available. However, figures from the NI Quarterly Employment Survey (QES) can be used to estimate the net change in employee jobs during the past year. Latest figures from the June 2003 QES showed that there were 667,610 employee jobs in Northern Ireland. This represented an increase of 5,650 (0.9 per cent.) from the figure for June 2002.

Energy Market

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what discussions he has had with the Government of the Republic of Ireland regarding the promotion of an integrated energy market on the island of Ireland; and if he will make a statement. [137669]

Mr. Pearson: I met Dermot Ahern TD, Minister for Communications, Marine and Natural Resources in July 2003 to consider further cross-border cooperation on energy in the context of the planned European single market for electricity and gas by 2007.

The discussion covered cross-border electricity trading arrangements, electricity systems interconnection and integration, all-island gas network, regulatory collaboration, climate change, emissions and renewable energy, and energy efficiency polices. We agreed that both Governments have a shared interest in more open and competitive energy markets, reduced energy costs and improved reliability of supply; and that any integration of energy markets should be mutually beneficial.

A joint steering group of senior officials from the two lead departments (Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment and Department of Communications, Marine and Natural Resources) and the two regulatory authorities has been established to oversee on-going work on cross-border energy issues.

Fireworks

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many individuals have been charged with (a) selling fireworks illegally and (b) other fireworks offences in 2003. [137798]

Jane Kennedy: The Police Service of Northern Ireland, whose responsibility it is to enforce the fireworks regulations, do not centrally collate statistics on persons charged with selling fireworks illegally or other offences in respect of fireworks.

Fisheries Conservancy Board

Mr. Donaldson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland for what year the last annual report of the Fisheries Conservancy Board for Northern Ireland was published; when he expects to publish the outstanding annual reports; and what the reasons are for delays in publication. [135862]

Angela Smith: The Annual Report for the Fisheries Conservancy Board for Northern Ireland for the year ended 31 December 2001 was laid in the Northern Ireland Assembly in December 2002. Copies of the Board's Annual Report for the year ended 31 December 2002 will be deposited in the Libraries of both Houses, and in the Northern Ireland Assembly Library, at the end of November or early December 2003. There have been no significant delays in publishing the FCB Annual Reports.

Medical Staff

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action he is taking to protect medical staff in Northern Ireland from violent attacks. [137800]

Angela Smith: The Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety is concerned about violent attacks against all staff working in the Health and Personal Social Services (HPSS) and regards such incidents as totally unacceptable.

Guidance, recommending the successful NHS initiative, "Zero Tolerance", was issued to Employing Authorities in the HPSS in February 2000 and the Department set up a working group in February 2002 to examine the current arrangements for reducing the potential risks of violence against HPSS staff. The group reported in December 2002. After a period of consultation the Department issued further guidance and a final report to HPSS employers in September 2003. The Department has made the report available on the HPSS Extranet and has encouraged employers to share its contents widely with Professional Directors and those Directors responsible for programmes of care and facilities where staff may be exposed to risk with a view to reducing the risk of violence to all HPSS staff.

Mental Health

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many in-patient beds there are for child and adolescent psychiatry in Northern Ireland. [137805]

Angela Smith: In 2002–03 there were, on average, 31 in-patient beds available for child and adolescent psychiatry.

Physical Punishment

Ms Shipley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he will publish the findings from the consultation paper, "Physical Punishment in the Home: Thinking About the Issues, Looking at the Evidence", issued in September 2001. [138205]

Mr. Pearson: The Office of Law Reform is now in the later stages of preparing an analysis of responses for publication. It is expected that publication will proceed in the new year.

Population Distribution

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what proportion of the population were identified within (a) the Unionist tradition and (b) the Nationalist tradition in each local authority at the time of each census since 1961; [137718]

(2) what evidence he has collated of changes in the balance of communities between Unionist and Nationalist traditions (a) in each ward in the City of Belfast and (b) in each ward of the City of Londonderry, since 1997; and if he will make a statement on the causes of those changes. [137719]

Mr. Pearson: The Census of Population does not ask respondents about whether they consider themselves to be from a Unionist or Nationalist tradition. Accordingly the Census cannot provide the information requested. Information on Unionist and Nationalist identity is usually obtained from sample surveys. However the sample sizes are too small to allow robust estimation at local authority and ward level.

Private Anthony Green

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the police were notified of the shooting and subsequent death of Private Anthony Green at Shackleton Barracks, Ballykelly on 24 January 2001; when police officers arrived at the scene; when the scene of the crime was secured; when Corporal William Graham was interviewed; when interviews were conducted with each of the other occupants of the vehicle from which the fatal shot was fired, listing their ranks; when Corporal William Graham was arrested; and when he was charged. [132516]

Jane Kennedy: The police were notified of the shooting of Private Green at 14.49 hours on 24 January 2001, they attended and secured the scene at 15.15 hours. Private Graham was arrested and interviewed on 25 January 2001 for unlawful wounding. Interviews took place with three non-commissioned officers on 24 January and statements were obtained on 25 January 2001. Private Graham reported back on bail on 14 February 2001 and was re-arrested for the offence of manslaughter. He was released from police custody to be dealt with by way of report to the Department of Public Prosecutions and was committed for trial on 5 December 2001.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps were taken to secure weapons and ammunition following the fatal shooting of Private Anthony Green on 24 January 2001. [132517]

Jane Kennedy: The offending firearm, magazine and spent case were secured in situ and a full forensic examination of the scene was conducted. Following that, the firearm, magazine and spent case were packaged and forwarded to the forensic science laboratory for examination and testing.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many witness statements were taken in the investigation of the shooting of Private Anthony Green on 24 January 2001. [132518]

Jane Kennedy: A total of 24 witness statements were taken.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when Detective Sergeant Doherty was informed that questions in the House had been asked concerning the death of Private Anthony Green; and what authorisation was subsequently sought to discuss this with a bereaved relative on 29 June 2001. [132519]

Jane Kennedy: Detective Sergeant Doherty became aware that questions in the House had been asked shortly after they had been tabled. As the family liaison officer he spoke to Private Green's wife and his mother, to inform them that these matters were of interest to hon. Members.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland in whose custody and at what location the pages of the occurrence log for the Shackleton Barracks, Ballykelly covering 24 January 2001 are. [132520]

Jane Kennedy: The original watch keeper's log for 24 January 2001 is held in military archives at HQNI Lisburn.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what rank of officer was responsible for liaison with the family of Private Anthony Green following the fatal shooting on 24 January 2001; what the reasons were for the cancellation of the meeting with the mother of the deceased arranged for 24 September; what measures are planned to compensate Mrs. Green financially for the costs incurred in taking off time from work and arranging travel to Northern Ireland; and if he will ensure that arrangements are made for a new appointment. [132521]

Jane Kennedy: Detective Sergeant Doherty was the deputy senior investigation officer in this case and also acted in the role of family liaison officer updating the family on a regular basis. On 12 September 2003 the police were contacted by the Northern Echo newspaper and asked to respond to what appeared to be a complaint that police had failed to fully investigate her son's death. It was decided to postpone the meeting until it was clear what the precise nature of the allegations were. The meeting with Private Anthony Green's mother was postponed on 22 September, through her solicitors who undertook to inform their client.

I am advised by the Chief Constable of the PSNI that no request for a further meeting has been received, and that the police are available to discuss any outstanding matters of concern with the family. I understand that they have been in touch with Mrs. Green's solicitors in October with a view to arranging a meeting. The matter of compensation has not previously been raised by Mrs. Green or her solicitors but will certainly be considered by the PSNI if she supplies details along with properly receipted documentation for any financial loss incurred.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the cost was of the investigation into the death of Private Anthony Green. [132522]

Jane Kennedy: No costing programme was required to be kept in respect of this particular investigation and this could be obtained now only at disproportionate cost.

Secondary Schools

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the secondary schools which have (a) increased their intake by more than 10 per cent. and (b) reduced their intake by more than 10 per cent. since 1997. [137715]

Smoking

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to ban smoking on trains. [137810]

Mr. Spellar: Translink has advised that there has been a smoking ban on trains since April 1997.

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what his policy is on smoking in public houses in Northern Ireland. [137811]

Angela Smith: The policy on smoking in public houses in Northern Ireland is driven by the Public Places Charter, launched by the Federation of the Retail Licensed Trade in October 2000. To date, over 700 licensed premises have signed up to the Charter which aims to encourage venues to improve provision for non-smokers as well as overall air quality. Potential customers are able to make informed choice by identifying the smoking policies in public houses and restaurants through appropriate signage.

The Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety published a five year Tobacco Action Plan in July 2003. The Plan identifies 24 separate action points which are being taken forward by an Implementation Group. These include actions to promote the provision of smoke-free public places.

Social Housing

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many social housing properties (a) are vacant and (b) have been constructed in the last five years in each local government area in Northern Ireland. [137714]

Mr. Spellar: At 30 September 2003 the Housing Executive had 6,041 vacant properties. At 31 March 2003 registered house associations had 1,208 vacant properties.

The attached table details the number of social houses completed in the five year period 1998–99 to 2002–03.

Work-related Stress

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many cases of work-related stress have been reported in his Department in each of the last three years; how much compensation has been paid to employees; how many work days have been lost due to work-related stress, and at what cost; what procedures have been put in place to reduce work-related stress, and at what cost; and if he will make a statement. [136848]

Mr. Pearson: The information requested is not held and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

CABINET OFFICE

Spam E-mails

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what action he is taking to tackle spam e-mails as they affect e-government. [137907]

Mr. Timms: Junk e-mail or spam is a nuisance to all internet users and may slow down and impair the efficiency of networks. There will be new regulatory controls here on the sending of unsolicited direct marketing e-mail under the Privacy and Electronic Communications (EC Directive) Regulations 2003, which come into force on 11 December. The UK is also active in international discussions on how to tackle the problem of cross border spam, both in fora like the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development, and bilaterally with the US and other national governments (in October this year, for instance, Andrew Finder, the E-Envoy, took part in a visit to Washington to talk to US legislators and officials about spam issues).

CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

Bankruptcy

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs if he will make a statement on the current costs for which (a) a company, (b) a creditor and (c) a debtor is responsible when petitioning for bankruptcy; how much revenue has been generated from the costs of administering (i) company winding up petitions, (ii) creditors' bankruptcy petitions and (iii) debtors bankruptcy petitions in each year since 1997, broken down by (A) nation and (B) region of the United Kingdom; and what plans he has to undertake a review of these costs. [137844]

Mr. Leslie: The cost of insolvency from the point of view of the parties is made up of (a) fees charged by the Court Service, an executive agency of the Department for Constitutional Affairs, on issue and subsequent steps in the court proceedings; (b) fees charged by the Insolvency Service (part of the DTI); (c) lawyers and accountants fees.

My Department is not in a position to provide a breakdown of (a-c) from the point of view of the parties to the proceedings, either nationally or locally as it deals only with the part of the process relevant to (a).

The fees currently payable (relevant to (a) above) on issue of proceedings are:

Debtor's Petition: £140

Creditor's Petition: £180

Winding up Petition: £180

Further fees may be payable during the course of the proceedings depending on the steps taken by parties. Those unable to pay the fees and in receipt of specified means tested benefits may claim exemption. Those not qualifying for exemption may apply for remission on grounds of hardship.

Lists of the fees payable on issue of insolvency proceedings (and the exemption and remission provisions) are published annually in the Civil Court Practice. Prior to the Civil Justice Reforms of April 1999 the same information was published annually in the County Court Practice and Supreme Court Practice. All of these publications are available in the Library of both Houses.

Figures on cost and income in insolvency proceedings (relevant to (a) above) are published in the Court Service Annual Report and Accounts. In the latest edition, 2002–03 (page 51), the cost of insolvency to the Court Service was put at £9,259,000. Income was put at £7,103,000. The Court Service Annual Report and Accounts is available in the Library of both Houses and on the internet www.courtservice.gov.uk/about_us/our_performance/annual report_02_03_contents.htm.

The Secretary of State and Lord Chancellor has no plan to carry out a review of the total cost of insolvency from the point of view of the parties to the proceedings.

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs in how many petitions for debtors' bankruptcy in each year since 1997 the court fee was waived because the petitioner was receiving on benefits, broken down by nation and region. [137843]

Mr. Leslie: Figures collected centrally relating to the number of applications for fee exemption and/or remission are not broken down into specific insolvency petition type and do not include the reasons therefore. They have been collected since April 1998 and only relate to the county courts in England and Wales.

The overall number of applications for fee exemption/remission for insolvency petitions since April 1998, by court and region, are provided in the following table.

Applications for fee exemption/remission in Insolvency petitions made in the county courts

Court Buildings

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs how much was spent on (a) repairs to and (b) staffing costs in court buildings in (i) Lancashire and (ii) Chorley, broken down by court in the last year for which figures are available. [137507]

Mr. Leslie: The actual expenditure on staffing costs and repairs to buildings is set out in the following table.

	Total expenditure on staffing costs	Total expenditure on maintenance/ repairs
Preston County Court	564,509	58,144

Legal Aid

Ms Keeble: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs how much was paid out in (a) immigration and asylum legal aid and (b) total legal aid in (i) England and (ii) the East Midlands in each year since April 2000. [133180]

Mr. Lammy [holding answer 29 October 2003]: Legal aid payments are made by the Legal Services Commission, and for criminal legal aid in the higher courts, by the Court Service. Information about such payments will include work done outside the area and will also include payments to practitioners based outside the area. It is therefore not possible readily to identify separately payments relating to work done within a particular region. The figures given for the East Midlands are therefore estimates based on payments processed by the relevant Legal Services Commission Area Office and Court Service Office.

Legal aid expenditure for immigration and asylum[1] for the whole of England and Wales, compared to the East Midlands was as follows:

£ million

	England and Wales[2]	East Midlands
2000–01	81.1	2.1
2001–02	129.4	3.1
2002–03	176.2	4.4

Expenditure for all legal aid for the whole of England and Wales compared to the East Midlands was as follows:

£ million

	England and Wales[2]	East Midlands
2000–01	1,664.4	102.6
2001–02	1,716.9	103.5
2002–03	1,908.6	117.8

[1] Expenditure for immigration and asylum are the latest estimates and may differ slightly from previous figures given.
[2] Legal aid is administered nationally by the Legal Services Commission and the Court Service within England and Wales. In order to reduce the inaccuracies of regional estimates, payments made by offices within Wales have been included.

Magistrates Courts (Merseyside)

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs if he will make a statement on the collection of fines imposed by magistrates courts on Merseyside. [137376]

Mr. Leslie: The performance of the Merseyside Magistrates Courts (MCCs) in the collection of fines has not been satisfactory. However, there has been a steady improvement in the performance of the MCC over the last 12 months indicated by an 8 per cent. point increase from 31 per cent. in the corresponding quarter one figure in 2002–03. Merseyside MCC is one of the 12 MCCs that has been selected as needing support in driving up fine enforcement performance, and is now part of a Targeted Interventions Project.

Work-related Stress

Dr. Cable: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs how many cases of work related stress have been reported in his Department in each of the last three years; how much compensation has been paid to employees; how many work days have been lost due to work related stress, and at what cost; what procedures have been put in place to reduce work related stress, and at what cost; and if he will make a statement. [136857]

Mr. Lammy: Detailed sick absence statistics are derived from medical and self-certificates, which are completed by staff or their GPs. While certain illnesses, such as "depression", "anxiety", "general debility" and even "stress" may be indicated on certificates, it is not possible to determine levels of "work-related stress". Consequently, we have no details on the number of working days lost due to work-related stress or the cost to the Department.

However, we know from recent staff opinion surveys that undue stress at work is a problem for some staff. To deal with this we have introduced a range of stress management courses for both managers and non-managers. Our in-house Welfare service is fully trained, and ideally placed, to deal with issues involving work-related stress.

My Department introduced a wide range of work-life balance policies during 2001, enabling staff to adopt more effective working patterns to better balance their work and home life. My Department won the Opportunity Now National Public Sector award earlier this year for these policies.

We have a legal obligation to provide a safe working environment for all our staff and, under the Government's Revitalising Health and Safety initiative, we are committed to meeting targets for reducing the number of working days lost generally to work related injuries and illnesses.

WORK AND PENSIONS

Automated Credit Transfer

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will place in the Library the conclusions of research undertaken by departmental analysts prior to the introduction of benefit payment by automatic credit transfer. [137480]

Mr. Pond: I refer the hon. Member to the Department of Social Security research report no. 146; Payment of pensions and benefits: A survey of social security recipients paid by order book or girocheque, available in the Library.

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what targets have been set for the payment of benefits by automated credit transfer; and if he will make a statement on the progress towards these targets in each benefit category. [137746]

Mr. Pond: The Department has a published Public Service Agreement target that by 2005, 85 per cent. of customers will have their benefits paid by Direct Payment.

Key figures on the progress of conversion to Direct Payment are available in the Library updated every four weeks.

Benefit Overpayments

Mr. Wood: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many requests he received to waive recovery of benefit and grant overpayments in the last year for which figures are available; and how many of these were granted. [137316]

Mr. Pond: Between April 2002 and March 2003 we received 689 requests to waive recovery of benefit and grant overpayments, of which 85 were granted.

Benefits Appeals

Mr. Wood: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many cases taken to a benefits appeal tribunal were upheld where the central issue related to partial sight or blindness in each of the last five years. [137315]

Mr. Pond: This is a matter for Christina Townsend Chief Executive of the Appeals Service. She will reply to the hon. Member.

Letter from Christina Townsend to Mr. Mike Wood, dated 12 November 2003:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question regarding the number of cases taken to a benefits appeal tribunal which were upheld where the central issue was related to partial sight or blindness in each of the last five years. Unfortunately we do not record cases broken down by partial sight or blindness across benefits; the information is therefore not available.

I am sorry that I cannot be more helpful.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Caton: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions when existing Child Support Agency cases will be transferred to the new assessment system. [137000]

Mr. Pond: I refer my hon. Friend to the written answer I gave the hon. Member for Moray (Angus Robertson) on 16 September 2003, Official Report, columns 696–97W.

Civil Servants

Mr. Lyons: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many civil servants in the Department achieved personal bonus targets in 2002–03; and what the total value of personal bonus targets was. [132796]

Maria Eagle: The Department does not operate a personal bonus target scheme. However, we estimate that approximately 110,000 staff achieved a level of performance during 2002–03 to qualify for a performance bonus as part of the forthcoming 2003 pay settlement. The settlement has not yet been finalised, but expenditure on performance bonuses last year amounted to £24.75 million.

Correspondence

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions when he will reply to the letter dated 3 October from the hon. Member for Banff and

Buchan to the hon. Member for Gravesham (Mr. Pond) regarding his constituent, Ms E. Verney, of Cruden Bay. [137582]

Mr. Pond: I replied to the hon. Member on 7 November.

Disability

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what recent representations he has received regarding access to different modes of transport by disabled people. [137912]

Mr. McNulty: I have been asked to reply.

The Department receives correspondence both from individuals and organisations on all aspects of transport policy as it relates to disabled people.

We also invite comments, both in our regular dealings with disability organisations and through public consultation, on new proposals to improve access for disabled people to public transport.

Employment Demand

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what forecast he has made of the demand in the United Kingdom labour market in (a) five, (b) 10 and (c) 20 years' time; what forecast he has made of the need for (i) graduates, (ii) those with vocational qualifications and (iii) semi-skilled and unskilled workers; and if he will make a statement. [136023]

Mr. Browne: By long-standing convention, the Department for Work and Pensions does not make forecasts of the overall level of demand for labour.

Research published in the Skills in England Report 2002, suggests that demand for formal qualifications and for those with higher level skills—including graduates and those with higher level vocational qualifications—is likely to continue to grow. Demand for those with lower level skills is likely, overall, to decline.

Through the Government's active labour market policies, such as the New Deal and Ambition initiatives, we have provided thousands of people with the skills, experience and confidence they need to succeed in the modern labour market. Along with more people staying on in post-compulsory education there are increases in the number of people with skills and fewer people with low or no skills or qualifications.

Health and Safety

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what plans the Department has to increase the number of Health and Safety inspectors over the next three years. [137821]

Mr. Browne: Estimates of the number of Health and Safety inspectors who will be employed in each of the next three financial years have not yet been made.

The Health and Safety Commission (HSC) is now consulting on a new strategy for the years 2004–10. The Health and Safety Executive (HSE) is carrying out pilot studies in new ways of working to free up resource which can be used to deliver its mission to protect peoples' health and safety by ensuring risks to health and safety from the changing workplace are properly controlled. Responses to the draft strategy and the results of the pilot studies will be taken into account when deciding on the appropriate mix and number of staff (including inspectors) within HSE.

While regulation and enforcing compliance with the law remain vital elements of HSE's work, they are not the only means of achieving health and safety improvements. HSE plans to put more effort into educating, influencing and working in partnership with others (at all levels) who can help achieve further improvement in health and safety performance.

Loans

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions pursuant to his answer of 18 September 2003, Official Report, column 910W, on loans for those on low incomes, if he will commission a small scale study to assess this problem. [135106]

Mr. Pond: We have no plans to commission such a study at the present time.

Pensions

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many times pensioners have been written to mistakenly by his Department regarding nominating a bank account for future payments of pensions, pre-supposing they have not yet responded. [134805]

Mr. Pond: We do not have the information requested.

The conversion process will differ according to the client group in question. However, it will normally consist of one or more mailings followed by a telephone call if there is no response to the letter(s).

Key figures on the progress of conversion to Direct Payment are available in the Library updated every four weeks.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Arson

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what the estimated cost of arson to (a) property and (b) the economy in each of the last three years was in (i) the UK and (ii) Merseyside. [137990]

Mr. Raynsford: Data on the cost of arson are available for England and Wales and not separately for Merseyside. 1999 and 2000 are the most recent years for which reliable estimates are available.

The estimated cost of arson involving property (ie arson in domestic, commercial or public sector buildings) was an estimated £1,850 million in 1999 and £1,750 million in 2000. These figures include the cost of fire protection systems.

In 1999, arson cost the economy in England and Wales an estimated £2.1 billion; in 2000, this was an estimated £2.2 billion.

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what proportion of vehicles that were subject to arson in the last 12 months for which figures are available had more than one month's vehicle duty paid. [137992]

Mr. Raynsford: Information on the vehicle duty status of vehicles subject to arson is not held centrally, and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what proportion of blazes attended by fire crews were the result of arson in each of the last three years in (a) the UK and (b) Merseyside. [137994]

Mr. Raynsford: The information requested is tabled as follows.

Malicious primary fires as a proportion of all primary fires, 2000–02

	2000	2001	2002
United Kingdom
Total malicious primary fires	111,174	123,184	120,953
Total primary fires	219,663	228,229	218,916
Proportion malicious (percentage)	57	54	55
Merseyside
Total malicious primary fires	5,347	5,604	5,553
Total primary fires	8,405	8,373	8,043
Proportion malicious (percentage)	64	67	69

Notes:
1. Malicious fires are those where deliberate ignition is proved or suspected.
2. Primary fires are those which cause damage to property or involve casualties.
3. Data for 2001 and 2002 are provisional

Empty Homes

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many empty homes were owned by (a) local councils and (b) social housing authorities in each year since 1997. [138129]

Keith Hill: The information requested is tabled as follows:

Total number of vacant dwellings at 1 April

	Council	RSL	Total
1997	80,500	26,700	107,200
1998	81,700	29,200	110,900
1999	82,700	32,700	115,400
2000	86,000	37,500	123,500
2001	79,200	39,300	118,500
2002	76,600	39,700	116,300
2003	62,000	44,800	106,800

Housing (Overcrowding)

Ms Oona King: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister pursuant to the Parliamentary Under-Secretary's statement of 29 October 2003, Official Report, column 126WH, (1) on what basis his Department estimates that 25,000 households are statutorily overcrowded; [137905]

(2) if he will provide a regional breakdown of households which are statutorily overcrowded. [137906]

Yvette Cooper: The estimate was derived using data from the Survey of English Housing for the three years 1999–98, 1998–99, 1999–2000, supplemented with some data from the English House Condition Survey. It was necessary to use data from three years of the Survey of English Housing because the number of households statutorily overcrowded is so small, just over 0.1 per cent., that it would not have been possible to derive an estimate using data for a single year. Even combining years the estimate remains very tentative, and for this reason it is not possible to provide a regional breakdown.

Local Government Ombudsman

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many cases were considered by the Local Government Ombudsman in the last year for which figures are available; how many cases were (a) upheld and (b) rejected; what the average time taken was to consider cases; and what the average cost per case was. [137197]

Mr. Raynsford: In 2002–03 the number of complaints on which determinations were made by the Commission for Local Administration in England (Local Government Ombudsman) was 18,376. Of these, 145 cases of maladministration led to the issue of reports, and 3,735 cases led to local settlements being made. In 5,560 cases no or insufficient evidence of maladministration or injustice were found. The rest of the complaints were found to be either premature or outside the Ombudsman's jurisdiction, or else the Ombudsman used his discretion not to pursue the complaint. The average time taken to consider cases was 14.3 weeks and the average cost per complaint was £538.

Section 106 Agreements

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister (1) what the average value of section 106 agreements was in each of the last five years; [R] [137628]

(2) how many section 106 agreements have been made during each of the last five years; [R] [137630]

(3) what the average value of the section 106 agreements involved in planning permissions given on (a) call-in and (b) appeal by him was in each of the last five years. [R] [137626]

Keith Hill: The information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, a study by John Henneberry and Heather Campbell of Sheffield University, published in 2001, estimated the average value of planning obligations as £148,730 in north England and £753,830 in south England. It also estimated that about 1.5 per cent. of planning applications in England involve a section 106 agreement. In 2001–02 there were 582,000 planning applications in England.

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister (1) what discussions on his policy towards section 106 agreements he has had in the last three months with (a) the leaders of London boroughs, (b) the Mayor of London, (c) the Town and Country Planning Association, (d) the Housebuilders' Federation, (e) the Leader of Manchester City Council, (f) the construction industry, (g) the Leader of Liverpool City Council and (h) non-governmental organisations; [R] [137631]

(2) what discussions on his policy towards section 106 agreements he has had in the last three months with (a) the Royal Institute of Chartered Surveyors, (b) the Leader of Birmingham City Council, (c) the Chairman of the Environment Agency, (d) local authorities, (e) the British Property Federation, (f) leaders of metropolitan district councils, (g) representatives of the planning profession, (h) the Chairman of the Commission for Architecture and the Built Environment, (i) leaders of district councils and (j) the Better Regulation Task Force. [R] [137632]

Keith Hill: My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister speaks to a large number of individuals and organisations in the normal course of business, and in the process of reviewing policy.

Small Business

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what discussions he has had with (a) representatives of local government, (b) the Federation of Small Businesses and (c) other groups representing business on the effect of Part 8 of the Local Government Act 2003 on competition between local government and small businesses. [137607]

Mr. Raynsford: The Government consulted widely on the provisions in the Local Government Act 2003 and has considered the concerns of small businesses particularly with regard to the charging and trading provisions. In addition, officials in the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister held discussions with the Small Business Service of the Department for Trade and Industry (DTI), the Office of Fair Trading and CBI.

While the powers to charge for discretionary services will be available to all best value authorities, the trading powers set out in the Act will be subject to the council's CPA categorisation and only available to authorities with a fair good or excellent record on delivery of public service. Trading is only exercisable through a company structure which means it will be subject to the same regulation as other commercial bodies (for example on taxation). This will ensure that authorities keep any trading activities separate from their ordinary functions as well as promoting a level playing field with the private sector.

The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister intends to ensure that authorities do not distort markets through the provision of inappropriate subsidies to trading companies or the arrangement of preferential terms and other forms of unfair competition. To cover these concerns, we propose to impose certain conditions to regulate how authorities should engage in their trading activities. We will issue Guidance to reinforce this, to which authorities are required to have regard. Guidance on the charging powers will be published shortly. Authorities are subject to best value audit and inspection and must abide by competition legislation.

Valuation Bands (Pendle)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many appeals have been made against valuation bands of properties in Pendle in each year since 1992. [138103]

Mr. Raynsford: The number of appeals that have been made each year against valuation bands of properties within the Pendle Billing Authority since Council Tax was introduced on 1 April 1993 is tabled as follows:

	Number of appeals
1993–94	1,249
1994–95	109
1995–96	138
1996–97	142
1997–98	141
1998–99	115
1999–2000	108
2000–01	118
2001–02	73
2002–03	44
2003–04	[1]50

TREASURY

Bechtel

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the contracts for consultancy and other work carried out by Bechtel for agencies responsible to his Department in each year since 1997, stating in each case (a) the nature of the work, (b) the value of the contract and (c) the duration of the contract; and if he will make a statement. [137881]

Mr. Boateng: The Chancellor's agencies have not had any contracts with Bechtel in this period.

Child Trust Fund

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the results of the Child Trust Fund; and how many people in each area have taken advantage of the scheme. [137646]

Mr. Boateng: The Child Trust Fund (CTF) is intended to encourage parents and children to develop the savings habit. It will ensure that every child, whatever their family background, will have access at the age of 18 when they begin their adult life, to a stock of assets which they can invest in their future.

It will also help children and their parents to understand the benefits of saving and investment and how to engage with financial institutions.

Detailed proposals covering the CTF were issued on 28 October. Accounts will first become available in April 2005. It will not be necessary to make a specific claim for the CTF—access will be through the child benefit system and parents will be sent a voucher with which to open an account for their child. Where an account has not been opened within 12 months of the issue of the voucher the Inland Revenue will open an account for the child to ensure that they do not miss out.

Financial Services Authority

Mr. Drew: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the Financial Services Authority has adopted the financial literacy strategy used by the Treasury. [137672]

John Healey: HM Treasury works closely with the Financial Services Authority, and others, on issues of financial literacy.

The FSA announced the members of their Financial Capability Steering Group on 20 October 2003. The Group will develop and implement a national strategy for financial capability. The FSA has announced that, advised by the Steering Group, it will publish the strategy by the end of March 2004.

North Sea Oil Tax Regime

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what impact he estimates the Energy Chapter of the Draft EU Constitution will have on the North Sea oil tax regime. [137721]

Dawn Primarolo: The Draft EU Constitutional Treaty is currently being discussed in the Intergovernmental Conference. The Draft has no legal force until it is agreed unanimously by member states.

The Government made it clear in its White Paper "The British Approach to the European Union Intergovernmental Conference 2003" that it would not agree to a new Treaty which was not in the UK's interests, and that it will insist that tax matters continue to be decided by unanimity.

Private Schools

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the effect on value added tax revenue of private schools' charitable status in the last year for which figures are available. [137467]

John Healey: No such estimate has been made.

Tax Credits (Overpayment)

Sir Archy Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the arrangements that will apply when recipients are required to repay their tax credits following changes in their income; what the maximum period is over which repayments can be made; what penalties exist for those failing to repay; and whether repayment will be required in a lump sum. [134926]

Dawn Primarolo: The Inland Revenue has published a code of practice on what happens when tax credit has been overpaid, copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

Financial penalties, and interest, can be imposed only where an overpayment arose because the claimant behaved fraudulently or negligently.

Sir Archy Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what internal review procedures exist within the Inland Revenue for tax credit recipients faced with overpayments; and how these procedures differ from those that existed for working families tax credit. [134928]

Dawn Primarolo: Working families tax credit was a fixed award based on a snapshot of income and circumstances around the time of claim. Awards of new tax credits, however, are responsive to changes in circumstances and income and can be adjusted to reflect changes. The Inland Revenue has published a code of practice on recovery of overpayments of child and working tax credits.

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of (a) the number of cases of overpayment and (b) the amount of the overpayment of (i) working families tax credit, (ii) children's tax credit and (iii) disabled person's tax credit in 2002–03. [137642]

Dawn Primarolo: Working families and disabled person's tax credit awards were fixed for 26 weeks, based on a snapshot of income and circumstances around the time of claim, and were not amended to reflect changes in the recipients' circumstances or incomes during this period. Provided the award was based on accurate information, overpayments did not arise. Children's tax credit is not a payment; it is a tax allowance which reduces a taxpayer's overall tax liability for the year.

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the Inland Revenue will publish the code of practice on overpayment of tax credits. [137643]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 10 November 2003]: The Inland Revenue is today publishing a Code of Practice on what happens when too much tax credit has been paid. Copies are available in the Library of the House.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) in what circumstances overpayments of tax credits are (a) recovered within the tax year in which they occurred and (b) recovered in the following tax year by means of a reduction in tax credit payments; [132597]

(2) how many recipients of tax credits have been overpaid and issued with demands for lump sum repayments; [132598]

John Thurso: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many recipients of tax credits in Scotland have been (a) overpaid and (b) issued with demands for lump sum repayments. [135934]

Dawn Primarolo: During the tax year, a tax credit award can be amended to reflect changes in claimants' circumstances or because an overpayment is likely to arise at the end of the year. This may mean that payments are reduced or that no further payments are made because too much has been paid out already. To make sure that payments are not reduced to a level that would cause hardship, however, the Inland Revenue makes additional payments if that would be the case.

Overpayments of tax credit are identified when tax credit entitlement is finalised after the end of that year. In addition, overpayments can be identified when, as part of their compliance activities, the Inland Revenue terminate a tax credits award because the claimant had never in fact been entitled to tax credit. In these cases, the overpayment may be recovered as soon as the award is terminated. Around 700 requests for payment in such cases had been made by the end of October, including around 100 to families in Scotland.

The Inland Revenue is today publishing a Code of Practice on what happens when too much tax credit has been paid. The Code will also cover the circumstances in which the Revenue will not seek to recover a debt, for example, in cases of hardship. A copy of the Code has been placed in the House of Commons Library.

Tax Returns

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer pursuant to his written answer of 3 November 2003, Official Report, column 458W, on self-assessment, what information he has collated on the reasons for the increase in notices to file. [138021]

Dawn Primarolo: The 'notices to file' are served to those that:

Have previously filed electronically through their agent and the agents Electronic Lodgment Service (ELS).

Filed electronically by the internet.

Have previously submitted a substitute return. These are paper returns provided by a third party, often a software developer, which have been formally approved by the Inland Revenue.

The number of 'notices to file' have increased due to the increase in the number of people filing over the internet and through their agents who use the internet service and the Electronic Lodgement Service.

VAT Registrations

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the number of (a) new businesses, (b) business closures and (c) companies registered for value added tax in each year since 1996–97. [137602]

Nigel Griffiths: I have been asked to reply.

The numbers of businesses that registered and de-registered for VAT in each calendar year since 1996, and the number of businesses that were registered at the start of each of these years (stocks), in the United Kingdom, are available at www.sbs.gov.uk/statistics/vatstats.php, and are as follows:

	Registrations	De-registrations	Stocks
1996	171,005	154,630	1,629,165
1997	187,690	151,900	1,645,540
1998	187,515	153,450	1,681,335
1999	181,370	160,410	1,715,395
2000	184,035	165,475	1,736,360
2001	174,620	167,185	1,754,915
2002	175,800	176,040	1,762,355
2003	[1]—	[1]—	1,762,110

These figures for the number of businesses comprise companies, partnerships and sole traders. Figures are not available for the number of companies alone.

LEADER OF THE HOUSE

COSAC

Llew Smith: To ask the Leader of the House what evaluation he has made of the proposals put forward by the Conference of Community and European Affairs Committees of Parliaments of the European Union (COSAC) in respect of the relative powers of national Parliaments. [138068]

Mr. Hain: I am aware of COSAC's Contribution of 7 October, and have noted that it proposes that all Parliaments within the EU should hold simultaneous debates on the Commission's legislative and work programme. I shall consider further, in discussion with colleagues, what forum might be most appropriate for debate of the Commission's programme.

I note that the Contribution also endorses the provisions in the draft constitutional treaty for direct transfer of Commission documentation to national Parliaments and for an "early-warning mechanism" by which national Parliaments would be able to present a reasoned opinion if they felt that legislative proposals breached the principle of subsidiarity. The Government strongly support these provisions.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL

Libel

Norman Baker: To ask the Solicitor-General what guidance the Attorney-General has issued to judges in respect of the appropriateness of agreeing to injunctions to prevent a potential libel. [138582]

The Solicitor-General: The Attorney-General has not issued any such guidance.

Mr. Alexander: The responsibility for the provision of ministerial cars and drivers has been delegated under the terms of the Framework Document to the Government Car Despatch Agency. I asked its Chief Executive, Mr. Nick Matheson to write to the hon. Member. A copy of his letter has been placed in the Libraries of the House.

The lists include details of the cost of trips involving charter and RAF flights. Copies of the lists covering the period 2 May 1997 to 31 March 2003 are available in the Libraries of the House.

All official travel in my Department is undertaken strictly in accordance with the rules contained in the Cabinet Office Management Code. All Ministerial travel is undertaken fully in accordance with the rules set out in the 'Ministerial Code' and 'Travel by Ministers', copies of which are available in the Libraries of the House.

Dr Walter King

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when she will reply to the letters from the hon. Member for Totnes of 16 June and 30 July concerning Dr. Walter King of Dart Sensors Ltd, Totnes, Devon; and what the reasons are for the delay. [132590]

Mr. Mike O'Brien [holding answer 20 October 2003]: A reply was sent directly to Dr. Walter King of Dart Sensors in September. I apologise that due to an administrative oversight, a copy was not sent to the hon. Member at the time. A copy of this letter has now been forwarded to the hon. Member.

Employment Discrimination

Mr. Borrow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what interim measures she plans to put in place to tackle discrimination on the grounds of (a) sexual orientation, (b) religious belief and (c) age in advance of the establishment of a Commission for Equality and Human Rights in 2006. [137465]

Jacqui Smith: Regulations to prohibit discrimination at work on the grounds of sexual orientation and religion or belief come into force on 1 and 2 December 2003. We are working to ensure that employers, individuals and intermediaries have access to information and advice about the Regulations. A guide to the sexual orientation and religion or belief regulations has been available on the DTI website since the summer. Acas has just published practical workplace guidance on implementing the new legislation, after extensive consultation with a wide range of bodies concerned with employment issues, including the TUC and CBI.

This guidance has been available in draft form on the Acas website since the summer. In addition, DTI is raising awareness with intermediaries, including through regional events and by making available funds for which organisations from advisory, faith and lesbian, gay, bisexual backgrounds have been able to bid to provide relevant training. Acas are conducting a programme of training for intermediaries and employers.

We are currently considering the position for the age strand, which is due to come into force in October 2006.

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether atheists are to be entitled to the same holiday allowance as religious employees under forthcoming EU legislation. [137611]

Jacqui Smith: The Employment Equality (Religion or Belief) 2003 regulations, which come into force on 2 December 2003, do not introduce rights for additional time off but will prohibit discrimination on grounds of religion or belief (including atheism). Employers will be required to treat people in an even handed way. If staff want time off for religious festivals employers will have to consider it in the way they would any other request for leave.

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether, under the proposed European legislation to protect homosexual employees from discrimination, employers will be expected to identify the sexual orientation of their staff. [137645]

Jacqui Smith: No, other than in the very limited circumstances where being of a particular sexual orientation is a genuine occupational requirement for a job. If such a case arises, the employer may have to ask applicants and employees about their sexual orientation in order to find out if they are able to perform the functions of the job in question.

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if she will make a statement on the proposed Employment Equality (Sexual Orientation) Regulations 2003;. [137609]

(2) if she will make a statement on the proposed Employment Equality (Religion or Belief) Regulations 2003. [137610]

Mr. Sutcliffe: The Employment Equality (Sexual Orientation) and Employment Equality (Religion or Belief) Regulations 2003, which come into force on 1 and 2 December 2003, are a major step forward in combating discrimination at work.

For the first time the Regulations will put in place protection against discrimination and harassment on the ground of sexual orientation and religion or belief in workplaces in England, Scotland and Wales. The Regulations were developed following widespread consultation since 2000 and they implement the Employment Discrimination Directive of November 2000.

EU Energy Chapter

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate she has made of the impact of the Energy Chapter of the Draft EU Constitituion on private sector investment in the North Sea oil and gas fields; and what representations she has received. [137650]

Mr. Timms: The Department has made an assessment of the potential impact of the draft Constitution on the Department's powers to regulate recovery of hydrocarbons from the UK Continental Shelf. The potential impact of such changes on future private sector investment is a matter of some debate—not least owing to the changing roles of established players and a number of new entrants. There is considerable Community competence already in the field of energy, and a number of Directives and Regulations have been brought forward in the areas of energy and environment, often under qualified majority voting. Nevertheless, the Government will only agree to an extension of competence in energy policy if it is consistent with the UK interest, and a number of organisations with UK oil and gas interests have made representations to Ministers.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what impact she estimates the Energy Chapter of the Draft EU Constitution will have on the North Sea oil licensing regime. [137722]

Mr. Timms: EU competence in energy matters, including natural resources, will fall under Article 111-157 of the draft Constitutional Treaty, with voting by qualified majority. There is considerable Community competence already in the field of energy, and a number of Directives and Regulations have been brought forward in the areas of energy and environment, often under qualified majority voting. There is a carve out to preserve "Member State's choice between different energy sources and the general structure of its energy supply", where our understanding is that the EU would have to act by unanimity. Discussions on the draft Treaty are continuing in the framework of the Intergovernmental Conference: the UK Government would not agree to any proposals that was inconsistent with UK energy interest.

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what effect she estimates the proposed energy chapter in the European Union constitution will have on licensing arrangements for the exploitation of the UK's offshore oil and gas. [137760]

Mr. Timms: EU competence in energy matters, including natural resources, will fall under Article 111-157 of the draft Constitutional Treaty, with voting by qualified majority. There is considerable Community competence already in the field of energy, and a number of Directives and Regulations have been brought forward in the areas of energy and environment, often under qualified majority voting. There is a carve out of preserve "Member State's Choice between different energy sources and the general structure of its energy supply", where our understanding is that the EU would have to act by unanimity. Discussions on the draft Treaty are continuing in the framework of the Intergovernmental Conference: the UK Government would not agree to any proposal that was inconsistent with UK energy interests.

Exports Licences (Morocco)

Jeremy Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will list the arms export licences applied for, and her decision on each, for export of arms to Morocco in each of the past five years; and what her policy is towards such applications. [136512]

Nigel Griffiths: Details of all relevant export licences issued and refused are published by destination in the Government's Annual Reports on Strategic Export Controls, copies of which are available from the Libraries of the House. For the period between 1 January 2003 and 31 October 2003 details are set out in the tables, as the 2003 Annual Report is not due for publication until next year:

Three Standard Individual Export licences (SIELS) were issued to end users in Morocco in that period. The export licences covered a range of items with various ratings, are set out as follows.

Rating	Item
ML1	3
ML2	18
ML3	1
ML5	1
ML22	8
PL5017	2
SIP1	2

Four Open Individual Export Licences (OIELS) were issued to end users in Morocco in that period. The export licences covered a range of items with various ratings, are set out as follows:

Rating	Item
ML1	2
ML2	4
ML5	1
ML9	1
ML13	2
PL5001	1

As with all export licence applications, all applications received for the export of arms to Morocco, are rigorously assessed on a case-by-case basis against the consolidated EU and national arms export licensing criteria in the light of circumstances prevailing at the time, taking account of other previously announced Government policies.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what checks are in place to ensure that licensed strategic exports of arms to Morocco do not get used in the Western Sahara. [136726]

Mr. MacShane: When assessing strategic export licence applications to Morocco, the Government carefully consider the risk that the goods may be used in the Western Sahara.

The criteria that we use to assess all strategic export licence applications specifically set out our commitment to take account of the risk of the goods being used aggressively against another country or being used to assert by force a territorial claim. We do not issue any export licences where a clear risk of such use exists. We use information, from a variety of sources, to monitor the use of UK-origin defence equipment overseas. We take very seriously any reports of misuse.

Industrial Action

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment she has made of the implications for safety of industrial action at BNFL's Sellafield nuclear site. [137612]

Mr. Timms: The Department is in regular contact with HSE's Nuclear Installations Inspectorate (NII), the regulator of safety at licensed nuclear sites, regarding safety issues during the proposed industrial action at Sellafield. The site operator and the trade unions have given clear commitments to ensure safety is not prejudiced by any industrial action.

NII have reviewed BNFL's contingency arrangements and are satisfied that they provide an adequate framework for safety cover. An enhanced team of NII Inspectors will be on site during normal working hours and will be carrying out safety related inspections during the strike in key areas to ensure minimum manning is in place and that contingency plans are followed. BNFL's risk assessments are also being examined to ensure adequate provisions are in place.

Standby emergency response arrangements will remain unaffected.

Internet

Brian Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) how many small businesses she estimates do not have broadband access; and if she will make a statement; [137301]

(2) if she will make a statement on her Department's plans to increase broadband access in the small business sector. [137304]

Mr. Timms: Information on the number of small businesses that do not have broadband access is not held by my Department. Research for the DTI shows that 80 per cent. of homes and businesses in the UK are located in areas, that have access to a mass-market broadband solution.

Encouraging the provision of broadband access to the whole of the UK is one of the Government's top priorities. For example, DTIs plans include:

the UK Online for Business Programme, which promotes the benefits of broadband and ICTs more generally to SMEs;

the DTIs Broadband Aggregation Project, announced in July 2003, which aims to secure value for money for the public sector and ensure this has maximum impact on broadband availability, including for SMEs;

a joint DTI and Defra Rural Broadband Team, which was set up in May 2003 to address the issue of the availability of broadband in rural areas, including among SMEs; a £30 million Broadband Fund administered by the Regional Development Agencies and the Devolved Administrations to develop broadband networks and run pilot projects to benefit SMEs, among others.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Caton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment she has made of the involvement of British Nuclear Fuels, through their Westinghouse subsidiary in the USA, in the development of new low yield nuclear weapons. [137641]

Mr. Timms: The Westinghouse Savannah River Company (WSRC) is a subsidiary of Westinghouse Government Services Company (WGS), in which BNFL has a 40 per cent. passive economic interest. WSRC and WRS are pursuing potential business opportunities in US defence programmes. BNFL's business interests on US DOE sites through its subsidiaries relate to the environmental clean up market such as managing the solid waste program at the Savannah River Site, and not the weapons production business. BNFL is precluded by US Department of Energy (DOE) Security Agreements from involvement in the US defence programme.

Ofgem

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry for what reasons the change to the Gas Act Order made by a letter by Ofgem on 1 April 1999 was not entered onto the public register until 8 January 2003. [138597]

Mr. Timms: This is a matter for Ofgem.

Patents

Chris Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will list the 20 universities (a) which have taken out the most patents in the UK and (b) with the highest incomes raised through the development of patented products, broken down by amount raised in the past 20 years; and if she will list the 10 most commercially successful patents from British universities, giving the name of the product and the amount of income generated. [133825]

Ms Hewitt: Patent Office databases are not structured to provide information on categories of applicants for patents. Generating the data would involve disproportionate cost. Some limited information on numbers of patents filed and income generated by UK universities is available from the Higher Education Business Interaction (HE-BI) survey but only for the last three years. This information was gathered on the basis that it would remain confidential due to its commercially sensitive nature, and as such may not be divulged.

The Government have asked Richard Lambert to examine how the long-term links between business and British universities can be strengthened to the benefit of the UK's economy. The full set of responses from institutions (who have given the review team permission to publish) is available on the Review's website (www.lambertrevlcw.Q-rR.uk) and the final report, will be submitted to Government shortly.

Pebble Bed Modular Reactor

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions she has had with BNFL in respect of the company's involvement with the Pebble Bed modular reactor (PBMR) in South Africa; what information BNFL supplied to her Department on its research collaboration on the PBMR; and if she will make a statement. [138067]

Mr. Timms: I can confirm that BNFL has participated in the PBMR project since 2000, is discussing with its contractual partners how the project will move forward and is keeping my Department in touch.

Power Cuts

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry pursuant to the Answer of 29 October 2003, Official Report, column 252W, on power cuts, when she expects to publish the reports detailed in her Answer. [138025]

Mr. Timms: Ofgem and DTI are undertaking separate, but co-ordinated, investigations into the recent power cuts in London and Birmingham. PB Power was commissioned to investigate a number of technical issues which will help inform these investigations. PB Power's findings will form part of Ofgem's final investigation report, due to be released by the end of this year.

The conclusions and recommendations of the Engineering Inspectorate's investigation will not be published without the consent of the companies involved, where such consent is required by section 105 of the Utilities Act 2000.

Royal Mail

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if she will make a statement on (a) Postcomm's access proposals to Royal Mail and (b) the precedent it would set for other third party access; [138302]

(2) what the reasons are for Postcomm's conclusion that the overall effect of their proposals concerning access points and prices would be contribution neutral; [138312]

(3) what proposals Postcomm has suggested to stop cream-skimming, if the access plans concerning Royal Mail are accepted; [138303]

(4) what assessment Postcomm made of the legal precedent set by its access proposals to Royal Mail; [138304]

(5) what the reasons are for Postcomm's proposals that Royal Mail should be contractually bound to deliver 98.5 per cent. of UK mail's items on the due date of delivery; and from where this figure was derived; [138306]

(6) if she will make a statement on the effect of increased competition on the Royal Mail's system of cross-subsidies; [138310]

(7) if she will make a statement on Postcomm's proposed access cost; [138311]

(8) what evidence she has assessed with respect to Postcomm's conclusion that its access plans are revenue neutral; [138314]

(9) what proposals Postcomm has suggested to discourage Royal Mail's large customers from seeking direct access to their facilities. [138315]

Mr. Timms: Access pricing and the related regulatory issues are a matter for the regulator, whose primary responsibility is to ensure the provision of a universal postal service.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on (a) the proposal of Postcomm to allow Royal Mail's competitors direct access to their delivery offices and (b) the effect that this would have on the Three Year Renewal Plan, including (i) single daily delivery and (ii) simplified sorting. [138305]

Mr. Timms: This is a matter for Postcomm, whose primary responsibility is to ensure the provision of a universal postal service.

It is for Royal Mail to make representations to Postcomm about the impact of the regulator's proposals on its business.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on Royal Mail's proposal that a minimum entry level of 1,000 items to a single access point should be set. [138307]

Mr. Timms: Access pricing is a matter for Postcomm and it is for them to consider Royal Mail's proposal.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on how Postcomm's proposals concerning third party access by UK mail to Royal Mail's pipeline will effect its primary duty of protecting a universal service at a uniform tariff; and if she will make an assessment of the effect that the third party access will have on Royal Mail's long-term viability, with particular reference to its Three Year Renewal Plan. [138308]

Mr. Timms: Access price determination is a matter for Postcomm. It is for Royal Mail to assess the impact on its business and to make representations to Postcomm.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry who the new Chair of Postcomm is; and if the new Chair will be asked to review the third party access proposals concerning Royal Mail. [138309]

Mr. Timms: The new Chair of Postcomm is Nigel Stapleton.

Access pricing and the related regulatory issues are a matter for the regulator, whose primary responsibility is to ensure the provision of a universal postal service.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on Royal Mail's analysis of the effect on its profits of the access determination proposed by Postcomm. [138313]

Mr. Timms: It is for the Royal Mail Board to analyse the potential impact on its profits and to make representations to Postcomm.

Small Businesses

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many small businesses went (a) into liquidation and (b) bankrupt in each quarter since quarter 4, 1996–97. [137427]

Nigel Griffiths: The official insolvency statistics published by the DTI are not broken down by size of business.

Telecommunications Ombudsman

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many cases were considered by the Telecommunications Ombudsman in the last year for which figures are available; how many cases were (a) upheld and (b) rejected; what the average time taken was to consider cases; and the average cost per case. [137195]

Mr. Timms: The Office of the Telecommunications Ombudsman (Otelo) is an independent, industry-funded dispute resolution service which handles complaints from consumers about telecoms companies. This is a matter for Otelo and I have asked the Ombudsman to write to the hon. Member.

Telephone Masts

Mr. Flook: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate she has made of the number of third generation mobile telephone masts that will be required in (a) Somerset, (b) Devon, (c) Dorset, (d) Wiltshire and (e) Cornwall. [136900]

Mr. Timms: It is not possible to give a reliable estimate of the number of new masts that will be needed to fulfil the obligations of the 3G licensees, either in total or by area. The number of masts required in an area will be affected by the level of consumer demand for 3G services, by commercial decisions related to the design of the networks, by the physical topography and by the requirements of planning authorities.

ENVIRONMENT, FOOD AND RURAL AFFAIRS

American Ships (Disposal)

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) what the Government's policy is on whether the United States vessels now en route to Hartlepool should continue their voyage; [137142]

(2) what action she plans to take to manage the environmental risk posed by former United States naval vessels in British waters pending the resolution of the court proceedings due in December; [137700]

(3) assessment she has made of the implications for the work of (a) her Department and (b) the Environment Agency of the injunction obtained against Able UK by Friends of the Earth on 5 November; [137702]

(4) what representations the Government has made to the United States Marine Administration to secure the return of United States former naval vessels to the United States. [137701]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 10 November 2003]: Following discussions on Friday 7 November, between my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and Secretary Mineta of the US Department of Transportation, it has been decided that for safety reasons, the first two ships currently on the way to the UK will continue to Hartlepool for safe storage, pending return to the US. This decision was taken after consideration by the Environment Agency and Government Departments of alternative storage sites. No other site is able to take the ships safely at short notice.

The US authorities have been told that the proposed shipment of these vessels to Hartlepool for dismantling cannot be completed consistent with international rules and Community law. In this situation the law requires the ships to be returned to the United States. However, the immediate return to the United States of the first two ships, which are now approaching the Channel, would be impracticable, not least because of concerns about the weather.

When the ships arrive at Hartlepool, the Environment Agency will place requirements on them to ensure the environment is fully protected and that the ships remain ready for return to the USA. No work is permitted on the ships given the current court injunction.

The UK Government and its Agencies continue to work intensively with the US authorities to examine the safety and liability concerns they have raised to proposals that the second pair of ships, currently in transit to the UK, return to the US, and are looking for rapid resolution of that question.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what contingency plans have been made by the Environment Agency to deal with United States vessels bound for decommissioning at Hartlepool if they are unable to enter the port. [137146]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 10 November 2003]: The port authority concerned, PD Teesport, has confirmed that the vessels would be permitted to enter the port.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs at what level in (a) the Environment Agency and (b) the Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs September's modification to Able UK's waste management licence was approved. [137698]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 10 November 2003]: The Environment Agency is the regulator of waste management issues in England and Wales. The modification was approved and signed by the local Environment Manager with specific responsibility for Teesside, in accordance with Agency procedures. The decision to sign the modification was cleared with the local Area Manager and appropriate Agency Directors.

The Government have no direct role in the approval of applications for waste management licence modifications, though there is a right of appeal to the Secretary of State should a licence modification application be rejected.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs whether the waste management licence originally issued by the Environment Agency to Able UK covered the dismantling of ships. [137699]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 10 November 2003]: No. The original licence issued by the Environment Agency for the site at Hartlepool did not specifically cover the dismantling of the ships. However, the licence authorises the dismantling of offshore structures, and any associated plant and equipment.

Bovine Tuberculosis

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the implications for the UK of their proposals to eradicate bovine TB. [136093]

Mr. Bradshaw: We have announced a review of the TB strategy for Great Britain. In developing the strategy, one of the important questions we will need to consider is how realistic a goal total eradication of the disease would be within the 10-year period over which the strategy will apply, and the most appropriate ways of achieving it. We expect to go out to public consultation on the strategy around the end of year.

In the meantime Defra is continuing to work hard to address the problem of bovine TB through its current programme of public health protection measures, cattle testing, cattle controls and extensive research.

Climate Change

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will list the agencies that have responsibilities for planning for the consequences of climate change on coastal areas; and if she will make a statement. [137391]

Mr. Morley: All agencies whose areas of work and influence will be affected by climate change, in coastal areas and elsewhere, have a responsibility to plan for the consequences of those changes.

Development planning in coastal areas is the responsibility of local planning authorities, while land and shoreline management is the responsibility of land owners, the Environment Agency and local athorities.

This Department provides guidance and assistance to planners in coastal areas by funding the UK Climate Impacts Programme (UKCIP), other research and development programmes and by promoting the production of Shoreline Management Plans which are designed to assist local planners in making decisions on future development and coastal defence needs over a 30–100 year period, taking account of natural processes and climate change effects. The Department has provided guidance on sea-level rise allowances for design of coastal defences since 1989 and these were confirmed this year in the light of the UKCIP 2002 climate-change scenarios.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what estimate she has made of the area of coastal land that will be lost owing to the impact of climate change by 2050. [137392]

Mr. Morley: Estimates made by the Department suggest that some 400,000 ha of agricultural land and about 1 million properties are currently at risk of flooding from the sea. These all depend on coastal defences. In addition some 5,000 ha of agricultural land and 75,000 properties are at risk of coastal erosion. An assessment for Defra in 2001 suggested that the economic risk of coastal flooding could increase up to fivefold by the latter half of the century without any adaptation of defences. However, any loss of coastal land would depend almost entirely on the strategic coastal defence decisions made for each risk area.

The Office of Science and Technology's Foresight project on flood and coastal defence is currently examining the factors that drive change in flood and coastal erosion risk, but it has not made any estimates of land loss.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what discussions she has had with the insurance industry regarding the insurance costs arising from climate change; and if she will make a statement. [137393]

Mr. Morley: The Association of British Insurers (ABI) is involved with the work of the Defra-funded UK Climate Impacts Programme, which helps stakeholder organisations assess how they might be affected by climate change, so that they can develop adaptation strategies.

In addition, there have been extensive discussions with ABI over the past few years on the Government's flood management policy, the background to which includes awareness that future climate change could enhance flood risks in some areas.

Dairy Farming

Mr. Flook: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many farmers there were in dairy farming in each year since 1992, broken down by (a) conventional and (b) organic farming. [137381]

Mr. Morley: Data for the total number of farmers, partners, directors and spouses combined are collected annually from the June agricultural and horticultural census as a total. The following figures relate to holdings where dairy is the predominant activity, a breakdown between conventional and organic farming is not available.

Total farmers, partners, directors and spouses (full and part-time) in England on dairy type holdings

	Number
Main holdings only
1992	40,464
1993	35,665
1994	39,744
1995	37,844
1996	36,656
1997	35,104
1998	34,405
1999	33,216

1. Spouses are only included if they are working on the holding.
2. Due to a register improvement exercise in 2001 figures prior to this are not directly comparable with later results.

Foreign Ships (Disposal)

Mr. Weir: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many contracts involving the dismemberment of foreign ships have been entered into by breakers' yards in the United Kingdom in each of the last five years. [137067]

Mr. Morley: Records are only available for those ships that are notified under the transfrontier shipment of waste control system. In the last five years, only one contract has been entered into by a breakers yard in the UK.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will place in the Library copies of the assessments made by the Environment Agency of the environmental risk of the project by Able UK to decommission and recycle American ships in Hartlepool. [137188]

Mr. Morley: I will arrange for copies of the assessment to be placed in the Libraries of the House.

Departmental Expenditure (Official Residences)

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how much the Department spent on (a) maintenance, (b) renovation, (c) council tax and (d) running costs of residential properties used by Ministers and officials in each year since 1997. [134690]

Alun Michael: The amount spent on residential properties for Ministers and officials for the 2002–03 financial year is as follows:

	Costs for 2002–03
Maintenance	0
Renovation	0
Council tax	0
Running costs	276,398.01

Notes:
1. The running costs are those paid by the Department to the Cabinet Office in respect of the capital charge and the costs for utilities, the Whitehall District Heating System, security and facilities management.
2. The figures are subject to final audit.

Information about the costs of official residences used by Ministers for previous financial years is already in the public domain.

Genetically Modified Crops

Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs whether in the GM farm scale evaluations (a) commercially useful yield, (b) starch and (c) dry matter measurements of the final GM maize crop were independently obtained to confirm whether the use of this herbicide regime would allow an economically viable crop to be grown. [137656]

Mr. Morley: Such measurements were not made. The GM and conventional maize in each field evaluation were compared at every stage of growth and results were only included in the analysis where these correlates of yield were comparable and consistent with the protocol requiring 'cost-effective weed control'.

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what yield penalty she predicts for GM crops if they are grown in the future using the management and herbicide regimes employed during the Field Scale Evaluation programme. [136804]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 6 November 2003]: Any new variety of a GM crop which has been approved for cultivation under Directive 2001/18 also has to comply with the relevant seeds legislation before it can be added to the National List or the EU common catalogue of plant varieties. The new variety must conform with certain requirements which include an assessment of its value for cultivation and use. The yield achieved in commercial cultivation of a crop depends on many factors including the particular variety chosen, the management system, the quality of the farmland, weather conditions and so on. Therefore predictions cannot be made.

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on (a) research into the overall efficacy of the Liberty (GA) herbicide regime in the Farm Scale Evaluation of GM maize and (b) research in the UK and other countries on the rate of development of resistance to the herbicide Liberty in common weeds. [136805]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 6 November 2003]: The published results of the farm-scale evaluations present the most in-depth study of the efficacy of Liberty (GA), as used in the evaluations, ever conducted. For full details see Heard et al. 2003; "Weeds in fields with contrasting conventional and genetically modified herbicide tolerant crops. 1. Effects on abundance and diversity"; Philosophical Transactions of the Royal Society (B). 358 (1439): 1819–1832. A copy of this journal has been placed in the Library.

As part of the procedure to issue consent for the release of a herbicide tolerant GM crop the applicants must present evidence that the use of the associated herbicide (eg Liberty in this case) does not lead to environmental harm through the development of resistance in common weeds. This includes a consideration based on any available research findings. The issue of weed resistance to herbicides is not unique to GM crops.

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what measurements of GM crop yield were made during the recently completed Farm Scale Evaluation research programme to assess the commercial viability of the herbicide regimes adopted. [136806]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 6 November 2003]: The FSE research team measured surrogates of crop yield rather than yield directly. In particular these included repeated measurements of crop development for both the GM and non-GM crops. The data show little difference between the GM and non-GM. For further details see Champion et al. (2003) "Crop management and agronomic context of the Farm Scale Evaluations of genetically modified herbicide-tolerant crops". Philosophical Transactions of the Royal Society (B). 358 (1439): 1801–1818. A copy of this journal has been placed in the Library.

The FSE research team compared the crop development with the audited management practices and concluded that the trials of the GM crops in the FSE were consistent with cost effective weed control. The scientific probity of this conclusion was independently verified by the publishing journal and endorsed by the scientific steering committee who advised Ministers accordingly.

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what (a) herbicide mixes and (b) levels of application per hectare she proposes to permit for commercial cultivation of GM maize; and whether these differ from the levels used in the farm scale evaluations. [136807]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 6 November 2003]: All pesticide products are approved on an individual basis. Only when we are satisfied that a pesticide is safe for the proposed use will approval for that use be granted.

Growers may only use approved herbicides in a mixture in compliance with the statutory conditions of approval for each of the products.

In practice throughout the farm-scale evaluations growers used the herbicide glufosinate ammonium alone on the GM maize fields.

The recommended individual and maximum permitted application rates of the herbicide glufosinate ammonium used on GM maize in the farm-scale evaluations were defined by the conditions of the simulated product licence that formed part of the experimental pesticide approval. This specified a maximum permitted rate of 8 litres per hectare and a recommended individual rate of 4 litres per hectare, depending on the weeds present and their growth stage. Application was permitted until the nine-leaf stage of maize. Before glufosinate ammonium could be used on a commercial scale on GM maize it would need full pesticide approval. In seeking approval the necessary data package would have to be supplied by the applicant and be subjected to the considerations of human and environmental safety which have been established for all pesticide uses. Any approval given would specify recommended and maximum application rates in the same way as the experimental permit. These conditions would be determined by the Pesticide Safety Directorate taking due account of advice from their expert advisory committee the Advisory Committee on Pesticides.

Where appropriate we shall be seeking to specify the management systems for the cultivation of GM crops through the conditions imposed with the consent.

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when during the GM farm scale evaluations she was informed that neither the use of Liberty alone on GM maize nor the use of Atrazine on the non-GM control crop would replicate the herbicide use and management regimes which would be used in commercial plantings in the UK in future years. [136808]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 6 November 2003]: The farm-scale evaluations were set up to assess the relative impact on wildlife of GM and non-GM management of four crops, based on practices current at the time. They were not set up to investigate the impact of any potential future management changes for either crop, although they will provide an invaluable baseline in our understanding of any such future changes.

The decision to phase out Atrazine in the EU was taken on 3 October 2003, over a year after the completion of the last maize field trials. During the time of the trials (1999–2002) conventional maize practice predominately involved the use of Atrazine; this therefore formed a large part of the sample of FSE fields.

In 2002 some evidence emerged that farmers in the US often mixed Atrazine with glufosinate ammonium for use on GM maize crops. In the FSE, farmers of GM maize used glufosinate ammonium alone. The industry asserted that the UK and US differed in conditions and that glufosinate ammonium alone was typical of the likely practice in the UK. The scientific steering committee, whose role it is to advise me on the conduct of the FSE, considered that in the absence of evidence either way to justify the need for Atrazine to be used in conjunction with glufosinate ammonium in the UK that trials would continue as before. Accordingly, I was not advised that any action was necessary.

Now that Atrazine is being phased out it clearly will not be permitted on any fodder maize crop, GM or otherwise. However, the issue of whether other licensed herbicides could be mixed with glufosinate ammonium on GM crops remains.

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what steps she will take to protect organic farming from possible effects of GM crops. [137261]

Mr. Morley: We will consider the co-existence of GM and organic crops in the light of guidelines issued by the European Commission and a report we expect to receive shortly from the Agriculture and Environment Biotechnology Commission.

Mr. Weir: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what recent bilateral meetings she has had with the United States Department of Agriculture at which the subject of GM crops was discussed; and if she will make a statement. [138216]

Mr. Morley: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State from time to time discusses issues raised by genetically modified crops with her counterparts from the United States and other nations. However, there have been no recent bilateral meetings with the US Department of Agriculture on this issue.

Mr. Weir: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what recent discussions she has had with her counterparts in (a) the Scottish Executive and (b) the Welsh Assembly on the regulation of GM crops. [138217]

Mr. Morley: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I hold regular discussions with our counterparts in the Scottish Executive and Welsh Assembly Government on a range of issues, including GM crops.

Hunting

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment the Government makes of the environmental impact of trophy hunting of endangered animals around the world; what steps the Government is taking to encourage the control of hunting of endangered species; and if she will make a statement. [137548]

Mr. Morley: The United Kingdom is a Party to the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species (CITES), which regulates the trade in endangered species including those threatened by trophy hunting.

The Convention is implemented within the EU by means of Council Regulation (EC) No 338/97. The European Commission closely monitors the trade in CITES species and where scientific advisers judge that trade would be detrimental to the survival of a particular species in the wild, measures may be taken to suspend such trade.

A good example of this was provided earlier in the year when, on the basis of advice provided by the Scientific Review Group on Trade in Wild Fauna and Flora, the EU suspended trade in brown bear hunting trophies from Slovenia on the grounds that this trade was unsustainable.

Meadowland Protection

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what plans she has to introduce protection for meadowland. [137291]

Mr. Morley: All uncultivated and semi-natural land is protected by the Environmental Impact Assessment (Uncultivated Land and Semi-natural Areas) Regulations 2001 (S.I.No 2001/3966). In addition, many meadows are protected by statutory designation as Sites of Special Scientific Interest. We also provide payments to farmers under agri-environment schemes for positive management and in some cases restoration or recreation of hay meadows.

National Fruit Show

Hugh Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what support Ministers have given to the National Fruit Show (The Marden Fruit Show) since 1997. [134138]

Mr. Bradshaw [holding answer 27 October 2003]: Ministers have given no direct support to the National Fruit Show. However, exhibits at the show have illustrated how the fruit sector has benefited from Defra-funded research, including the breeding and development of new varieties, issues relating to storage and pest control, and the publication of best practice guides. Growers are also able to take advantage of funding opportunities that exist through England Rural Development Programme schemes, the Agriculture Development Scheme and the Organic Farming Scheme.

Public Water System

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what (a) plans she has and (b) targets she has set to reduce fat and oil contamination in the public water system. [137252]

Mr. Morley: Changes to guidance to the Buildings Regulations recommend that measures to control grease should be installed in commercial hot food premises. There are no requirements in these Regulations or in water legislation that relate specifically to disposal of oils and fats from dwellings. However, under general provisions in section 111 of the Water Industry Act 1991, it is an offence for a person to empty into a public sewer, or any drain or sewer connecting with a public sewer, any matter which is likely to injure the sewer or drain, to interfere with the free flow of its contents or to affect prejudicially the treatment and disposal of its contents. Any person who is found guilty of an offence is liable to a fine or imprisonment.

Recycling

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what percentage of household waste was recycled in each year between 1985 and 1995 in England. [136780]

Mr. Morley: Government do not have this information. However, the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy have published the following percentage recycling rates for England and Wales:

	Percentage recycled
1983–84	0.8
1991–92	2.6
1993–94	3.4

The Department's Municipal Waste Management Survey was first carried out for the year 1995–6. Since this survey's publication the recycling percentage given for 1995–6 has been adjusted in an attempt to make it more accurate, to 6.4 per cent. for England and Wales.

Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act

Brian White: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what statutory investigatory powers the Department has; which ones will be superseded by use of the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act 2000; and what plans she has for removing these legacy powers. [136126]

Alun Michael: There is no equivalent of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 codifying the investigatory powers of Defra investigators. There is a patchwork of powers. In relation to a range of offences Defra investigators (and inspectors) have fairly standard statutory powers to enter and inspect business premises, powers to inspect and copy business documents and powers to require provision of information in relation to the conduct of the business—all these powers are normally set out in the specific legislation which creates the offence under investigation. Investigators have a surviving common law right to seize and retain any evidence relating to suspected offences. For some suspected offences a search warrant is also available eg under the Medicines Act 1968.

None of these powers was superseded by any powers in RIPA 2000 and so there are no plans for removing 'legacy powers'.

Stewardship Scheme

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how much money the United Kingdom has received from the EU under the Stewardship Scheme in each of the last three years. [137258]

Mr. Morley: The Countryside Stewardship Scheme in England has received the following EU funding:

£ million

	2001	2002	2003
Total	9.4	15.7	22.0
of which:
EAGGF	9.4	11.5	10.7
Modulation	0.0	4.2	11.3

Notes:
European Guidance and Guarantee Fund (EAGGF)—these are funds allocated by the European Commission for rural development measures.
Modulation—these are funds made available by reducing CAP Pillar 1 payments and redirecting them to certain rural development schemes.
Years are EAGGF running from 16 October to 15 October each year.

South West Water

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what recent assessment she has made of the recent proposed investment programme and water bill charges for the period 2005 to 2010 by South West Water. [135144]

Mr. Morley: The Government have noted the proposed investment programme and bill charges for South West Water for the period 2005 to 2010. These figures are drawn from South West Water's own draft business plan for the 2004 periodic review of water price limits and represent the company's opening bid in what will be another 12 months of challenge, decisions and negotiation by the regulator Ofwat.

Full assessments of all company draft business plans will be made following receipt of guidance from the economic, environmental and quality regulators in early November and these assessments will underlie the Secretary of State's Principal Guidance, which will be issued early next year. The Secretary of State's initial guidance to the Director General of Ofwat, setting out the Government's early objectives for the review, was published in January this year.

Water Supplies

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what recent discussions she has had with water companies on the adequacy of future supplies; and if she will make a statement. [137562]

Mr. Morley: The Environment Agency is the statutory body which has a duty to secure the proper use of water resources in England and Wales.

Since the Water Summit in 1997, there have been a number of developments in terms of securing long-term future water resources. Each water company in England and Wales has produced a water resources plan setting out how it proposes to maintain the supply and demand balance of water for the next 25 years. These plans were assessed by the Environment Agency and are reviewed on an annual basis.

As part of the fourth periodic review of water company prices, water companies are submitting updated water resource plans to the Environment Agency. The agency will report to Ministers on these plans as part of their advice for the fourth periodic review. The Ministerial guidance for the periodic review will be published in early 2004, and cover any related water supply issues.

Wild Birds (Imports)

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what steps her Department is taking to reduce the importation of wild caught (a) parrots and (b) other birds into the UK. [135811]

Mr. Morley: The international trade in all parrots and many other species of wild birds is strictly regulated under Council Regulation (EC) No 338/97, which implements the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species of Wild Fauna and Flora (CITES) within the EU. It is an offence to import CITES specimens without the appropriate documentation and trade is only permitted if we are satisfied that the specimens have been lawfully acquired and that the trade will not be detrimental to the wild populations of the species concerned.

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what estimate her Department has made of the numbers of wild caught (a) parrots and (b) other birds brought into the UK broken down by each country from which these imports originated in each of the last five years for which records are available. [135812]

Mr. Morley: The available information is set out in the attached tables: Table A for parrots, Table B for other birds.

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what estimate she has made of the number of wild caught (a) parrots and (b) other birds imported into EU countries in each of the last five years. [135818]

Mr. Morley: Our CITES records show that the number of wild caught parrots imported into the UK in each of the last five years were as follows.

	Number
1998	4,844
1999	3,789
2000	2,261

The Department does not keep records of imports into other EU countries.

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of the impact of Government support for the Convention on Trade in Endangered Species on the volume in trade of wild caught (a) parrots and (b) other birds imported into (i) Europe and (ii) the UK since the UK signed the Convention. [135820]

Mr. Morley: The Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species (CITES) aims to protect certain plants and animals by regulating and monitoring their international trade to prevent it reaching unsustainable levels. Currently CITES regulates international trade in over 30,000 species, of which approximately 25,000 are plants. The Convention came into force in 1975, and the UK became a party in 1976. Pre-Convention figures concerning the importation of parrots and other birds are not available.

No specific study has been made of the impact of the Convention on the trade in these species. However, all EU member states are required to provide annual reports on the trade in CITES species. These are closely monitored by the European Commission, and powers are available to enable member states to take urgent action in the event that a particular pattern of trade is judged to be unsustainable.

Wolves

Sir Paul Beresford: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs whether the two grey wolves for which the former Department of the Environment issued a permit for importation from Canada in 1991 were (a) from a Canadian zoo and (b) from a wild population; which zoo was the intended British destination; whether grey wolves were classified as an endangered species in Canada in 1991; whether the wolves were imported; and if she will make a statement. [138046]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 11 November 2003]: The Department issued a licence on 9 December 1991 for the importation of two wolves from Canada. In response to the specific points raised the answers are as follows:

(a) The wolves came from a Canadian ranching operation which does not appear to be a zoo

(b) The animals were captive bred not taken from wild populations and were brought into Howletts Zoo for breeding purposes.

At the time of import wolves were listed upon Appendix II of the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species (CITES). Appendix II species are defined as species not necessarily threatened with extinction, but in which trade must be controlled in order to avoid utilization incompatible with their survival.

Work-related Stress

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many cases of work-related stress have been reported in her Department in each of the last three years; how much compensation has been paid to employees; how many work days have been lost due to work-related stress, and at what cost, what procedures have been put in place to reduce work-related stress, and at what cost; and if she will make a statement. [136854]

Alun Michael: Defra has received a total of two centrally reported cases of work-related stress among staff over the past three years. No compensation has been paid in these cases. Our current sickness absence system does not differentiate between stress and work-related stress.

The Department has set a target to reduce the number of working days lost from work-related injury and ill-health by 30 per cent. by 2010. This mirrors the Revitalising Health and Safety Strategy target.

Defra was established in June 2001. Since then, the Management Board has established a sub-committee on Stress which recommended a number of actions. The Stress Policy was updated and relaunched this year.

It is not possible to quantify the cost of this strategy without detailed analysis of all work groups which is not practicable.

TREASURY

Pension Funds

15. Ann Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will calculate the amount in taxation he has levied from pension funds since May 1997. [138339]

Ruth Kelly: The amount of tax paid by pension funds since May 1997 is not held centrally. However, the Government do provide £13 billion in net tax relief every year for pension funds.

World Debt

16. Lawrie Quinn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent discussions he has had with African Finance Ministers on debt and the millennium development targets. [138342]

Mr. Boateng: I refer my right hon. Friend to the answer the Chancellor gave my hon. Friend the Member for Bristol, West (Valerie Davey), earlier today, Offical Report, col. 409.

Private Health Care

17. Laura Moffatt: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the cost to public funds of tax relief on private medical insurance was in the last year for which figures are available. [138343]

Dawn Primarolo: The cost of tax relief on private medical insurance premiums in the last full year the relief was given, 1996–97, was around £110 million.

Public Sector Borrowing

18. Sir Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how his projections for public sector borrowing have changed since the 2002 Budget. [138344]

Ruth Kelly: An interim forecast update for the public finances will be published in the pre-Budget Report as usual.

ECOFIN

19. Mr. David: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the issues he raised at the recent ECOFIN Council meeting in Brussels. [138345]

Ruth Kelly: The Chancellor of the Exchequer attended the meeting of ECOFIN Ministers on 4 November. Discussion covered France's Excessive Deficit under the Stability and Growth Pact (SGP), an initial exchange of views on the proposed Transparency directive and taxation of Savings.

ECOFIN also endorsed an Economic Policy Committee paper on the impact of ageing on public finances, and agreed conclusions on the role of customs in controlling external borders.

Prior to the meeting there was a breakfast discussion of pension reform in the context of the Broad Economic Policy Guidelines, and a formal dialogue with all the Candidate Countries.

Over lunch, Finance Ministers discussed the economic and finance elements of the Intergovernmental Conference. The Chancellor, in particular, stressed that tax harmonisation and EU control over fiscal policy would be damaging for Europe's economic interests.

National Insurance

20. Angela Watkinson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has for future rates of National Insurance Contributions; and if he will make a statement. [138346]

Dawn Primarolo: Any changes to National Insurance rates will be announced, as usual, at the time of the pre-Budget Report.

Government Economic Targets

21. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he intends to take to improve independent evaluation of compliance with Government economic targets. [138347]

Ruth Kelly: The Government's key economic targets are contained within the Treasury's latest Public Service Agreement (PSA), agreed as part of the 2002 Spending Review (SR2002). The Technical Note for these targets, published on the HM Treasury website, sets out exactly how performance will be judged, and the National Audit Office will validate the data systems underpinning each of the SR2002 PSA targets at least once during its lifetime. Furthermore, many of the key data used to measure performance against these targets are published as National Statistics, and thus compiled in accordance with the National Statistics Code of Practice.

Euro

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many (a) personal and (b) business euro accounts had been opened at the latest date for which figures are available. [138099]

Ruth Kelly: The latest quarterly review by the Association for Payment Clearing Services (APACS) identified that, as at end September 2003, there were around (a) 76,000 personal, and (b) 116,000 corporate euro bank accounts held in the United Kingdom.

Performance Monitoring

Mr. Flight: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the total cost was of (a) setting, (b) monitoring and (c) measuring the performance targets for his Department in 2002–03; and how many and what grades of civil servants monitor these targets. [137948]

Ruth Kelly: Performance targets for the Chancellor's departments were agreed as part of the Spending Review 2002. The monitoring and measurement of these Public Service Agreement targets forms part of departmental performance management. Performance management is an integral part of the day-to-day running of the departments, and as such it is not possible to separate out specific costs. The monitoring of progress towards, and performance against, the Chancellor's department's PSA targets is undertaken by staff at all levels of the organisation.

Mr. Flight: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the performance targets that (a) his Department and (b) its agencies and non-departmental public bodies are required to meet; and if he will specify for each target (i) who sets it and (ii) who monitors achievement against it. [137964]

Ruth Kelly: Key performance targets for Her Majesty's Treasury are agreed as part of the Spending Review and the latest set were published in Spending Review 2002: Public Service Agreements 2003–2006 (Cm5571). Targets measure progress towards objectives. Performance is reported regularly, both in the Departmental Report, the Autumn Performance Report and on the HM-Treasury website at http://www.hm-treasury.gov.uk/performance/Treasury.cfm.

Information on the performance targets of the Chancellor's other departments along with the agencies and non-departmental public bodies is given in the following table.

Government Departments, agencies and NDPBs
Inland Revenue	Key performance targets for the Inland Revenue are agreed as part of the Spending Review. The performance targets for 2003–06 were published in the Inland Revenue Spring Departmental Report 2003 (Cm 5925). Performance against targets is reported regularly.
HM Customs and Excise	Key performance targets for HM Customs and Excise are agreed as part of the Spending Review and the latest set were published in Spending Review 2002: Public Service Agreements 2003–2006 (Cm 5571). The department monitors progress towards the target along with HM Treasury and progress is reported regularly. The department has no agencies or NDPBs.
Office of Government Commerce	The Office of Government Commerce does not have separate PSA targets, they are included within HM Treasury targets.
Office for National Statistics	Key performance targets for the Office for National Statistics were set as part of the Spending Review 2002 and are monitored as part of departmental performance management. They are published on the National Statistics website www.statistics.gov.uk/about_ns/ONS/2002_spending_review_sda.asp.
The Royal Mint	Key performance targets for the Royal Mint are detailed in their Annual Report for 2002–03 (Cm821). Ministers set these performance targets on the advice of HM Treasury in consultation with its Shareholder Panel and the Royal Mint. The Royal Mint, the Treasury and its Shareholder Panel, including through meetings with the Minister, monitor achievement of these targets.
The Debt Management Office	The Debt Management Office's performance targets are published in its annual business plan. The targets are developed jointly by the Debt Management Office and HM Treasury and approved by Treasury Ministers. Performance against the targets is monitored by the Debt Management Office and reported on a regular basis.
The Valuation Office Agency	The Valuation Office Agency currently has eight key performance indicators that are underpinned by 20 specific targets. These are published in the Forward Plan 2003–2008. Targets are approved by the Paymaster General and announced in Parliament. The monitoring of achievement against these targets takes place by staff at all levels under the direction of the management board and are subject to internal audit by their parent department the Inland Revenue.
National Savings and Investments	National Savings and Investments is an Executive Agency of the Chancellor of the Exchequer and as such agrees its performance targets within the Spending Review and annual planning process. These targets are published in its Departmental Report
Government Actuary's Department	The Government Actuary's Department's performance targets are published in its annual business plan. The targets are developed in consultation with the relevant HMT Spending Team and are discussed on an annual basis. Achievements against these targets are also reported in its Spring Departmental Report.

Shipping Industry (NIC)

Mr. Peter Duncan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the effects of the change in employers' national insurance contributions in the shipping industry. [138326]

Dawn Primarolo: A Regulatory Impact Assessment covering the effects of the recent change in liability for employers' national insurance contributions on the shipping industry was published on the 18 September, when the relevant regulations were laid before Parliament.

Timber

Norman Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Guildford of 3 November 2003, Official Report, columns 457–58W, on timber, what environmental criteria his Department has specified in respect of banknote manufacture, with particular reference to use and reuse of water. [138581]

Ruth Kelly: The Bank of England issues banknotes in England and Wales on behalf of HM Treasury.

The contracted supplier of banknotes to the Bank of England is De La Rue International (DLR). DLR sources the paper from an internal subsidiary, Portals Ltd. based at Overton in Hampshire.

Banknote paper manufacture is subject to a PPC (Integrated Pollution and Prevention Control) permit, which among other criteria addresses the efficient use of water. The relevant enforcement authority is the Environment Agency.

VAT

Laura Moffatt: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to reduce VAT on goods purchased by charitable organisations for export to deserving causes in developing countries. [137515]

John Healey: Charities do not bear the cost of VAT on goods purchased for export outside the European Community. Charities are entitled to register for VAT and reclaim any VAT they are charged on goods they buy for export to developing countries.

This includes any VAT charged on the goods themselves and VAT charged on any other costs associated with the export of the goods.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Drug Misuse

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what additional resources his Department plans to use to counter drug misuse. [137822]

Caroline Flint: My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary announced a major increase in overall direct annual funding that will underpin the Government's updated Drug Strategy on 3 December 2002 as follows.

Government direct expenditure

	(£ billion)
2003–04	1.244
2004–05	1.344
2005–06	1.483

The Home Office is working in close partnership with other Government Departments, including the Department of Health, Department for Education and Skills and HM Customs and Excise, to ensure that these resources are invested to counter drug misuse and deliver Drug Strategy objectives and targets.

Significant tranches of Home Office investment announced recently include £190.2 million to fight crime and drug abuse and £107 million to help steer young people away from a life of drugs and crime.

Motor Vehicles (Blacked-out Windows)

Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance he gives to police forces on action to be taken against motorists who drive vehicles with densely blacked out windows; and if he will make a statement. [137394]

Caroline Flint: The blacking out of vehicle windows is governed by the Road Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations 1986. Regulation 32 prescribes minimum light transmittance (vlt) values, through the windscreen and to the windows to either side of the driver.

In order to clarify the legislation applying to vehicle window tinting we plan to amend regulation 32 to make it clear that the vlt values apply not only to the 'glazing' itself but also to any 'tint' or 'tinted film' applied to the glazing. The Association of Chief Police Officers are aware of this proposed amendment.

The enforcement of construction and use offences is an operational matter for individual chief officers of police. The police recognise the importance of such enforcement and ensure that these offences receive appropriate attention. They are aware of guidance employed by the Vehicle Operator Services Agency.

Passports

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action the Immigration Crime Team is taking to target criminals who fraudulently obtain passports; and how many fraudulent applications for passports have been detected after the passport has been issued in the last five years. [131764]

Beverley Hughes: The remit of the Immigration Crime Team (ICT) is to tackle serious and organised immigration crime including, where relevant, identity fraud and theft. Since its inception in January 2002 it has conducted three major operations into identity fraud. Others are under development. The first concerned the identity theft of British passports and led to the arrest of 29 persons in a series of co-ordinated raids. The second involved the arrest of two men for the manufacture and supply of forged British passports and the dismantling of their criminal enterprise. Both pleaded guilty, one received a five year sentence and the other 18 months. The operation resulted in one of the largest ever seizures of high quality forged passports believed to have a street value of over £2 million. The third operation is currently sub judice.

Such operations are complex, involving lengthy investigation and demanding a high level of inter-agency co-operation. The ICT operates as part of Reflex, the Government's inter-agency task force created to combat organised immigration crime. Targeting identity fraud is a key priority for Reflex and while the ICT has been at the forefront of major operations other successes have been recorded by other Reflex partners. For example using Reflex funding the Metropolitan police have established a joint intelligence unit under Operation Maxim involving the Immigration Service and UK Passport Service (UKPS) with a remit to investigate identity fraud alongside related criminality.

UKPS records the number of fraudulent passport applications which have been detected after passports have been issued. Figures for passports detected in each of the last five years are shown as follows:

	Number
1999	153
2000	179
2001	161
2002	1,360
2003 to date	489

The significant increase in cases detected in the last two years is a result of the UKPS' access to infant death data and greater proactivity in tackling fraud. The UKPS is taking forward a range of initiatives to improve fraud prevention and detection. These include better arrangements for the recording and dissemination of lost, stolen and recovered passport information; increasing the professionalism of its fraud and intelligence units; changing the law to make passport fraud offences arrestable; investigating the use of biometrics to improve passport security; and using from February 2004 secure delivery for the despatch of all passports; and finally continuing to work actively with law enforcement agencies to apprehend, disrupt and dismantle the activities of those involved in passport fraud.

Prison Population

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the likely effect of the Criminal Justice Bill on the size of the prison population. [136255]

Paul Goggins: The projected net effect on the prison population of the implementation of the provisions to reform the sentencing framework is an increase of about 1,000 by 2009. These measures include the generic community sentence and more flexible types of custody such as intermittent custody, custody minus and custody plus. The long-term impact, once all these provisions have been implemented and sufficient time has passed for their full effects to be seen, is estimated to be an increase in the prison population of about 500.

Of the other parts of the Bill that have any significant impact, the firearms offences provisions in the Bill will provide for a mandatory minimum custodial sentence for unauthorised possession of a prohibited firearm. The estimated effect on the prison population of the implementation of these provisions, and the implementation of the provision providing for an increase in penalties for certain driving-related offences causing death, is an increase of about 500 in the prison population.

The life sentence provisions in the Bill will provide for the determination of a minimum custodial term in relation to mandatory life sentences. It is unlikely that the effect of these provisions on the prison population will be felt for at least a decade.

The restriction on bail for drug users will be piloted in selected court areas. This provision aims to reduce re-offending by encouraging drug-misusing offenders into effective drug treatment programmes. Part of the pilot evaluation will focus on the likely impact of this measure on the prison population if it were to be extended more widely. A further study is being conducted to assess the likely effect on the prison population of the introduction of a presumption against the grant of bail to defendants who have failed to surrender.

HEALTH

Commission for Social Care Inspection

Rob Marris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for what reason the four shadow commissioners, and the shadow chief inspector, of the Commission for Social Care Inspection are based in the South East of England; and for what reason no shadow commissioners have been appointed from other regions. [135663]

Dr. Ladyman: The appointments of the shadow chair and commissioners of Commissioner for Social Care Inspection were made by the independent NHS Appointments Commission, not by Ministers. The shadow chair and commissioners appointed the shadow chief inspector.

These appointments have been made on the basis of ensuring that the best available people are appointed. It was important to ensure that the commissioners together were able not only to provide an appropriate range of experience and skill, but also diversity of background. Geographical origin was one of a number of factors considered. The fifth commissioner, who was appointed after the first four, is based in Sheffield and the shadow chair comes from Cheshire.

The appointment of the shadow chief inspector, as for any chief executive appointment, took no account of geographical origin as this was not regarded as relevant. As it happens, the chief inspector is from the North of England where he has spent much of his career.

Correspondence

David Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will reply to the letter of 1 October from the hon. Member for Walsall, North regarding a constituent, ref: PO103700. [138381]

Miss Melanie Johnson: A reply was sent to my hon. Friend on 12 November 2003.

Delayed Discharge

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients over 65 remain in an NHS hospital as a result of delayed discharge. [137450]

Dr. Ladyman: 4,170 adult patients remained in an acute hospital bed on any one day as a result of delayed discharge in June 2003. 3,150 of these patients were aged 75 or over.

PRIME MINISTER

Departmental Costs

Mr. Flight: To ask the Prime Minister what the cost was to his Department for (a) ministerial cars and drivers, (b) taxis, (c) train travel, (d) the use of helicopters, (e) airline tickets and (f) chartered aeroplanes in each year since 1997. [123072]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answer the Minister for the Cabinet Office (Mr. Alexander) gave him today, at column 397–98W.

House of Lords

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister if the Secretary of State will make it his policy to require the House of Lords Appointments Commission to give applicants for a people's peerage reasons for their rejection. [138512]

The Prime Minister: No.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister how many applications for a people's peerage received since 1 January were rejected in the first sift; and what proportion of the total this represents. [138523]

The Prime Minister: None. All nominations received since 1 January 2003 are still being considered by the Commission.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister how many civil servants are involved in the preliminary sift of applications for a people's peerage; at what grade; and if he will make a statement. [138524]

The Prime Minister: The House of Lords Appointments Commission is supported by a secretariat headed by a Senior Civil Servant.

The sifting process is set out in Section 2 of the House of Lords Appointments Commission Report on the First Term 2000–2003, a copy of which is available in the House Library.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister what role recruitment consultants PWC play in the selection of people's peers. [138525]

The Prime Minister: None.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister how much time was spent in each of the last 12 months by (a) the chair and (b) other Members of the House of Lords Appointments Commission on its work. [138510]

The Prime Minister: The full House of Lords Appointments Commission has met five times in the last 12 months. During the same period, sub-groups of Commission members have met as necessary to carry out Commission business.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister if he will require people's peers to publish (a) in the annual report and (b) on the website of the House of Lords Appointments Commission their assessments of their contribution to the work of the second chamber over the preceding year. [138513]

The Prime Minister: No.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister if he will issue guidance to the House of Lords Appointments Commission to permit it to select a proportion of applicants for a people's peerage by lot. [138516]

The Prime Minister: I wrote to the House of Lords Appointments Commission in July reaffirming that its remit is to recommend individuals based on their merit and ability to contribute effectively to the work of the House. Copies of this letter are available in the House Library.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister if he will require the House of Lords Appointments Commission to seek an undertaking from successful applicants for a people's peerage to participate fully in the work of the second chamber. [138517]

The Prime Minister: It is for every peer to decide for themselves how they attend the House. The House of Lords Appointments Commission has made clear both in its criteria and in discussion with appointees that wherever possible they should contribute when matters relating to their area of expertise arise. The Commission's information pack also makes it clear that this does not necessarily mean the same time commitment expected of "working peers".

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister how many roadshows the House of Lords Appointments Commission (a) has embarked on since its creation and (b) plans to undertake. [138518]

The Prime Minister: In autumn 2000, the House of Lords Appointments Commission held four meetings in Belfast, Cardiff, Edinburgh and Manchester to share its approach and to encourage people to think about putting themselves forward. There are no immediate plans to hold more, although the issue is being kept under consideration.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister what his reasons were for re-appointing Lord Stevenson as chair of the House of Lords Appointments Commission; and whether an open competition was held for the post. [138522]

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave him on 17 July 2003, Official Report, column 444W.

An open competition was not held for the re-appointment of any of the Commission members. This is in line with the Code of Practice of the Commissioner for Public Appointments.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister if he will restrict to two terms of three years the maximum length of service on the House of Lords Appointments Commission. [138660]

The Prime Minister: The House of Lords Appointments Commission comes within the remit of the Commissioner of Public Appointments and appointments to the Commission are made in accordance with the Code of Practice.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister if he will limit the term of appointment of people's peers; and if he will make re-appointment conditional on a record of active participation in the work of the House of Lords. [138695]

The Prime Minister: No. Membership of the House of Lords is currently for life.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister how many applications from aspiring people's peers have been received in each month since the last group of successful applications was announced. [138509]

The Prime Minister: Applications from members of the public for peerages are given in the table.

DEFENCE

Accounting Methods

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what accounting methods are used to value assets in his Department; and if he will make a statement. [137913]

Mr. Ingram: As mandated by HM Treasury and in accordance with Government Accounting regulations, the Ministry of Defence applies the Modified Historic Cost Accounting convention to asset valuations. This requires assets to be valued at their actual or estimated current value to the Department. A mixture of regular professional valuations and the application of appropriate indices between formal valuations are used to meet the requirement. During 2002–03, some 95.4 per cent. of the eligible asset base was professionally revalued as reported in the Annual Report and Accounts published on 30 October.

Chinook Helicopters

Norman Lamb: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what the total value of contracts in relation to the order for Chinook HC3 helicopters is; [137223]

(2) on what date is it intended that the Chinook HC3 helicopters ordered by the RAF will be delivered to a squadron to undertake their envisaged duties; [137222]

(3) pursuant to his answer of 12 May 2003, Official Report, column 37W, on Chinook helicopters, what reasons have been given to his Department by the US Department of Defense for its decision not to purchase the Chinook HC3 helicopters ordered by the RAF; whether the Chinook HC3 helicopters delivered to the United Kingdom have since been made airworthy; whether the Chinook HC3 helicopter retained by Boeing Helicopters at Philadelphia has been delivered to the United Kingdom; where the Chinook HC3 helicopters ordered for the RAF were stored prior to their shipment to the United Kingdom; what assessment was made of the conditions in which they were stored; what assessment was made of the condition of each of the helicopters following this storage; what his plans are for disposal of the fleet; what specific role the Chinook HC3 helicopter was intended to fulfil when the original order was placed with Boeing in October 1995; whether other helicopters have been evaluated for this role since then; and if he will make a statement. [137295]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 10 November 2003]: I will write to the hon. Member and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

Departmental Current Account

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much money is in his Department's current account; and if he will make a statement. [137516]

Mr. Ingram: The Ministry of Defence, along with all other spending Departments, draws down Voted Supply at the beginning of each month from the Exchequer into its principal current account at the Office of Paymaster General. The amount of money in this current account will vary considerably during the month, typically from in excess of £2 billion at the beginning of the month to under £200 million at the end of the month. The balance in this account is monitored on a daily basis to ensure there are sufficient funds to meet the oncoming expenditure requirements in the rest of the month.

Eurofighter

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the Government's commitment to the Eurofighter Typhoon project. [138383]

Mr. Ingram: The Government remain committed to the Typhoon programme. Production of the Tranche 1 aircraft is well advanced. Discussions with our three partner nations and with Industry regarding the order for Tranche 2 are ongoing. The order for Tranche 3 is not expected before 2007.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what procedures would be followed in the case of the four Eurofighter Typhoon project partners choosing to reduce the number of aircraft ordered under the third tranche of the programme; [138384]

(2) what financial penalties the UK would face in the case of it not proceeding with Tranche III of the Eurofighter Programme. [138382]

Mr. Ingram: Under the collaborative procurement arrangements for the project, the attribution of costs and savings from any reduction of the third tranche of aircraft would need to be discussed and formally agreed between the four participating nations. No such discussions have taken place.

HMS Vanguard

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the expected commissioning date is of HMS Vanguard; where the nuclear reactor power range tests will be carried out prior to commissioning; and if he will make a statement. [137550]

Mr. Ingram: HMS Vanguard is currently undergoing a Long Overhaul Period (Refit) (LOP(R)) and has not been decommissioned. As with any United Kingdom nuclear-powered submarine that has been defuelled and refuelled, Vanguard's nuclear reactor will undergo power range testing in the final stages of the LOP(R). This testing forms part of the LOP(R) work package and all LOP(R)s take place at Devonport Dockyard. Vanguard is due to return to service during the fourth quarter in 2004.

Infantry Battalions

Mr. Carmichael: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to his answer of 3 November 2003, Official Report, column 425W, on infantry battalions, what discussions he (a) plans to hold and (b) has held with representatives of the Scottish infantry battalions prior to producing the Defence White Paper. [138203]

Mr. Ingram: There are currently no plans to hold discussions with representatives of the Scottish infantry battalions, prior to producing the Defence White Paper; nor have there been any recent discussions with them. Representations have, however, been received from representatives of a number of battalions throughout the United Kingdom.

Investment Strategy

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the Investment Strategy for his Department will be published for this year; and if he will make a statement. [137915]

Mr. Ingram: The Defence Investment Strategy is published biennially following the settlement of each Spending Review. The current strategy is set out in the 2002 Defence Investment Strategy, which can be found on the Ministry of Defence's web page at www.mod.uk/linked_files/issues/invstrat2002.pdf. We expect to publish the next Defence Investment Strategy in Autumn 2004.

Iraq

Adam Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many investigations have been held in Iraq into incidents involving confirmed civilian fatalities allegedly caused by United Kingdom military personnel since the end of the conflict. [136966]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 6 November 2003]: We investigate every incident in which we can confirm that there has been a civilian fatality allegedly caused by United Kingdom military personnel. We record centrally cases in which the initial investigation finds there are grounds for the Special Investigations Branch to conduct a formal investigation.

As at 12 November the Special Investigation Branch had begun 17 investigations.

Menwith Hill/Fylingdales

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what applications have been made in 2003 for (a) extensions to existing facilities and (b) construction of new facilities at (i) the National Security Agency Menwith Hill Station and (ii) RAF Fylingdales bases in Yorkshire; and which were granted. [138069]

Mr. Ingram: In accordance with the Department of Environment, Food and Rural Affairs Circular 18/84, development by the Crown does not require planning permission. Government Departments do however consult with local planning authorities and provide "Notice of Proposed Development" before proceeding with work that would otherwise require planning permission. Local planning authorities treat such notices in the same way as they would a statutory planning application.

Between 1 January and 31 October 2003, 15 Notices of Proposed Development were given to Harrogate borough council, the local planning authority for RAF Menwith Hill. Of these, six notices were for extensions to existing facilities and nine were for construction of new facilities. There were no objections by the planning authority to 11 proposals, and four proposals are awaiting a decision.

During the same time period, two Notices of Proposed Development were given to the North Yorks Moors National Park Authority, the local planning authority for RAF Fylingdales. Both are for construction of new facilities. There was no objection by the planning authority to one proposal, while the other proposal is awaiting a decision.

Missile Defence

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, pursuant to his written statement of 12 June 2003, Official Report, column 57WS, on missile defence, he is now in a position to publish details of the bilateral arrangements to which he referred. [138022]

Mr. Hoon: On 3 October, I placed a copy of the Framework Memorandum of Understanding on Ballistic Missile Defence in the Library of the House.

As I set out in my Written Ministerial Statement on 12 June, further MOUs on the upgrade of the radar at RAF Fylingdales and on technical co-operation continue to be negotiated and remain confidential between the respective Governments at this stage.

Note of Dissent (Directions)

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to his Answer of the right hon. Member for Dunfermline East (Mr. Gordon Brown), of 30 October Official Report, column 311W, on Note of Dissent (Directions), if he will place in the Library a copy of his direction; and if he will make a statement. [136968]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 6 November 2003]: A copy of the Ministerial Direction has today been placed in the Library.

TRANSPORT

A36 (Safety)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what safety measures he will put in place on the A36 through Plaitford and West Wellow in (a) financial year 2003–04 and (b) the next financial year and beyond. [137463]

Mr. Jamieson: I have asked the Acting Chief Executive of the Highways Agency, Mr. Stephen Hickey, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Stephen Hickey to Mr. Robert Key, dated 13 November 2003:

I have been asked by David Jamieson to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking what safety measures will be put in place on the A36 through Plaitford and West Wellow in this financial year, the next financial year and beyond.

The Highways Agency has identified a number of schemes that will improve the safety on this length of road. Many of these measures are outlined in the draft A36 Plaitford to West Wellow Speed and Safety Study sent to you for comment on 26 September.

During this financial year, signing improvements on both approaches to Blackhill Road have been completed. Works to improve the bus stop at Whinwhistle Road, providing raised kerbs, a new shelter and extended footway have also been completed. Also work is currently ongoing to install 2 safety cameras at Whinwhistle Road junction. Construction of a Toucan crossing at the eastern arm of Canada Common roundabout is planned subject to funding.

Schemes proposed for the next financial year involve the reduction of vehicle speeds through Plaitford by signing, road markings and vehicle-activated signs. The provision of a vehicle-activated sign to warn of queues at the Whinwhistle Road junction is also planned. Alterations to the width of the circulatory carriageway on Canada Common roundabout is proposed to reduce vehicle speeds and surface treatments are planned to reinforce speed limits.

Schemes being investigated for possible inclusion in future programmes include the provision of controlled and uncontrolled crossings along this length of road, and the reduction of the existing 50mph speed limit through Plaitford to 40mph.

American Ships (Disposal)

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on what dates his Department held the discussions with (a) English Nature, (b) the Environment Agency and (c) the Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs which were referred to in the press releases by the Maritime and Coastguard Agency of (i) 6 October and (ii) 10 October about the decommissioning of United States vessels by Able UK. [137144]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 10 November 2003]: There were a number of discussions with English Nature, the Environment Agency and the Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs prior to the issue of press releases on 4 and 10 October. (MCA did not issue a press release on 6 October.)

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on what date his Department was informed that the Environment Agency had warned (a) Able UK and (b) the United States authorities that the ships destined for recycling at Hartlepool should not sail. [137145]

Mr. McNulty [holding answer 10 November 2003]: I refer to replies given by my noble Friend, Lord Whitty, Official Report, House of Lords, 7 October 2003, c. 145–48. The Department was informed on 29 and 30 October that the Environment Agency were about to advise both Able UK and the United States authorities of validity problems with the licences issued for the dismantling of these vessels in the UK.

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) whether the Government advised the US ships (a) Canisteo and (b) Caloosahatchee on the courses they should take through the English Channel; [138379]

(2) whether the US ships (a) Canisteo and (b) Caloosahatchee were advised to keep to the eastbound shipping lane off Start Point; and if he will make a statement. [138380]

Mr. McNulty: The original course, which was approved by the Maritime and Coastguard Agency, took the vessels through the Casquets Traffic Separation Scheme (TSS) in the eastbound lane. At the time of entry into the Channel, Able UK were contacted by officers of the Maritime and Coastguard Agency and advised that this was the preferred route.

In practice the vessels passed north of the Casquets TSS and then joined the north-eastbound lane of the Dover Strait TSS. While the eastbound lane through the Casquets TSS was preferred by MCA, the route taken by the tugs was legitimate and safe.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library a chart showing the approved route in United Kingdom waters for United States ships sailing to Able UK's facility at Hartlepool. [137189]

Mr. Jamieson: I am arranging for copies of the relevant charts to be made available in the Libraries of both Houses.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he has taken to prevent redundant naval ships from the United States of America from entering United Kingdom territorial waters for disposal. [137147]

Mr. Jamieson: Powers of intervention may be exercised only where a ship is in UK Waters and it is considered necessary for the purpose of securing the safety of the ships or other ships; the safety of persons or property; or preventing or reducing significant pollution. These ships do not present such a threat.

Gatwick Airport

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport pursuant to the Answer to the hon. Member for Horsham of 3 November 2003, Official Report, column 391W, on Gatwick airport, whether the net economic benefit quoted takes into account externalities, with particular reference to environmental damage. [138580]

Mr. McNulty: The net economic benefits estimated for Gatwick and other south east airport options take into account the externalities associated with aviation's climate change impacts. In producing calculations of economic benefits of additional capacity at all south east airport options, it was assumed that by 2015 an economic instrument would be in place to meet the climate change impact of aircraft emissions. This has the effect of reducing forecast passenger numbers by 10 per cent. and reducing the net economic benefits of all the capacity options.

M4 and Severn Bridge

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the closure of the M4 and Severn Bridge on 2–3 November; what criteria were used in deciding on the closure; and whether the revised protocol by the steering group was applied. [137065]

Mr. Jamieson: I have asked the Acting Chief Executive of the Highways Agency, Mr. Stephen Hickey, to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Stephen Hickey to Mr. Huw Edwards, dated 13 November 2003:

I have been asked by David Jamieson to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question regarding the closure of the M4 and Severn Bridge on 2 to 3 November 2003.

The Highways Agency took the decision to close the M48 Severn Bridge at 05.10 hours on Sunday 2 November when the wind was recorded as gusting in excess of 40 knots. The bridge reopened at 16.00 hours on Monday 3 November. The revised protocol by the steering group was applied; this protocol can be seen at Table 1. The M4 Second Severn Crossing was not closed.

Table 1

Gust wind speed (Knots)	Threshold requirement (i.e. criteria set within the monitoring equipment)	Response (i.e. Action to be Taken)
30	30 Knots exceeded six times within any 10 minute period	All matrix signs to be set to indicate 40MPH
35	35 Knots exceeded three times in any 10-minute period. Leeward lane identified by wind direction	Alternate matrix signs to be amended to indicate leeward lane closed in each direction.
40	40 Knots exceeded six times in any 10 minute period	Introduce height restriction strategy, (if unavailable close to all traffic)
Decreasing	No gust has exceeded 30 knots within 30 minute period	Seek authority to remove the imposed restrictions

Rail Industry

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the benefits to the travelling public of private sector involvement in the rail industry, with particular regard to (a) safety and (b) punctuality; and if he will make a statement. [137897]

Mr. McNulty: Our priority is to tackle years of underinvestment by working in partnership with the private sector. Network Rail's programme of substantial network renewals, much of which is financed by private investment, will deliver lasting improvements in safety and punctuality for the travelling public now and in years to come. Privately financed train construction has also enabled a major fleet replacement programme which will again benefit passengers as new trains are safer and more comfortable.

Roadworks (Accidents)

Mr. Flook: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many accidents there have been in the roadworks on the M5 between junctions 21 and 20 since they began in October that have resulted in delays for drivers of more than 20 minutes. [137378]

Mr. Jamieson: I have asked the Acting Chief Executive of the Highways Agency, Mr. Stephen Hickey, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Stephen Hickey to Mr. Adrian Flook, dated 13 November 2003:

I have been asked by David Jamieson to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the number of accidents there have been in the roadworks on the M5 between junctions 21 and 20 since they began in October that have resulted in delays for drivers of more than twenty minutes.

There have been two accidents in the roadworks since they began that have resulted in delays of more than twenty minutes.

Rural Transport

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action the Government is taking to assist older people in rural communities who do not have access to a car. [138164]

Mr. McNulty: We are providing specific funding to improve public transport services for rural communities generally, including many of direct benefit to older people without access to a car. This funding is supporting new and improved scheduled bus services and the development of more flexible transport solutions such as demand responsive buses, dial-a-ride schemes and shared taxis. These developments will be further assisted by the forthcoming introduction of regulation changes to make possible the registration of flexibly routed local bus services which will also be entitled to receive Bus Service Operators Grant.

We are also making legislative changes to improve older people's ability to access public transport. We have introduced the national statutory minimum concessionary fare scheme for older and disabled people. This guarantees half fare travel on local bus services with a free pass and covers rural areas which previously had no concessionary fare scheme. Also from 1 April 2003 we have ensured that concessionary travel schemes are available to men aged 60–64, bringing them into line with women of the same age. We have also introduced regulations to ensure that public transport is designed to meet the needs of older people with mobility problems.

WORK AND PENSIONS

Disability

Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what powers exist to allow action to be taken against someone verbally abusing a person because of their disability; and if he will make a statement. [137856]

Maria Eagle: Under the Protection from Harassment Act 1997, the term 'harassment' extends to any form of persistent conduct which causes another alarm or distress, including harassment motivated by disability.

The Government recently amended the Criminal Justice Bill to extend the current law to cover sentences for offences aggravated by the victim's race and religion, so that it also includes offences aggravated by hostility towards the victim because of his or her sexual orientation or disability.

In October 2004 a number of changes will be introduced to the employment provisions of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 as a consequence of implementing the EU employment directive, including a provision explicitly outlawing harassment for a reason relating to a person's disability.

Absenteeism

Sir Archy Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will make a statement on progress in reducing staff absences within the Department for Work and Pensions. [137356]

Maria Eagle: The Department for Work and Pensions has targets set by the Cabinet Office to help contribute to a reduction in public sector sickness absence. These involve an average working days lost figure of eight days by March 2006, and an interim target of 10 days by March 2004. The cumulative average working days lost figure for the period April to September 2003 was 12 days.

Ministers and senior managers in the Department fully recognise the importance of good attendance. They are committed to ensuring that managers have effective tools to enable them to manage sickness absence, including support for individuals to facilitate a return to work after illness. People who work for the Department and who have to bear the consequences of colleagues' absence, together with the customers the Department serves, have a right to expect that level of commitment.

A new Departmental Attendance Management policy was implemented in February 2003. This aims to encourage good attendance and provide support to enable people to return to work as quickly as possible following an absence. Formal unsatisfactory attendance action can be considered when an absence reaches eight days in a rolling 12-month period. To measure the effectiveness of the policy, an evaluation exercise will start shortly.

Each of the businesses that comprise the Department has initiatives in place aimed at getting sickness absence levels down. Jobcentre Plus, which is the biggest of the businesses, has an 'Improving Attendance' task force in place. Its emphasis is on reducing long-term absences (ie those over 28 days duration), by either facilitating a return to work, or effecting a termination of an individual's contract. The Department is also participating in the 'Well-being at work' pilots that are being run by the Health and Safety Executive. These are intended to combat workplace stress. In addition, the Department is committed to discharging its responsibilities to people with disabilities by making reasonable adjustments to the workplace to facilitate an individual's return to work. A pilot will also commence shortly that will involve the early intervention of occupational health nurses in addressing, quickly, those absences which have the potential to become long term.

Casual Appointments

Paul Holmes: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many employees have been employed on 13-week casual appointments in his Department in each year since 1997 (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) broken down by region; and if he will make a statement. [136772]

Maria Eagle: The Department generally only employs people on casual appointments in order to fulfil a short term need. The information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Maternity Allowance

Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will amend the Maternity Allowance Claim Pack to inform applicants that there is a statutory time limit of three months in which to claim. [132800]

Maria Eagle: The Maternity Allowance claim form was amended from April 2003 to show the three month time limit for claims. The explanatory notes, which are included in the claim pack, will be amended from the next reprint, due in the new year.

Pensions

Mr. MacDougall: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what assessment the Government have made of (a) the long-term cost of linking the basic state pension to earnings and (b) the effect on the incomes of the poorest pensioners if such a link replaced Pension Credit. [137448]

Malcolm Wicks: We estimate that introducing an earnings link in the basic State Pension from 2004–05 would cost around £600 million net in 2003–04 prices, rising to an extra £4.1 billion by 2010, £11.9 billion by 2020 and £25.0 billion by 2030 in today's prices.

If we were to scrap Pension Credit in favour of an earnings link, but retain the income guarantee level, the poorest pensioners would lose an average of around £400 a year in Pension Credit and the very poorest would gain nothing.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions pursuant to the answer of 6 November 2003, Official Report, column 806W, on pensions, if he will estimate (a) the gross cost and (b) the cost net of savings on means tested benefits and increased income tax revenues of a combined policy of age additions to the basic state pension of (i) £10 per week at 75 and (ii) a further £5 a week at 80 from April 2004. [138464]

Malcolm Wicks: The estimated gross cost and the cost net of savings on means tested benefits and increased income tax revenues of a combined policy of age additions to the basic state pension of £10 per week at 75 and a further £5 a week at 80 from April 2004 are set out in the following table:

	£ billion
Gross cost	3.0
Net cost	1.8

Notes:
1. Options (i) and (ii) have been costed jointly.
2. Figures are in 2003–04 price terms and are rounded to the nearest £100 million.
3. Gross costs are estimated by the Government Actuary's Department.
4. Income-related benefit offsets are calculated using the DWP policy simulation model.
5. Income tax revenue increases calculated by the Inland Revenue using the 2000–01 Survey of Personal Incomes and April 2003 Budget forecasts.
6. The age addition increases are assumed to be flat-rate increases and are paid in full to all pensioners of applicable age.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Adam Smith Institute

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development on what grounds the Department agreed a contract with the Adam Smith Institute to offer support to the office of the Prime Minister; and what the purpose of the contract is. [137733]

Hilary Benn: The purpose of this short-term project was to provide consultancy support to develop the necessary skills and systems to enable the newly established Prime Minister's Office, of the Palestinian Authority, to carry out its functions effectively. The Adam Smith Institute had undertaken related work in Palestine. This enabled them to respond quickly and appropriately to this urgent short-term need.

Democratic Republic of Congo

Tom Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what conditions relative to activity in the Democratic Republic of Congo his Department attaches to the provision of aid to (a) Uganda and (b) Rwanda; what reports the Government has received on compliance with those conditions; and if he will make a statement. [136404]

Hilary Benn: UK development assistance to Uganda and Rwanda is provided to enable those Governments to implement their poverty reduction strategies, which are developed in consultation with a wide range of stakeholders including the partner governments. Our assistance continues to be subject to these Governments' commitment to the promotion of peace and stability within the Great Lakes region, including the promotion of transparency and legality regarding the exploitation of the region's natural resources.

Our judgment is that the Governments of Rwanda and Uganda are committed to regional stability, based on regular discussions with them and reports from Posts and other sources. Both countries have withdrawn their forces from the DRC. Both have also established commissions to investigate allegations made in the UN Panel Report about the exploitation of natural resources in the DRC. In Uganda, the Porter Commission reported to Government in May 2003. We are urging the Government of Rwanda to publish the findings of their National Judicial Commission and to take action where allegations are proven. Our assistance to Uganda is also conditional upon the Government conducting a comprehensive and strategic Defence Review, including a thorough analysis of external threats. The UK is providing support for this process, which is about to produce its recommendations.

The UK seeks to help resolve conflict and establish conditions for genuine development in the whole of the Great Lakes region. We are beginning a significant development programme in DRC, following the establishment of the Transitional National Government in July. We hope that over the medium term, this will become a substantial Development Partnership, similar in nature to those we have with Uganda and Rwanda.

Eritrea

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if he will make a statement on the humanitarian situation in Eritrea. [137831]

Hilary Benn: The UN Humanitarian Coordinator in Eritrea has said that the situation has improved slightly but there is still major cause for concern. While the harvest is expected to be better than in 2002 it will be well below its full potential. We will continue to play our part in helping address urgent humanitarian needs, and have recently committed £500,000 to the UNICEF Appeal.

Ethiopia

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what steps his Department is taking to help the Government of Ethiopia avoid future food shortages. [137830]

Hilary Benn: Our Country Assistance Plan for Ethiopia, which was published in March, outlines the various methods that we are using to take forward our longer-term food strategy. We work in support of the Government's own efforts to reduce food insecurity in the framework of Ethiopia's poverty reduction strategy, the Sustainable Development and Poverty Reduction Programme.

We are working at federal and regional level in Ethiopia on key food security issues. The Ethiopian Government have themselves developed an Action Plan to address the issue of food insecurity, which we expect to be discussed at a meeting of donors and government in December.

Gambia

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what progress is being made in tackling malaria among children in the Gambia. [137833]

Hilary Benn: Malaria is endemic in The Gambia. It is the leading cause of morbidity and mortality especially among children under the age of five and pregnant women. It has a significant negative impact on productivity and is a major cause of poverty. Recent studies in The Gambia have shown that malaria is on the increase. In 2000, it accounted for 60 per cent. of all out patient consultations and 57.2 per cent. of all admissions and 36.9 per cent. of all deaths, including 25 per cent. of all deaths in children under five years of age[1].

The Global Fund to fight AIDS, Tuberculosis and Malaria (GFATM), to which DFID contributes, has recently agreed to provide US$13.8 million over five years for the prevention and treatment of malaria in The Gambia, The goal of this project, which is particularly focused on the coastal area, is the reduction of malaria morbidity and mortality in children under five years of age and pregnant women by 30 per cent. by the end of the project in the focus area.

[1] Figures from the Gambia Malaria Situation Analysis 2001.

Global Fund

Mr. Best: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what steps the Government is taking to ensure that there are sufficient funds in the Global Fund to meet the £5 billion target for 2005. [137456]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: The UK has a long-term commitment to the Global Fund to Fight HIV/AIDS, TB and Malaria (GFATM). We recognise that in order to be effective the GFATM needs predictable and sustainable financing—which is why the UK recently extended its pledge by a further two years to 2008 bringing our total contribution to US$280million.

In addition, the Prime Minister has encouraged European Union member states to contribute to the GFATM. Last month the EC agreed to accelerate the disbursement of Euros 170 million to the Fund. Currently the 15 EU member states and the Commission are the largest donor to the GFATM, having contributed around 55 per cent. of the total pledge so far of US$4.8 billion.

The Global Fund is one of a number of instruments to tackle these terrible diseases. Since 1997, the Department for International Development has stepped up its spending on HIV/AIDS from £38 million in 1997–98 to more than £270 million in 2002–03. According to UNAIDS, UK is currently the 2nd largest bilateral donor active in the field of HIV/AIDS.

Since May 1997 DFID has committed over £1.5 billion to support the development of health systems in partner countries. This will help to build capacity to deliver medicines to the poor and assist them in making effective choices about the selection of drugs.

Mr. Best: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what steps the Government is taking to ensure that the Global Fund to fight AIDS, TB and malaria is financially secure. [137457]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: The UK was a high profile advocate for the Global Fund for AIDS TB and Malaria (GFATM) and nearly two years after its inception continues to give it its full support.

The UK recognises that the GFATM needs predictable sustainable financing in order to be effective and therefore made a commitment to predictable multi year funding from the very start—increasing our pledge recently to $280 million through to 2008.

The UK, a Board member of the GFATM, works closely with the Fund particularly on improving its financial effectiveness. Decisions taken at the 6th Board Meeting last month—including moving the Fund to a voluntary replenishment system, and to continue to develop financial models that provide regular estimates of resources available for commitment and of demand, will help to give greater clarity on what resources are assured and will provide the GFATM with a sounder financial footing.

Iraq

Norman Lamb: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development pursuant to his answer of 5 November, reference 135853, how many of the unexploded bomblets remaining as a result of the cluster bombs and artillery used in the UK area of operations around Basra have been found within the city limits of Basra. [137640]

Hilary Benn: The information requested is not available.

Liberia

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what response he will make to the UN humanitarian appeal in Liberia. [138683]

Hilary Benn: In response to the humanitarian crisis there we have allocated £7.6 million this year to support humanitarian assistance in Liberia. The UN consolidated appeal will be announced on 19 November. We will consider whether to make a further contribution in the light of the appeal and the conclusions of a joint DFID/FCO mission that is visiting Liberia this month.

Performance Monitoring

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what the total cost was of (a) setting, (b) monitoring and (c) measuring the performance targets for his Department in 2002–03; and how many and what grades of civil servants monitor these targets. [137947]

Hilary Benn: Performance targets for DFID were agreed as part of Spending Review 2002. The monitoring and measurement of PSA targets forms part of departmental performance management. Performance management is an integral part of the day to day running of the Department, and as such it is not possible to separate out the specific costs. The monitoring of progress towards, and performance against, the Department's PSA targets is undertaken by a wide variety of staff at all levels of the organisation.

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if he will list the performance targets that (a) his Department and (b) its agencies and non-departmental public bodies are required to meet; and if he will specify for each target (i) who sets it and (ii) who monitors achievement against it. [137963]

Hilary Benn: Key performance targets for DFID are agreed as part of the Spending Review and the latest set were published in Spending Review 2002; Public Service Agreements 2003–06 (Cm 5571). The department monitors progress towards the targets along with HM Treasury and progress is reported regularly.

DFID does not have agencies or non-departmental public bodies required to meet targets.

DFID has five targets in its Public Service Agreement 2003–06. Two are based on achieving the Millennium Development Goals in the key regions in Africa and Asia. These are also linked to the poverty reduction targets of our partner countries. Two are focused on improving the effectiveness of the international system in reducing poverty. These include targets which have been agreed jointly with other Government Departments. The final target encompasses the Value for Money indicators which cover the efficient allocation of funds.

I am accountable for delivery of DFID's Public Service Agreement. The means of measuring achievement against these targets are set out in the Technical Note accompanying DFID's PSA. This note is available on the DFID website at: www.dfid.gov.uk.

St. Helena

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assistance he intends to give to St. Helena before the building of the proposed airport to discourage residents from leaving the island; and if he will make a statement on the future viability of the economy of St. Helena. [137690]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: We continue to provide substantial assistance for St. Helena, which this year is expected to be more than £10.5 million. Much of this support is needed to maintain essential government services, including education and healthcare, and to subsidise the island's vital passenger/supply ship. These and other services will be maintained: but we hope increasingly to devote a greater share of our assistance to activities that will generate more local revenue and reduce St. Helena's reliance upon our aid.

For example, in parallel with evaluating options for the possible development of air access and with the St. Helena Government we are reviewing the routing and scheduling of the RMS 'St Helena' to see if a better call pattern for the island can be established. We also are considering further strengthening of the St. Helena Development Agency (SHDA), in addition to some existing support through the SHDA from the FCO's Economic Diversification Fund, to help stimulate private sector growth. As regards staffing, some key posts in St. Helena have been advertised recently on enhanced terms that are designed to encourage key personnel to remain and/or to attract back suitable people with St. Helenian status who are living overseas. I understand that the first of these advertisements already has resulted in the appointment of a St. Helenian who currently lives in the UK; and the initial response to advertisements for two other posts last month has been encouraging.

We remain committed to supporting the St. Helena Government's efforts to revitalise and regenerate the island economy to the benefit of its community. Our shared goal, which may take some years to achieve, is sustainable economic and financial self-sufficiency for St. Helena.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State, Department for International Development, what recent assessment he has made of the quality of treatment at Jamestown General Hospital, St. Helena. [137225]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: Healthcare services in St. Helena, including those available at Jamestown Hospital, are reviewed regularly. We are satisfied that both their quality and consistency are appropriate and proportionate to the needs of the island community. For example, the hospital incorporates: a modern operating theatre and maternity suite; a well equipped medical laboratory and blood transfusion services, and complete continuity of attendance by trained medical and nursing staff. The next review of our healthcare support is planned for early next year.

Zimbabwe

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development when he last examined the methods used by aid agencies funded by his Department to draw up lists of aid recipients in Zimbabwe; and if he will make a statement. [138409]

Hilary Benn: DFID routinely subjects all proposals for UK funding to detailed technical appraisal before spending is approved. In the case of food aid to Zimbabwe, our most recent pledge of £5 million to support the Emergency Operation of the World Food Programme (WFP) followed close examination of the operational procedures set out in the Memorandum of Understanding signed between the WFP and the Government of Zimbabwe on 25 September. This included the process for identifying those members of the community who are in greatest need, regardless of political considerations or affiliation. WFP conducts rigorous training of its Implementing Partners (NGOs) on these procedures

In addition to UK's support for the WFP Emergency Operation, DFID is also providing funds directly to international and local NGOs who are undertaking humanitarian work in Zimbabwe, focusing on HIV/AIDS affected households, malnourished children and other vulnerable groups. Again, approval of financial support has been based upon careful technical appraisal of the approach and procedures for each proposal.

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development pursuant to his answer of 5 November 2003, Official Report, column 653W, on Zimbabwe, if he will make it his policy to urge the United Nations to monitor delivery of food aid in Zimbabwe to its final recipients. [138550]

Hilary Benn: As I indicated in my previous reply, the United Nations closely monitors the delivery of food aid to its final recipients by the UN World Food Programme

(WFP). In response to pressure from the UK and other donors, the WFP has already strengthened its own internal monitoring, evaluation and reporting activities. Particular emphasis is placed on monitoring and reporting of any incidences of political interference. WFP also undertakes post-distribution monitoring, in which vulnerable households who were targeted for assistance are interviewed to assess their views of the selection and distribution processes. Donors and the UNDP have jointly established a Relief and Recovery Unit with the purpose of co-ordinating information about all ongoing humanitarian activities funded by the international community. This covers not only food but also other forms of assistance such as medicines, seeds and fertilisers. It also covers the operations of NGOs directly funded by donors, outside the UN Emergency Operation.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH

Animal Welfare

Rob Marris: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to ensure that the Protocol on Protection and Welfare of Animals enacted by the Treaty of Amsterdam remains part of European Union law by being annexed to the proposed new treaty establishing a constitution for the European Union; and if he will make a statement. [135664]

Mr. MacShane: The Government support annexation of the Protocol on the Protection and Welfare of Animals to the EU Constitutional Treaty. We have put the case for doing so in the legal experts group mandated to consider this in the Intergovernmental Conference.

Departmental Energy Use

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much (a) electricity and (b) other energy his Department has used in each year since 1997 (i) in total and (ii) per square metre; what the projected use is for each of the following years for which forecasts are made; what plans he has to reduce usage; and if he will make a statement. [135053]

Mr. Rammell: I refer the hon. Member in reply to parts (a) and (b) to the reply given to him by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State at the Department for the Environment, Food and Rural Affairs, my hon. Friend the Member for Exeter (Mr. Bradshaw) on 3 November 2003, Official Report, column 403W.

Compared to the previous year, the FCO's projected energy consumption in 2003–04 is an increase of 3 per cent. in total electricity usage. This is accounted for by the demands in development of our major financial management system (PRISM) and the modernisation of FCO working practices and procedures. These both rely heavily on electrically powered electronic technology. A decrease of 1 per cent. in other energy usage is projected.

We aim to achieve reductions by upgrading building facilities, using more energy efficient equipment, staff awareness campaigns and close monitoring of consumption.

Gibraltar

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the closure of the border between Spain and Gibraltar; and what steps he is taking to ensure that the border between Spain and Gibraltar is re-opened as soon as possible. [136915]

Mr. MacShane: The border between Spain and Gibraltar re-opened at 20:10 local time on 3 November.

As my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary made clear, we regarded the closure as unnecessary, unwelcome and disproportionate. We take the same view of the "health checks" imposed by the Spanish authorities subsequent to the border re-opening.

Government's Wine Cellar

Mr. Liddell-Grainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs who is responsible for the management of the Government's wine cellar. [136355]

Mr. Rammell: The Government Wine Cellar is administered on a day-to-day basis by the Head of Government Hospitality, a civil servant in Conference and Visits Group of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. Advice on the stock and quality of wines in the cellar is given by the Government Hospitality Advisory Committee for the Purchase of Wine (GHACPW), composed of four appointed Masters of Wine and a Chairman. The GHACPW is an advisory non-departmental public body that reports to me as the Minister responsible for Government Hospitality and FCO Services as a whole.

Iraq

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what estimate he has made of the numbers of UK citizens travelling to Iraq to fight against coalition forces; and if he will make a statement. [137140]

Mr. Rammell [holding answer 10 November 2003]: We are aware of references in the media to this issue, but we have no reports to suggest that significant numbers of UK citizens are preparing to travel to, or are in Iraq, to fight Coalition forces. Nevertheless, we continue to investigate reports of this nature.

Mr. Best: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the intentions of aid agencies to stay in Iraq. [137523]

Hilary Benn: I have been asked to reply.

In the current circumstances in Iraq, aid agencies are understandably keeping under review their security procedures, their ways of working and the extent to which they maintain a presence in the country. Decisions in these areas are of course for them to take. DFID keeps in close contact with the United Nations and non-governmental organisations, particularly those which receive DFID funding, and is able to offer advice where appropriate. DFID has offered £3 million towards UN security measures in response to an appeal following the bombing of the UN Headquarters in Baghdad in August. DFID has also offered additional finance, if needed, for increased security provisions for those NGOs that we are supporting in Iraq. DFID, and other Government Departments, have put in place special security provisions for their own staff working in Iraq.

Israel

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Israeli Government concerning the destruction of the shipment of vitamins meant for children in the Gaza Strip sent by The Holy Land Trust, Rabbis for Human Rights and the Palestine Children's Welfare Fund. [136783]

Mr. Rammell: We have not made representations to the Israeli Government about the specific shipment referred to. We have not been able to establish the fate of the shipment. But we continue to discuss with the Government of Israel the general humanitarian impact of its policies and the importance of unfettered access to humanitarian aid throughout the Occupied Territories.

Morocco

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs for what purposes the export licences to Morocco listed in the Strategic Export Controls report 2002 as involving (a) toxic chemical precursors and (b) technology for the production of toxins were granted. [136741]

Mr. Rammell: The 'toxic chemical precursors' were to be exported to Morocco for use in toothpaste preparation.

The 'technology for the production of toxins' to be exported to Morocco was for regulatory dossiers relating to the manufacture, safety and efficacy of medicines.

North Korea

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps the Government is taking to help the development of good relations between the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and (a) the Republic of Korea, (b) Japan and (c) China. [136695]

Mr. Rammell: The Government actively support the six party process, begun in Beijing in August, to resolve the North Korean nuclear issue. The Republic of Korea, Japan, China and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea are all participants in that process.

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Democratic People's Republic of Korea on the opening of an official embassy by the Republic in the United Kingdom. [136696]

Mr. Rammell: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has had no discussions with the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK) on the opening of their embassy in London, During my own meeting with the new DPRK ambassador, I expressed concern about the nuclear issue and human rights. I made clear that further development of our bilateral relationship would depend on North Korean actions to address these concerns, which are shared by the European Union and the wider international community.

Nuclear Proliferation

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps the Government is taking to prevent the spread of nuclear weapons-related technology. [136771]

Mr. MacShane: Preventing the spread of technology with WMD application is a high priority for the Government. All licences for the export from the UK of nuclear technology with possible weapons-related application are rigorously scrutinised. I refer the hon. Member to the Statement made by the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, my hon. Friend the Member for Exeter (Mr. Bradshaw) on 15 March 2002, Official Report, column 1298W.

The UK is a leading and active member of the Nuclear Suppliers Group (NSG), an international export control regime which seeks to contribute to the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons by controlling the export of nuclear related and dual use items and related technology. These are identified in the NSG technical annex and are incorporated into national and EU legislation.

Within the NSG the UK chairs the Licensing and Enforcement Experts Meeting where customs and other enforcement officials exchange information and intelligence relating to procurement methods, and discuss case studies on interdiction. The UK also provides technical experts who revise the lists of controlled goods to ensure that the NSG keeps pace with developments in technology, weapons systems and procurement methods.

Within the NSG and other export control regimes the UK supports outreach activities, in the form of bilateral talks and awareness raising seminars, which play a key role in our efforts to promote and support the implementation of responsible export controls around the world. In addition, joint teams of officials from FCO, DTI, MOD and HM Customs and Excise conduct dedicated export control bilateral meetings to address the practical issues surrounding the implementation of export licensing and enforcement systems.

Pakistan

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions (a) his Department and (b) the Government have had with members and representatives of the governments of (i) Pakistan, (ii) India and (iii) China on the proposed construction of a nuclear power plant at Chashma, central Punjab province, Pakistan; what concerns have been raised during those discussions; what assurances were (A) sought and (B) given; and if he will make a statement. [136931]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We are aware of the existing nuclear power plant at Chashma in central Punjab, and of the plans for a second reactor to be built at the same site with the co-operation of China. We understand that these plans only involve co-operation over energy production and we have not raised any concerns with the representatives of the governments of Pakistan, India or China

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he is making to Pakistan concerning the fight against terrorism, with particular reference to the case of Dawood Ibrahim; and if he will make a statement. [136829]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We regularly discuss the fight against terrorism with the Pakistani Government, most recently when I, and my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary, met the Pakistani Foreign Minister, Khurshid Kasuri, on 4 November.

On 3 November the al-Qaeda and Taliban Sanctions Committee of the UN Security Council added Dawood Ibrahim's name to its list of individuals linked to al-Qaeda. Like all UN members the UK is accordingly under an obligation to freeze his assets, and has now done so.

Russia

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance the Government is giving to the Russian Federation to work towards a constructive and peaceful solution to instability in Chechnya and the Caucasus region; and what steps his Department is taking to ensure that proper democratic processes are taking place in the area. [136697]

Mr. Rammell: The UK Government undertake regular dialogue with Russian counterparts at both official and ministerial level about the on-going conflict in Chechnya and its resolution. The UK Government also substantially fund humanitarian aid by international organisations and NGOs in the region, totalling around £74 million.

We have monitored the political process in Chechnya closely since its inception. We were disappointed by the conditions under which the recent Chechen Presidential elections were held, as I made clear in my 6 October press statement. A copy of the press release is available on the Foreign and Commonwealth website: www.fco.gov.uk/policy/news/press-releases. The UK supported similar statements by the EU. We have called on the new Chechen President to promote a genuinely open political process.

Uzbekistan

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what dates since 1 January 2001 the British Government have held meetings with the Government of Uzbekistan; and what was discussed at each meeting. [137018]

Mr. Straw: We have regular contacts with the Government of Uzbekistan across a range of issues, including human rights, regional security, bilateral co-operation, political and economic reform. It would incur disproportionate cost to compile detailed information about meetings of the kind requested by the right hon. Member.

Zimbabwe

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has raised the issue of the closure of United Nations relief and recovery units in Zimbabwe with the UN; and if he will make a statement. [138406]

Hilary Benn: I have been asked to reply.

The UN Relief and Recovery Unit (RRU) itself has not been closed. This unit, which was set up jointly by donors and the UN Development Programme (UNDP) in January 2002, continues to co-ordinate information sharing and to review policy issues, covering all humanitarian operations in Zimbabwe. The RRU publishes regular situation reports on the humanitarian situation in Zimbabwe.

However, the Government of Zimbabwe has not yet approved UNDP to operate three regional offices (Relief Information Validation units) that RRU had been using to facilitate fieldwork until the Government closed them in the summer. All RRU operations are presently implemented from the Headquarters in Harare, which is feasible but more difficult to manage. At meetings with DFID and other donors, the UN Humanitarian Co-ordinator in Zimbabwe has agreed to continue to press the Zimbabwe Government to allow the regional offices to operate.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Adult Learning

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action he is taking to facilitate adult learning in Northern Ireland. [137803]

Jane Kennedy: The Department for Employment and Learning offers a range of services and activities to facilitate adult learning in Northern Ireland, including:

funding for widespread provision in the statutory FE sector;

financial support for the Workers' Educational Association and the Ulster Peoples' College, to enable them to deliver adult education and training programmes; funding for learners undertaking a range of courses via learndirect; essential skills provision, which has been fully integrated into all the Department's programmes, to improve literacy and numeracy skills;

a range of New Deal initiatives providing opportunities to learn new skills; the delivery of an all age guidance service providing career guidance to people in education and training and to the unemployed;

a Training for Work (TfW) vocational programme, aimed at adults who have not reached the entry point for any of the New Deal options; and Worktrack, a temporary employment programme, focusing on the needs of unemployed adults.

Flooding

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will designate an agency with the sole responsibility for flooding. [137662]

Mr. Pearson: There are no plans for such designation. However the need for co-ordination between Agencies in dealing with flooding emergencies has been given priority with the establishment of an inter-Agency Flood Strategy Steering Group (FSSG). Under the direction of the FSSG, the Rivers Agency, in conjunction with Water Service, Roads Service and others are progressing measures to improve inter-Agency response.

Literacy

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what measures are in place to raise literacy standards among 14-year-old boys in Northern Ireland. [137671]

Jane Kennedy: Literacy standards among Key Stage 3 pupils are steadily improving and are currently at their highest ever. The literacy strategy element of the School Improvement Programme is particularly aimed at raising standards among all underachieving pupils, including boys, and this improvement reflects the contribution made by all education partners to its delivery. Specific guidance has been given to schools on maximising the performance of boys, particularly in literacy.

Older People (IT Skills)

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action he is taking to maximise the education of older people in Northern Ireland in the use of information technology. [137802]

Jane Kennedy: The Department for Employment and Learning supports adult learners to develop IT skills through a range of programme and policy initiatives, These include the New Deal for 25+ for long-term unemployed people, which offers participants a range of appropriate training courses. Clients who are eligible for the Training Grant of New Deal 50 plus can access up to £1,500 over a two-year period for in-work training which can include IT skills. In the further education (FE) sector enrolments on information and communications technology (ICT) courses attract an enhanced level of financial support. Some 75 per cent. of current enrolments comprise students aged 25 or over, Learndirect plays a major role in the delivery of ICT programmes. 34 community-based learning venues throughout Northern Ireland offer all adults flexible access to a range of IT programmes at minimal cost to disadvantaged learners, including those over the age of retirement. Recent modifications to the learndirect learner funding model have been introduced to attract older learners on low income.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Advocacy Services

Mr. Drew: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what discussions he has had with local authorities and social services departments about the provision of advocacy services. [118295]

Yvette Cooper: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has not held any substantive discussions with local authorities or social services departments on the provision of advocacy services.

Community Centres

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what proposals the Government have to expand the number of community centres in (a) the north west region, (b) Merseyside and (c) St. Helens. [137981]

Mr. Raynsford: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister recognises the important role community centres can play in supporting sustainable communities. However their funding is not the responsibility of central government, it is a matter for local decision.

Concessionary Fares

David Taylor: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what plans the Government have to improve concessionary fare schemes for older people. [137445]

Phil Hope: The Transport Act 2000 and the Travel Concessions (Eligibility) Act 2002 ensures that people aged 60 and over in England are entitled to a free bus pass allowing half-fare travel on local buses. Local authorities may provide more generous concessions if they choose, but we have no plans to require them to do so.

Council Tax

Matthew Green: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what the total collected council tax was in each financial year since 1996–97. [138149]

Mr. Raynsford: The information requested is tabled as follows. The figures shown are the amounts of council tax collected during each financial year, irrespective of the year to which they related.

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what the average council tax payable for each Government Office Region, broken down by council tax band, was in each financial year since 1996–97. [138151]

Mr. Raynsford: The information requested is tabled as follows.

Ex-service Personnel (Housing)

Mr. Weir: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what guidance his Department has given to local authorities relating to the rights of persons leaving the armed forces to be included in council house waiting lists on conclusion of their service in the area in which they last served. [138220]

Keith Hill: As the hon. Member will be aware, housing is a devolved matter.

The Code of Guidance on the Allocation of Accommodation which was issued to English housing authorities in November 2002 and came into force at the end of January 2003 states that housing authorities must consider all applications and cannot exclude applicants who, for example, are not currently resident in the district. However, the Code of Guidance makes clear that, in determining relative priorities for an allocation, authorities are able to have regard to whether or not applicants have a local connection with the district. The Code of Guidance does refer specifically to the rights of persons leaving the armed forces to be included in council waiting lists.

Housing

Mr. Drew: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how much was spent by each local authority planning Large Scale Voluntary Transfer; and whether this expenditure was within the guidelines set by the Department in each case. [138680]

Keith Hill: The information requested is not held centrally, and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what steps his Department is taking to ensure that section 106 agreements between local authorities and housing associations do not provide a perverse financial incentive to develop one and two bedroom properties at the expense of three and four bedroom properties. [138588]

Keith Hill: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given on 6 November 2003, Official Report, columns 796–97W.

Linda Perham: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister (1) what plans he has to ensure that housing advice reaches older people from ethnic minorities; [136657]

(2) what plans he has to develop proactive services for giving older people housing advice. [136658]

Yvette Cooper: Section 179 of the Housing Act 1996 requires local housing authorities to ensure that advice and information about homelessness and the prevention of homelessness is available free of charge to anyone in their district. The Homelessness Code of Guidance, to which local authorities must have regard by law, states that advisory services need to be accessible to everyone in the district, and well publicised. The Code also states that authorities need to monitor the provision of advisory services to ensure they continue to meet the needs of all sections of the community.

In addition, the Homelessness Act 2002 requires local housing authorities to ensure that advice and information is available free to everyone in their district about the right to apply for housing. If anyone is likely to have difficulty in making an application without assistance, the housing authority must ensure that any necessary assistance is available free of charge.

The Homelessness Directorate within the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has issued good practice guidance to assist local authorities in the development of their strategies on preventing and tackling homelessness in their area, to include information on addressing the needs of older people who are homeless or at risk of homelessness, and the needs of homeless black and minority ethnic people. This could include, for example, specialist mediation services for older people who have to leave a family home.

The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has invested £2.5 million in 2003–04 with Shelter's National Homelessness Advice Service (NHAS). NHAS is a secondary advice and support service provided by Shelter in partnership with the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux and has been supported by Government since it was established in 1990. This service is open to anyone who is homeless or at risk of becoming homeless.

The Housing and Older People Development Group—which advises the Department of Health and the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister on housing issues affecting older people—is looking into ways to develop and enhance advice, information and advocacy services nationally and locally for older people and their carers, to help them in making choices about housing, care and support options. The group is also looking at ways of sharing information across agencies and to support and advise the advisers.

As part of its work, the Group is also considering strategies to improving access to information about mainstream services for black and minority ethnic older people.

As part of the Government's Supporting People programme, the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has published a guide: "Reflecting the Needs and Concerns of Black and Minority Ethnic Communities in Supporting People" for housing support service providers. This can be found on the Supporting People website address at: www.spkweb.org.uk/files/020429impreflect.pdf

In addition to the Supporting People main website, a special BMESpark website has also been developed. This brings together expertise and experience in responding to the needs and concerns of black and minority ethnic communities as part of the Supporting People Programme. The BMESpark website address is www.bmespark.org.uk.

Investment Frameworks (West Midlands)

Mr. Stevenson: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many area investment frameworks have been established in the West Midlands Region. [137774]

Yvette Cooper: Advantage West Midlands (AWM) has developed six Regeneration Zones in the West Midlands Region, five of which are in urban areas.

The six zones encompass concentration of need and substantial opportunities, and include the most deprived wards in the region. They aim to regenerate communities by raising skills levels, creating development opportunities, reducing unemployment and tackling social exclusion.

A Regeneration Zone Partnership, which includes representatives from local authorities, businesses and the voluntary and community sectors, heads each Regeneration Zone and it is responsible for developing the Regeneration Zone Strategy, identifying needs in the area and how they might be addressed by funding streams available to partners. Substantial work is underway with the West Midlands Regional Observatory, to identify baseline conditions and outcome targets in each zone.

IT Contracts

Mr. Flight: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many outsourced IT contracts have been signed by his Department in each year since 1997; how much each of these contracts is worth; with whom they are signed; how many have been renegotiated; how many are still in place; and if he will make a statement. [126201]

Yvette Cooper: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister (ODPM) was created in May 2002. Since 1997, the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister and its central departmental predecessors (DTLR and DETR) signed two IT contracts, totalling £10.7 million. Of these, one is a Department for Transport (DfT) contract providing joint services to the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister and the other is the sole responsibility of the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister. These contracts were let with:

LogicaCMG for the provision of the corporate payroll service for DfT and ODPM

Fujitsu for the provision of IT infrastructure and desktop services for the Government Office Network.

Both contracts are still in place and one has been renegotiated.

Referendums

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how much has been spent by his Office on referenda since its creation. [137512]

Mr. Raynsford: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has incurred no expenditure on holding referendums.

The Regional Assemblies (Preparations) Act 2003 provides for the forthcoming regional assembly referendums. Expenditure for these will be incurred by the Electoral Commission, who will request resources from the Speakers Committee to cover its referendum costs. Costs incurred by local authorities in running the referendums will be met from the consolidated fund. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister will bear the associated costs of the information campaign and the work of the Boundary Committee.

The former Department of Environment, Transport and the Regions incurred expenditure of £1 million on the referendum held in London in 1998 on whether to establish the Greater London Authority.

Rented Homes

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister when he expects the Law Commission to (a) publish its final report on renting homes and (b) publish draft legislation. [138058]

Keith Hill: On 5 November 2003, the Law Commission published "Renting Homes" (Law Com 284) in which they set out recommendations on the reform of housing law. The report was published ahead of the publication of a draft Bill in order to allow the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister and others in the housing field to consider the policy issues underlying the Commission's proposals.

As the Commission pointed out in the press notice accompanying their report, the proposed new law will involve replacing a complex web of land law principles and statutory provisions that have grown up over the last 100 years.

Work is well in hand at the Commission on drafting the necessary legislation. Their aim is to publish a final report, together with a draft bill, in 2004. At this stage, it is not possible to be more precise.

Road Building

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister (1) if he will make a statement on the proposal by Norfolk County Council's Planning and Transportation Department to build a Northern Distributor Road through Ringland Valley; [138207]

(2) if he will undertake a full Environmental Audit on the proposals to build a road through the Ringland Valley in Norfolk. [138208]

Keith Hill: Options for a Northern Distributor Road form part of a review of the Norwich Area Transport Strategy currently being undertaken by Norfolk County Council. If, as an outcome of the review, the council decides to go ahead with preparation of plans for the Distributor Road, it would need to undertake a full appraisal of the scheme, covering the environmental impacts as well as the economic, safety, integration and accessibility effects.

Tenancy Deposit Scheme

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what assessment he has made of the reasons private landlords have given for refusing to participate in the pilot voluntary tenancy deposit scheme [138056]

Keith Hill: Shortly after the publication of the consultation paper last year we published 'An Evaluation of the pilot Tenancy Deposit Scheme'—a report on a study carried out by the University of York. A digest of this report had been published alongside the consultation paper.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister pursuant to the statement by the hon. Member for Pontefract and Castleford (Yvette Cooper), Official Report, column 118WH, what estimate his Department has made of the potential costs of independent adjudication under a tenancy deposit scheme. [138057]

Keith Hill: The estimated maximum cost of adjudications would be £19 million. However, this is based on the assumption that the rate of disputes inside a statutory scheme (requiring adjudication) would be the same as the current rate of alleged unreasonable withholding of deposits.

Travellers

Mr. Todd: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what assessment he has made of the implications for (a) traveller migration to the UK, (b) demand for traveller sites and (c) unauthorised encampments of the introduction of changes in the law of trespass in the Irish Republic. [137208]

Yvette Cooper: Officials of the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister are currently reviewing policy on site provision and planning for gypsies and travellers. As part of this work they will also look into the wider implications of Irish traveller migration to the UK following the Republic of Ireland's legislative changes, and the possible demand for additional sites.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Capital Modernisation Fund

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport pursuant to her answer of 14 October 2003, Official Report, column 1534W, on the Capital Modernisation Fund, if she will provide a breakdown by governing body of the £20 million from the Capital Modernisation Fund. [138614]

Estelle Morris: The Rugby Football Union, the Football Association, the England and Wales Cricket Board, and the Lawn Tennis Association have been allocated £9.4 million each from the Community Club Development Programme over the period 2003–04 to 2005–06 (the first year of which is funded from the Capital Modernisation Fund).

The following governing bodies have been allocated £20 million between them over these three years:

the Badminton Association of England, England Basketball,
the British Canoe Union,
British Cycling,
British Gymnastics,
the English Hockey Federation,
the British Judo Association,
the All England Netball Association,
the Amateur Rowing Association,
the Rugby Football League, the Amateur Swimming Association, and the English Table Tennis Association.

These allocations are subject to the amounts of governing bodies' bids to utilise funds from the Programme, and on the acceptance of their bids to do so.

Industrial Buildings

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how much English Heritage has spent on renovating and bringing back into use pre-First World War industrial buildings since 1997; and if she will make a statement. [137557]

Mr. Caborn: Since 1997 English Heritage has awarded £2,754,799 in grants to industrial sites that are either wholly or partly pre-First World War in date. A further £235,619 has been awarded through the Aggregates Levy Sustainability Fund. In addition, some sites will have been supported through the Heritage Economic Regeneration Schemes, which English Heritage run in partnership with local authorities. Details of this further funding could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Prison Service

Mr. Donaldson: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will revoke the decision to exclude the prison service from the award of the Golden Jubilee Medal by Her Majesty The Queen. [133524]

Mr. Caborn: In February 2001 a decision was made by the Ministerial Group in charge of the Golden Jubilee to award a medal to commemorate the Queen's Golden Jubilee. The Queen's Golden Jubilee Medal would be awarded to members of the armed services, and Royal Fleet Auxiliary, who had completed five years service on 6 February 2002. In December 2001 a decision was made by the Ministerial Group to extend the eligibility for the Queen's Golden Jubilee Medal to the those members of the emergency "999" services, that had also completed five years service on the 6 February 2002. There are no plans to review these criteria and the Ministerial Group has long since been disbanded.

EDUCATION AND SKILLS

Volunteering

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what action he is taking with the Home Office's Active Community Unit to increase volunteering in schools; and if he will make a statement. [137544]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: The Department is working closely with the Home Office's Active Community Unit (ACU) to ensure that volunteering by young people contributes to the Government's overall drive to increase community participation. One important element of the new Citizenship curriculum in schools is the involvement of pupils in the life and concerns of their neighbourhood and communities, including learning through community involvement and service. Since September 2002, we have been funding Active Citizens in Schools (ACiS)—a pilot which builds on aspect of Millennium Volunteers to encourage 11–15 year olds to make a commitment to volunteering in line with the citizenship curriculum and encourage them to become Millennium Volunteers when they reach the age of 16.

Free School Meals

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what representations he has received on setting minimum standards for the nutritional value of a free school meal; and if he will make a statement. [136734]

Mr. Stephen Twigg [holding answer 10 November 2003]: The issue as to whether the national nutritional standards should be food or nutrient based was debated thoroughly during extensive consultation prior to the introduction of the standards in 2001. The overwhelming consensus was that food based standards would be simpler to implement and monitor, and would be consistent with cross Government messages aimed at teaching children to make healthy eating choices. There has been nothing in the intervening period to suggest that this decision should be reversed.

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what information he has collated about the effect of the introduction of child tax credit on the numbers of children eligible for free school meals. [137166]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: The information requested is not currently available.

The number of pupils known to be eligible for free school meals is collected in January each year via the Annual Schools' Census. As a result, data on the number of pupils known to be eligible for free meals since the introduction of new rules in April 2003 will not be available until spring 2004.

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many children (a) were assessed as eligible for free school meals and (b) claimed free school meals in the most recent year for which figures are avilable, broken down by ethnic group. [137171]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: The table shows the information that is available centrally. It relates to pupils who are known to be eligible for, and claim, free school meals. Equivalent information for the take-up of free school meals is not collected at pupil level and therefore cannot be broken down by ethnic group.

Sexual Offences Bill

Mrs. Brooke: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) if he will reassess his guidelines on sex and relationship education for under 16-year-olds with reference to the Sexual Offences Bill; [137840]

(2) if he will reassess his guidance to teachers of under 16-year-olds with reference to the Sexual Offences Bill. [137842]

Mr. Stephen Twigg [holding answer 11 November 2003]: At present, the Department has no plans to revise its Sex and Relationship Guidance for schools. This position will be reviewed when the Sexual Offences Bill is passed.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL

Extradition

Simon Hughes: To ask the Solicitor-General what the policy of the United Kingdom Government is on requesting extradition of individuals accused of torturing British nationals abroad, in the absence of a pending prosecution in the country where the accused is located. [137834]

The Solicitor-General: The courts of England and Wales may have jurisdiction in respect of an offence committed abroad if the offender, or the victim, is a British national. Once such jurisdiction is established then the procedures for investigating and prosecuting the case are the same as for any case prosecuted in the courts of England and Wales. The police are responsible for investigating allegations of criminal offences and for obtaining admissible evidence to prove the alleged offence. The CPS is responsible for the prosecution of all criminal cases resulting from police investigations. The police ask the advice of the CPS before charging any person with a criminal offence.

In complex and serious cases such as potential offences involving torture, the police will invariably consult with the CPS for advice on the sufficiency of the evidence before a person is charged. The CPS will consider each case that is passed to it by the police. Each case is carefully considered to assess whether it meets the test set out in the Code for Crown Prosecutors, issued under section 10 of the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985. Once the CPS has decided to start a prosecution, if the alleged offender is located abroad the CPS will refer an application for extradition to the Secretary of State for the Home Department who will forward the request through the appropriate diplomatic channels.

CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

Compensation Orders

Mrs. Brooke: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs how many compensation orders were awarded at (a) magistrates' courts and (b) Crown courts in each year since 2000; what the rate of default was in (i) each year and (ii) each court; and if he will make a statement. [138451]

Mr. Leslie: Information on compensation orders in Magistrates' Courts has not been historically collected by the Department for Constitutional Affairs. However, the Home Office Criminal Statistics Publication (Table SI, 6(A)) shows that in 2000, 97,073 offenders were ordered to pay compensation (excluding summary motoring offences) and in 2001, 97,134 offenders were ordered to pay compensation (excluding summary motoring offences). Information on the rate of default is not currently collected as compensation orders are measured with confiscation orders and other fines and not isolated. Magistrates' Courts Committees (MCCs) have a responsibility for the collection of a range of debts imposed by both the magistrates' courts and the Crown Court. Debt collected includes compensation but also fees, fines, confiscation orders, legal aid contributions and some maintenance orders. It is not yet possible to separate out only compensation orders from the total. There are plans, however, to isolate compensation orders in debt analysis under the Libra Project from around Autumn 2004 onwards. This will involve the use of the Libra Application which is the new IT system being developed for the Magistrates' Courts.

Figures concerning the number of compensation orders made in the Crown Court for the years 2000–02 are as follows. This information relates to defendants, not cases:

2000—6,892

2001—6,732

2002—7,100

Unfortunately, I am unable to provide information on the rate of default as the monies are paid into Magistrates Courts and the figures aggregated in the way explained above.

Appointments Commission

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs how many people were interviewed for the position of chair of the House of Lords Appointments Commission when it was first established. [138519]

Mr. Leslie: My Department is not responsible for the present House of Lords Appointments Commission, which is a non-departmental public body sponsored by the Cabinet Office. However, I understand that three people were interviewed for the post of chair when the Commission was first established.

Bailiffs

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs how many complaints have been made in each year since 1997 concerning the conduct of bailiffs; how many complaints have been investigated; how many complaints have resulted in a prosecution; how many convictions there were concerning the conduct of bailiffs; and if he will publish a list of banned bailiffs. [136800]

Mr. Leslie [holding answer 6 November 2003]: My Department is responsible for county court bailiffs only. Any complaint involving a county court bailiff, unless of a serious nature, is dealt with by the county court that s/he is assigned to. There is no database kept on complaints against individual bailiffs.

There are Certificated Bailiffs who act in a private capacity. They are given their authority to do so for a period of two years, by their local county court judge, in accordance with the Distress for Rent Rules 1988. A complaint against a Certificated Bailiff is considered by a judge of the county court that granted the certificate.

If the certificate is revoked the Department will be informed. The information will be recorded on the Register of Certificated Bailiffs that is kept centrally. The Register is open to public search through a central point of contact. No data is retained longer than three years. In 2001 two certificates were cancelled, in 2002, 13 were cancelled, and in 2003 to date 17 have been cancelled. Any prosecution would be taken by the member of the public affected by the action of a certificated bailiff. There is no data kept by the county court or the Department centrally.

Bechtel

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs if he will list the contracts for consultancy and other work carried out by Bechtel in each year since 1997 for the Lord Chancellor's Department, stating in each case (a) the nature of the work, (b) the value of the contract and (c) the duration of the contract; and if he will make a statement. [137738]

Mr. Lammy: According to our records, since 1997 the Lord Chancellor's Department has not entered into a contract with Bechtel for consultancy or other work.

Departmental Costs

Mr. Flight: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what the cost was to his Department and its predecessor of use for official business of (a) ministerial cars and drivers, (b) taxis, (c) train travel, (d) the use of helicopters, (e) airline tickets and (f) chartered aeroplanes in each year since 1997. [123086]

Mr. Lammy: I refer the hon. Member for Arundel and South Downs to the answer of the Minister of State for the Cabinet Office (Mr. Alexander) of 13 November 2003, Official Report, column 397W, which deals with part (a) and (f) on behalf of my Department.

It is not possible to identify the Department's other travel costs without incurring disproportionate cost. The Department has published rules for official travel in its staff handbook and ministerial travel is governed by the Ministerial Code and Travel by Ministers.

Divorced Parents

Sir Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs pursuant to his answer of 22 October 2003, Official Report, column 631, on divorced parents, if he will collect separate figures for the numbers of (a) fathers and (b) mothers granted leave to remove their children from the United Kingdom. [136098]

Mr. Lammy: There are no plans to collect the data requested. No children statistics distinguish between orders in favour of mothers and fathers and to collect figures in this area would incur disproportionate cost. Figures are kept of the total number of orders made under section 13 of the Children Act 1989 for removal from the jurisdiction since 2000 (when figures were first collected). Separate figures are not held for mothers and fathers, though 333 such orders were made in 2002.

Law Commission (Acts)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs on what dates Acts have received Royal Assent enshrining legislative proposals published by the Law Commission since 1990. [138044]

Mr. Lammy: The Law Commission Reports published since 1990, together with the titles of the Acts incorporating the Reports' recommendations and the dates on which those Acts received Royal Assent, are set out in the table.

Brian White: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what statutory investigatory powers the Department has; which ones will be superseded by use of the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act 2000; and what plans he has for removing these legacy powers. [136128]

Mr. Lammy: My Department has no existing statutory investigatory powers.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Community Fund

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) how many grants have been made from the Community Fund to projects in the East Worthing and Shoreham constituency since its inception; [138423]

(3) if she will list the projects in the East Worthing and Shoreham constituency which have benefited from Community Fund grants. [138425]

Estelle Morris: Since the Lottery's start, the Community Fund has made 32 grants in the East Worthing and Shoreham constituency. The following table lists the recipients of the awards, when they received this and how much it was for.

The total value of awards received in the constituency of East Worthing and Shoreham from the Community Fund is £2,142,779.

UK constituencies on average have received £3,913,217 from the Community Fund.

Design

Mr. Best: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what support her Department is giving to the promotion of design (a) initiatives and (b) education. [136654]

Ms Hewitt: I have been asked to reply.

The more effective use of design throughout the British economy would improve prosperity and productivity. We promote design through the work of the Design Council, which is funded by the DTL.

For example, the Design Council's "Design Demonstrations" projects with companies provide exemplars of how design can radically improve performance. These projects are with manufacturing and emerging technology companies. The outputs will support awareness campaigns, to be undertaken with Regional Development Agencies and Business Link, to reach a wider business audience.

In education, the Design Council's "Design in Schools Week" places professionals in schools to inspire design and technology students and teachers. In 2002, 302 designers worked in 295 schools, this year, 372 designers worked in 360 schools.

Business Link and the Manufacturing Advisory Service provide extensive advice and brokerage services on design.

Digital Terrestrial Television

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what percentage of households in Scotland are able to receive digital terrestrial television services. [139025]

Estelle Morris: I understand from the BBC that the percentage of households in Scotland, able to receive digital terrestrial television services is 80.5 per cent. Further information can be found on the Freeview website: www.freeview.co.uk.

National Lottery Ticket Sales

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many National Lottery ticket sales there were in the (a) EH30, (b) EH29, (c) EH28, (d) EH12, (e) EH4 and (f) EH11 postcode areas in each of the last 10 years; and how much was raised in each case. [138452]

Estelle Morris: Information on the number of National Lottery tickets sold is not available by postcode area. Revenue raised through ticket sales is not calculated by postcode on an on-going basis. However, in response to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Morley and Rothwell (Mr. Challen) on 22 October 2002, Official Report, columns 182–83, my right hon. Friend the Minister for Sport and Tourism placed in the Library a table listing sales by postcode area since the Lottery's launch. I will provide an update of the table to the hon. Member as soon as it is available, and place a copy in the Libraries of both Houses.

Olympic Sports

Kate Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what support will be given to Olympic sports in which UK participants in the Sydney Olympics gained medals. [137464]

Tessa Jowell: All Olympic sports that won medals in Sydney have had their funding confirmed to 31 March 2005. The National Governing Bodies of these sports are all preparing draft World Class programme plans for the Beijing Olympiad by March 2004 and refining those plans post Athens, by November 2004. The Sports Councils will review the plans during December and January and decisions on funding effective from April 2005 will be taken in January and February 2005.

Regional News

Andrew Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will request the Independent Television Commission to insist that television companies uphold franchise and licensing agreements relating to the broadcasting of regional news from specific county locations during the term of any franchise; and if she will make a statement. [139026]

Estelle Morris: This is a matter for the Independent Television Commission.

Social Inclusion

Mr. Best: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what recent discussions she has had with (a) regional cultural consortia, (b) libraries and (c) museums on measures to promote social inclusion in relation to access to (i) the arts and (ii) sport. [138372]

Estelle Morris: Departmental Ministers have regular discussions about social inclusion and access with representatives of our sectors, including libraries, museums and a wide variety of regional interests. We are pursuing access and inclusion through a range of initiatives that feed into our Public Service Agreement objectives and targets. The Department is also working closely with the Neighbourhood Renewal Unit and the Home Office to promote and support sports and cultural activities as ways of reducing social exclusion, through the building of community cohesion and trust and individual self-esteem and skills.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Attention Deficit Disorder

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to introduce in Northern Ireland non-drug behavioural therapies used in the United States for the treatment of attention deficit disorder; and if he will make a statement. [138976]

Angela Smith: Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder is a very complex disorder with both genetic and environmental components to its aetiology. There is established evidence that medication is an effective mainstay of management and should be used within an overall package of care and support. This package should include advice around management of behaviour for parents, carers and teachers. Considerable local expertise is available through the child and adolescent mental health teams. If specific non-drug behavioural therapies are used this would be at the discretion of the clinicians.

Benefit Payments

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much was paid in (a) disability living allowance, (b) unemployment benefit and (c) incapacity benefit in Northern Ireland in the last 12 months for which figures are available. [138992]

Mr. Spellar: The most recent figures available are attached in the following table:

Benefit	Expenditure from October 2002–September 2003 (£000)
Disability living allowance	[illegible]526
Jobseekers allowance—income based	[illegible]9,249
Jobseekers allowance—contributory based	14,719
Incapacity benefit	319,061
Total	916,555

Note:
Unemployment benefit has now been replaced by jobseekers allowance, both income-based and contributory-based.

Chronic Obstructive Pulmonary Disease

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many deaths from chronic obstructive pulmonary disease there were in Northern Ireland in each of the last five years. [138977]

Mr. Pearson: The following table gives the number of deaths resulting from chronic obstructive pulmonary disease, registered in Northern Ireland from 1998 to 2002.

Number of registered deaths by year in Northern Ireland resulting from chronic obstructive pulmonary disease

	Deaths
1998	627
1999	704
2000	610
2001	584
2002	553

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to reduce the incidence of chronic obstructive pulmonary disease in Northern Ireland. [138978]

Angela Smith: Although there is evidence of some genetic component to chronic obstructive pulmonary disease, the majority of cases are associated with smoking, exposure to air pollution, including that caused by environmental tobacco smoke, and lung damage arising from respiratory infections.

The Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety published a five year Tobacco Action Plan in July 2003. The Plan addresses a number of key issues, including prevention, helping smokers to quit and protecting the public from tobacco smoke. An Implementation Group, under the chairmanship of the Chief Medical Officer, is taking forward the 24 action points identified in the Plan.

Driving Licences

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which countries are on the list of those whose driving licence is transferable to a Northern Ireland one; what criteria are used in deciding whether a country's driving licence is transferable to Northern Ireland; for what reason South Africa is excluded from this list; and what plans he has to amend the arrangements to include South Africa. [138726]

Angela Smith: There are 14 countries and territories currently designated for the purposes of exchangeable licences in Northern Ireland, namely Australia, Austria, Barbados, the Republic of Cyprus, Finland, Gibraltar, Malta, New Zealand, Norway, Singapore, Sweden and Zimbabwe, and the territories of Hong Kong and the British Virgin Islands.

In determining the suitability of a country for exchange purposes, the driver testing and licensing systems are assessed, to ensure that the drivers meet standards that are comparable to those in Northern Ireland. This includes an assessment of the driving test, the integrity of licensing system and the nature and format of the licence itself.

With regard to the Republic of South Africa (RSA), it is accepted that the nature of the driving test and the general driving standards are comparable to those in Northern Ireland. However, further consideration is being given to the integrity of the system for issuing licences. Furthermore, the RSA driving licence does not indicate whether it has been issued in exchange for a licence from a third country. This is important since the standards in that third country may not have been assessed against Northern Ireland standards.

The Department of the Environment is continuing to assess the suitability of licences from RSA for exchange. The Department is also developing proposals to amend the relevant legislation to enable selective recognition of licences from other countries so that, for example, licences which had been issued in exchange for a licence from a third country, which does not meet Northern Ireland standards, could be excluded from the exchange arrangements. This will bring exchange arrangements in Northern Ireland into line with those in Great Britain. Depending on the availability of legislative opportunities, it is hoped to have the amendment in place before the end of 2005.

Hare Coursing

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the impact of illegal coursing on the population of the Irish hare; and if he will commission research on the size of the population. [138561]

Angela Smith: No assessment has been made of the impact of illegal coursing on the population of the Irish hare in Northern Ireland.

The Irish Hare Species Action Plan, published by the Department of the Environment in 2000, identifies the need to carry out regular surveys of the Irish hare population in Northern Ireland. The purpose of these surveys is to estimate the size of the population and make deductions about the causes of any movement in the estimated numbers. A baseline survey was completed in 1997; this was followed by "The Northern Ireland Irish Hare Survey 2002", carried out by Professor Montgomery's research team at The Queen's University of Belfast. The Department will carry out regular, similar research into surveys of the Irish hare population to measure progress against the Species Action Plan targets "to maintain the existing range and to demonstrate a population increase by 2005; and to double the present population by 2010 over as much of the range as possible". The next of the surveys will be commissioned in spring 2004.

Separate research is also under way at Queen's University into the status and population dynamics of the Irish Hare, using DNA techniques, and on the ecology of the Irish hare.

Copies of the documents referred to above have been placed in the Library.

National Employment Plans

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made to implement and monitor National Employment Plans in Northern Ireland. [132790]

Jane Kennedy: There is no separate Northern Ireland 'National Employment Plan' although our labour market plans are included within my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's 'Draft Priorities and Budget 2004–07' document and the Department for Employment and Learning's 'Service Delivery Agreement 2003–04'. Copies of these documents are available in the Library. Northern Ireland contributes, as do Scotland and Wales, to the National Employment Action Plan for the UK.

In Northern Ireland, Government programmes, and projects receiving European funding, address the key European Employment Strategy issues of employability, skills needs, entrepreneurship and equal opportunities in the labour market. Northern Ireland contributes information on the implementation of programmes and projects as part of the monitoring of national progress against the Employment Guidelines issued by the European Commission.

WALES

Departmental Costs

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what the cost was to his Department for (a) ministerial cars and drivers, (b) taxis, (c) train travel, (d) the use of helicopters, (e) airline tickets and (f) chartered aeroplanes in each year since 1997. [123073]

Mr. Hain: The Wales Office was created in July 1999. (a) I refer the hon. member to the reply which he received from Mr. N Matheson of the Government Car and Dispatch Agency (a copy of which can be found in the Libraries of the House of Commons) which addressed this issue.

These figures exclude any amounts spent on taxis, black cabs and licensed hackney carriages outside departmental contracts and reclaimed by officials as travel and subsistence expenditure. That information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Market Research

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list each item of market and opinion research commissioned since May 1997 by (a) his Department and (b) agencies and non-departmental public bodies for which his Department is responsible; what the purpose of each item was; and whether the results were published. [137004]

Mr. Touhig: The Wales Office was established in 1999. Since then the Wales Office has not commissioned any market or opinion research.

New Jobs

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many new jobs there are in (a) the private sector and (b) the public sector in Wales; [137649]

(2) how many new jobs there have been in (a) the private sector and (b) the public sector in Wales since 1997. [137648]

Mr. Touhig: Comparing the 12 months to August 2003 with 1997, there has been an increase of 49,000 people employed in the public sector and 61,000 employed in the private sector in Wales.

Performance Monitoring

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what the total cost was of (a) setting, (b) monitoring and (c) measuring the performance targets for his Department in 2002–03; and how many and what grades of civil servants monitor these targets. [137952]

Mr. Touhig: The setting, measuring and monitoring of Wales Office's performance targets is an integral part of the job of all managers. It is not possible to disaggregate the cost. The Wales Office Management Board regularly reviews targets. It consists of the eight most senior people in the Department. Their grades are 3 (one person), 6 (four people) and 7 (three people).

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the performance targets that (a) his Department and (b) its agencies and non-departmental public bodies are required to meet; and if he will specify for each target (i) who sets it and (ii) who monitors achievement against it. [137967]

Mr. Touhig: This information is published in the Wales Office Departmental Report (Cm 5928), copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

The targets are set by Ministers on the advice of the Management Board and are monitored by Ministers and the Management Board.

Work-related Stress

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many cases of work-related stress have been reported in his Department in each of the last three years; how much compensation has been paid to employees; how many work days have been lost due to work-related stress, and at what cost, what procedures have been put in place to reduce work-related stress, and at what cost; and if he will make a statement. [136852]

Mr. Touhig: Detailed sick absence statistics are derived from medical and self-certificates, which are completed by staff or their GPs. While certain illnesses, such as "depression", "anxiety", "general debility" and even "stress" may be indicated on certificates, it is not possible to determine levels of "work-related stress". Consequently, we have no details on the number of working days lost due to work-related stress or the cost to the Department.

The Wales Office staff have available to them the resources of the National Assembly, and since June 2003, of the Department for Constitutional Affairs in tackling stress. These include a range of stress management courses for both line managers and employees, Health, Safety and Welfare intranet site, a stress handbook for line managers, and a fully trained in-house Welfare service.

The Department offers flexible working patterns, enabling staff to adopt more effective working patterns to better balance their work and home life.

We have a legal obligation to provide a safe working environment for all our staff and, under the Government's Revitalising Health and Safety initiative, we are committed to meeting targets for reducing the number of working days lost generally to work-related injuries and illnesses.

WORK AND PENSIONS

Pension Schemes

18. Mr. Best: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what measures are in place to protect the (a) values and (b) benefits of pension fund schemes created by the former publicly owned industries. [138651]

Malcolm Wicks: Responsibility for the pension fund schemes created by the former publicly owned industries is a matter for the relevant sponsor Departments, or their successors, and the successor companies themselves. More generally, however, we have proposed a range of protection measures which will apply to the pension funds created by the former publicly owned industries in the same way as they will to those of any other privately owned company.

Through the introduction of the new Pension Protection Fund, we are taking action to make sure that members of defined benefit schemes will still have the secure retirement they were expecting. The Government has also published and consulted on draft regulations that increase the debt due from solvent employers when their salary-related pension scheme is wound up. In addition we are at present consulting on draft Regulations on the proposed new priority order.

Mr. Best: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will introduce legislation to prevent employers from taking contribution holidays from their employees' pension fund schemes. [137921]

Malcolm Wicks: No.

Since pension provision by employers is voluntary, the levels of contributions are a matter for agreement between pension scheme trustees and sponsoring employers.

Under the new scheme-specific funding regime which will replace the Minimum Funding Requirement, trustees and sponsoring employers will be required to develop and agree, with the scheme actuary's advice, the funding principles for their scheme—including a determination of whether the level of contributions is sufficient to meet a scheme's long-term pension commitments.

The new simplified tax regime for approved pension schemes (set out in the document "Simplifying the taxation of pensions: increasing choice and flexibility for all" (December 2002)) would abolish the rules requiring approved occupational pension schemes to run off their surplus funds (for example by agreeing contributions holidays) or lose their full tax exempt status. In addition, the document "Action on Occupational Pensions" announced that pension funds will no longer be able to make payments of surplus to employers from an actuarial surplus only where the scheme was funded above a level sufficient to secure full buy-out of scheme liabilities.

Pension Credit

19. Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what plans he has to maximise take-up of pension credit. [138652]

Malcolm Wicks: We want every pensioner to take up their entitlement. At the heart of our marketing campaign is a direct mail pack to all pensioner households who have not been converted to pension credit automatically. We will have written to all pensioner households by June 2004. To support this process we are running an advertising campaign on TV, radio and in the press to encourage pensioners to apply.

The Pension Service Local Service are also playing a key role in take-up of pension credit, particularly in encouraging pensioners who traditionally do not take up their entitlement to apply. Working closely with key partners such as Citizens Advice, Age Concern and local authorities and with local voluntary organisations the local service reach these pensioners at locations that suit their needs. Activities being undertaken include awareness sessions, information surgeries and take-up campaigns. Over this month the Local Service has held or plans to hold over 1,300 events which are expected to reach around 117,000 people.

21. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many pensioners he estimates will be in receipt of means-tested benefits as a result of the introduction of the pension credit by 2004–05. [138654]

Malcolm Wicks: The Department estimates that in 2004–05 there will be approximately three million pensioner benefit units receiving income related benefits.

Tom Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will make a statement on the pension credit. [138637]

Malcolm Wicks: Pension credit is making a real difference to the lives of millions of pensioners. As the Secretary of State reported on 11 November, at the end of October there were already 1.97 million pensioner households, around 2.3 million individuals, receiving pension credit. And 1.2 million households, around 1.4 million individuals, are now receiving more money than they did before, with the average award being £47.10 per week, Official Report, 11 November 2003, column 18WS.

Our advertising campaign is continuing and we are working with partner organisations, such as Help The Aged, Age Concern and Citizens Advice, to fulfil our aspiration that every pensioner takes up their entitlement.

And it is not too late to apply. Anyone who makes an application before October 2004, where entitlement exists, will have their award backdated to October 2003, or to the date entitlement begins if this is later.

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what he estimates that the average (a) single pensioner and (b) pensioner couple will receive each week under the pension credit in (a) the North West region, (b) Merseyside and (c) St. Helens South. [137982]

Malcolm Wicks: The information requested is for estimates. The figures set out in the following table are the actual average amounts.

Weekly average amount in payment (£)

Area	All claimants	Couples	Singles
North West and Merseyside (GOR)	45.92	58.26	43.30
Merseyside Metropolitan County Council	46.24	56.66	43.95
St. Helens South Parliamentary Constituency	44.63	55.37	42.23

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many people in (a) the north west region, (b) Merseyside and (c) St. Helens South have claimed the pension credit. [137985]

Malcolm Wicks: The information is not available in the format requested.

As at 17 October 2003 the number of people receiving pension credit in St. Helens South was 3,615, in Merseyside Metropolitan 67,185, and in the north west and Merseyside region 261,250.

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions by how much he estimates the income of the average (a) single pensioner and (b) pensioner couples will change under the pension credit for (i) the north west region, (ii) Merseyside and (iii) St. Helens, South compared with that in 1997. [138014]

Malcolm Wicks: The information is not available in the format requested.

As at 17 October 2003 the average weekly gain for those on Pension Credit is indicated in the table.

The Government will be spending around £8 billion extra on pensioners in 2003–04 as a result of the measures introduced since 1997. This includes around £3.75 billion on the poorest third of pensioners—the very people who need help the most. This is almost six times as much as an earnings link to the basic state pension since 1998 would have given them.

Following the introduction of the Pension Credit, the average pensioner household will be £1,250 per year, or £24 per week, better off due to the Government's personal tax and benefit changes than they would have been under the 1997 system.

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what the Government's plans are to ensure maximum take-up in (a) the north west region, (b) Merseyside and (c) St. Helens South of the pension credit. [138015]

Malcolm Wicks: I refer my hon. Friend to the written answer which I gave to the hon. Member for Eltham (Clive Efford) on 15 September 2003, Official Report, column 559W. The Pension Service local service continues to work with partner organisations in the north west, Merseyside and St. Helens South, including Age Concern, local authorities and local voluntary organisations, to tell pensioners about pension credit, raise awareness and encourage those eligible to apply. Activities at the local level are particularly aimed at encouraging applications from pensioners who traditionally do not take up their entitlement and include awareness sessions, information surgeries and take-up campaigns.

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many people in (a) the North West region, (b) Merseyside and (c) St. Helens South are entitled to the pension credit. [138016]

Malcolm Wicks: The information is not available in the format requested but we estimate that around 500,000 pensioner households in the North West and Merseyside region are eligible for Pension Credit.

Unemployment

22. Mr. Borrow: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will make a statement on long-term trends in unemployment. [138655]

Mr. Browne: Labour market statistics continue to show employment growing and unemployment on a downward trend. In the last month the unemployment figure fell from 3.1 per cent. to 3.0 per cent., the lowest figure in over 25 years.

These are great achievements. But we know we still have more to do. We are working to ensure that all groups of people, in all parts of the country, have access to job opportunities and are given the support they need to overcome the barriers they face.

Pensioner Incomes

23. Vera Baird: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what recent assessment he has made of the effect of Government policy on the incomes of (a) the poorest pensioners and (b) all pensioners. [138656]

Malcolm Wicks: As a result of Government measures already undertaken since 1997, including the introduction of pension credit in October, on average:

pensioner households will be £1,250 a year better off in real terms—around £24 extra a week; and the poorest third of pensioner households will have gained £1,600 a year in real terms.

Providing a decent income for the poorest pensioners is key. Since April 2003, no pensioner has to get by on less than £102.10 per week (£155.80 for couples).

Age Discrimination

24. Dr. Palmer: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will take steps to bring about the early elimination of age discrimination in employment. [138657]

Mr. Browne: We are committed to introducing legislation to outlaw age discrimination in employment in October 2006. Meanwhile we shall continue to promote the employment of those aged 50 and over through our Age Positive Campaign.

Asbestos Surveyors

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many United Kingdom Accreditation Service asbestos surveyors are registered in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [137814]

Mr. Browne: The United Kingdom Accreditation Service (UKAS) has accredited 50 organisations that carry out inspections for asbestos in building. A further 40 organisations have applied for accreditation. The Department holds no information on the numbers of surveyors employed by these organisations.

Council Tax Benefit

Mr. Dhanda: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what steps his Department is taking to encourage people on low incomes to claim council tax benefit. [138653]

Mr. Pond: Local authorities have a statutory duty to promote council tax benefit for which they use leaflets, posters and information on websites. Most authorities also include information when issuing council tax bills.

A specific leaflet on council tax benefit is available from post offices, as well as information included in generic departmental guides.

Automated Credit Transfer

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many people have migrated from over-the-counter post office benefit payments to direct bank transfer since 1 April in (a) Haltemprice and Howden, (b) the East Riding of Yorkshire and (c) England. [116766]

Mr. Pond: The information is not available in the precise format requested.

Information has been compiled from the data available on 22 March 2003 and that available on 6 September 2003, and is shown in the following table.

Number of customers receiving benefits that have migrated from payments at post offices to those paid into bank, building society or Post Office card accounts, which may also be collectable at post offices, between 22 March 2003 and 6 September 2003

	Number of customers
Haltemprice and Howden constituency	1,570
East Riding of Yorkshire local authority	6,615
England	977,770

The above figures are payload not caseload figures, therefore a claimant may be counted more than once if they are on several benefits.

Notes:
Customers who have chosen to be paid into a bank account a Post Office card account will continue to be paid by order book until their present order book runs out, and will not have been included in the numbers above where that order book was still current on 6 September.

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what percentage of recipients in each benefit category do not have a bank account; what measures his Department is taking to encourage the take-up of the Post Office card accounts by those without a bank or building society account; and what targets his Department has set for the paying of benefits by automatic credit transfer to those without a bank or building society account. [137745]

Mr. Pond: The following table shows the percentage of recipients in each benefit category that do not have a bank account suitable for direct payment. This information has been derived from the data used to compile the Family Resources Survey[1] (FRS) 2001–02.

Benefit	Per cent. of recipients in each benefit category that do not have a bank account suitable for direct payment
Working age benefits	33
Disability and carer's benefit	23
Retirement pension[1]	10
Child benefit	12
War pensions	8
All benefits	13

[1] Excluding MIG cases.

The Department has a published Public Service Agreement target that by 2005, 85 per cent. of customers will have their benefits paid by direct payment. People are being provided with all the information they need on all of their "account options", including which accounts can be used at post office branches. It will be up to the customers themselves to decide which type of account they wish to have their money paid into. Already 87 per cent. of all customers have access to a bank account that can receive direct payment.

The move to direct payment is progressing well. Key figures on the progress of conversion to direct payment are available in the Library, updated every four weeks.

Carers Allowance

John Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what estimate he has made of the number of people aged over 65 years in (a) Glasgow, Anniesand and (b) the United Kingdom, who have an underlying entitlement to carers allowance but who cannot receive it because they are also in receipt of the state pension. [136943]

Maria Eagle: Information for Great Britain is as follows

Number of people aged over 65 years who have an underlying entitlement to carers allowance but who do not receive payment due to the receipt of State Pension as at 31 May 2003

	Number of people aged 65 and over who are entitled but do not receive payment
Anniesland Glasgow	140
Great Britain	54,625

Note:
Figures are rounded to the nearest 5

Source:
IAD Information Centre, 100 per cent. sample

It is assumed all people with an overlapping benefit who are over 65 are not receiving Carers Allowance because of State Pension.

Employment Statistics

Ms Munn: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will make a statement on the number of people (a) in employment now and (b) in employment in 1997, broken down by (i) permanent and (ii) temporary employment. [138636]

Mr. Browne: Building on a platform of sound economic management, our welfare-to-work policies have helped increase the number of people in permanent employment by nearly two million since 1997.

We are now at record levels of employment and this has been achieved against a background of economic stability. As the number of people in employment has risen, the number of people in temporary jobs has actually fallen by over 260,000.

Hospital Patients (Benefit Cuts)

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how much the abolition of benefit cuts for patients in the first 52 weeks of a hospital stay has cost his Department. [138622]

Malcolm Wicks: The estimated cost of increasing the period of time to 52 weeks before relevant benefits are reduced is £65 million per year.

Notes:

1. Costs are based on 2001–02 administrative data and average amounts. Numbers are rounded to the nearest million and expressed in 2003–04 terms.

2. Costs take into account all benefits covered by the change from six to 52 weeks.

IT Expenditure

Dr. Pugh: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what major IT projects with a value in excess of £10,000 he authorised expenditure on in each of the last three financial years. [125723]

Mr. Browne: Expenditure on projects is formally approved by the Department's governance process and authorised through review gates. These reviews ensure that projects are meeting the standards we expect (including business change, technical, financial and commercial criteria) before authority to progress to the next stage of their development is given.

Major IT projects are those contained within our modernisation programme which is regularly reviewed by the Secretary of State. The following table outlines the major IT projects included in the programme during the period April 2000 to March 2003 and provides supplementary information regarding the stage each project has reached and its key achievements to date. For completeness it includes two major modernisation projects to create new infrastructure for Jobcentre Plus and the Pension Service.

The key stages in the Department's project lifecycle are defined as follows:

0. Initial feasibility
1. Define and initiate
2. Design changes
3. Develop changes
4. Implement changes; realise benefits

It should be noted that project details may alter as they pass through the project lifecycle.

Project Name—2000–03	What stage the project has reached	Key achievements to date
Child support reform (CSR)	Implement Changes	Since 3 March 2003, new child support claims have been calculated using the new rules and new IT.

Staff will be able to check information supplied against that already held and issue the customer with a statement reflecting the information supplied.
Debt management	Implement changes	October 2003: Nine out of ten debt centres now set-up.
Digital office infrastructure (DOI) previously known as early office infrastructure	Implement changes	DOI aims to implement a modern IT infrastructure platform across the Department allowing staff access to modern business software. By October 2003 over 128,000 PCs had been installed.
Modernising the employment service	Realised benefits	March 2001: Worktrain website launched. February 2001: network of Jobpoint kiosks completed. October 2001: Employer Direct service goes national.

Pension credit application line have taken their millionth call.
Pensions transformation programme (PTP)	Design changes	The project is currently focusing on designing and delivering changes to the Pension Service organisation, business processes, services and IT.
Implementation of the Pension Service, including project empower	Realised benefits	26 pension centres operational, including those part of the Project Empower (Burnley and Swansea)
Resource management system	Develop changes	The project is configuring standard Oracle software and implementing best practice processes to replace the Department's existing resource management systems.
Pensions forecasting	Implement changes	October 2001: Combined pensions forecasting service available.
Interactive e-services	Implement changes	April 2003 customers are able to claim child benefit and provide information about changes of circumstances electronically via the internet.
ISCS/JSAPS modernisation project	Define and initiate	The Department's updated IS/IT strategy has identified new ways of delivering IT improvements at lower risk. The modernisation of our income support and jobseekers allowance systems is now being taken forward in line with updated IS/IT strategy principles for example, a preference for commercially available packages rather than bespoke development and staged incremental improvements rather than "big bang" replacement.
Modernising appeals programme	Initial feasibility	The programme was refocused in October 2003 because of doubts about its cost effectiveness. A new feasibility study has been commissioned to look at lower cost approaches, and to include any business change requirements resulting from the move to the Department of Constitutional Affairs.

Jobcentre Plus

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will make a statement on the future of call centres in London for Jobcentre Plus clients. [136830]

Mr. Browne: The administration of Jobcentre Plus is a matter for the Chief Executive of Jobcentre Plus, David Anderson. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from David Anderson to Andrew Dismore, dated November 2003:

As Jobcentre Plus is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about the future of call centres in London for Jobcentre Plus clients. This is something that falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

Contact Centres are an essential part of the new Jobcentre Plus process and allow customers to make claims by telephone without the need to attend a Jobcentre Plus office. The range of services offered by contact centres will be increased in time, along with the ability for customers to make claims via the internet.

The Department for Work and Pensions is currently undertaking a review with all of its operational businesses, including Jobcentre Plus, to determine overall requirements for contact centre capacity for the period up to 2007. This report is likely to be issued towards the end of the year. This will then inform decisions that will be made regarding the future of the three existing London contact centre sites.

I hope this is helpful.

Market Research

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will list each item of market and opinion research commissioned since May 1997 by (a) his Department and (b) agencies and non-departmental public bodies for which his Department is responsible; what the purpose of each item was; and whether the results were published. [137007]

Mr. Browne: This information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Minimum Income Guarantee

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many pensioners he estimates in (a) the north west region, (b) Merseyside and (c) St. Helens, South are eligible for the Minimum Income Guarantee. [137983]

Malcolm Wicks: Minimum Income Guarantee was replaced by Pension Credit in October 2003. Estimates of the national number of pensioners previously eligible for, but not claiming the Minimum Income Guarantee, Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit are included in the publication "Income-Related Benefits—Estimates of Take Up in 2000/2001", copies of which are available in the Library.

Around 3.8 million pensioner households are eligible for Pension Credit nationally with around 500,000 in the north west and Merseyside region.

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many pensioners in (a) the north west region, (b) Merseyside and (c) St. Helens South are in receipt of the minimum income guarantee. [137984]

Malcolm Wicks: As at May 2003, the number of minimum income guarantee recipients in St. Helens south was around 3,400, in Merseyside Metropolitan 61,800, and in the north west and Merseyside region, 248,600. These are the latest figures available.

Pension credit replaced minimum income guarantee from 6 October 2003.

Notes:
1. The MIG figure has been rounded to the nearest hundred.
2. The MIG figure is based on a 5 per cent. sample, and therefore subject to a degree of sampling variation.
3. Government office region/parliamentary constituency are assigned by matching postcodes against the relevant ONS postcode directory.
4. MIG recipients are defined as income support benefit units where the claimant, and/or partner is aged 60 or over.

New Deal

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions pursuant to his answer of 10 November 2003, Official Report, column 148W, on the New Deal, how many 18 to 24-year-olds left the New Deal for Young People with known destinations; and what percentage of these have subsequently found full-time employment. [139235]

Mr. Browne: Since the start of the programme, there have been 643,450[1] leavers from New Deal for Young People to known destinations, of which 55 per cent. have left to unsubsidised employment.

[1] Includes people who may have left the programme more than once.

Pensioners (Benefits)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will estimate the total value of benefits unclaimed by pensioners in each year since 1997. [138693]

Malcolm Wicks: The information requested is not available.

Estimates of take-up of income-related benefits for Great Britain are in the Department's reports titled "Income-Related Benefits—Estimates of Take-Up". Copies of all the reports in the series are in the Library.

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (1) what estimate he has made of public expenditure on (a) housing benefit for pensioners, (b) council tax benefit for pensioners and (c) pension credit as a percentage of gross domestic product in (i) 1997–98, (ii) 2002–03, (iii) 2010, (iv) 2020, (v) 2030, (vi) 2040, (vii) 2050 and (viii) for other years for which estimates have been made, assuming that the value of the pension credit increases in line with prices and that (A) pensioners' incomes from other sources rise in line with prices and (B) that pensioners' incomes from other sources rise in line with earnings; [134474]

(2) what estimate he has made of public expenditure on (a) housing benefit for pensioners, (b) council tax benefit for pensioners and (c) pension credit as a percentage of gross domestic product in (i) 1997–98, (ii) 2002–03, (iii) 2010, (iv) 2020, (v) 2030, (vi) 2040, (vii) 2050 and (viii) for other years for which estimates have been made, assuming that the value of the pension credit increases in line with earnings and that (A) pensioners' incomes from other sources rise in line with prices and (B) that pensioners' incomes from other sources rise in line with earnings. [134475]

Malcolm Wicks: Expenditure on income support/minimum income guarantee, housing benefit and council tax benefit for pensioners as a proportion of gross domestic product in 1997–98 and 2002–03 is shown in Table 1.

Table 1: Expenditure on income support/minimum income guarantee, housing benefit for pensioners and council tax benefit for pensioners as a proportion of gross domestic product

Percentage

	Income support/minimum income guarantee	Housing benefit	Council tax benefit
1997–98	0.45	0.45	0.15
2002–03	0.40	0.45	0.15

Note:
Figures rounded to the nearest 0.05 per cent.

The latest projections of the full cost of pension credit (guarantee credit and savings credit) to 2050 are published on page 148, Annex 3 of the Pensions Green Paper 'Simplicity, security and choice: working and saving for retirement' (cm 5677). Based on a number of assumptions about the future, as set out in Annex 3, this shows that pension credit expenditure could rise to around one and a half per cent. of GDP by 2050.

One of the assumptions used was that on average, income brought to account in the pension credit would increase in line with average earnings.

The Pensioners' Incomes Series 2001–02, based on Family Resources Survey and Family Expenditure Survey data, shows that average pensioner incomes between 1979 and 1996–97 rose by 64 per cent. in real terms, compared to average earnings growth in the whole economy of 36 per cent. in real terms. More recent growth estimates are subject to uncertainty, but the growth in average pensioner incomes between 1994–95 and 2001–02 was around 23 per cent. in real terms, higher than average earnings (up 12 per cent. over the same period).

Robust projections of future spending on pension credit, housing benefit for pensioners and council tax benefit for pensioners, based on alternative assumptions, and in different years, are not available centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However Table 2 provides a broad indication, of the likely relative costs in 2050 under alternative scenarios of pension credit uprating and pensioner income growth.

Table 2: Expenditure in 2050 on pension credit, housing benefit for pensioners and council tax benefit for pensioners as a proportion of gross domestic product

Percentage

Pension credit rises by	Pensioner incomes rise by	Pension credit	Housing benefit	Council tax benefit
Earnings	Prices	3.80	0.60	0.35
	Earnings	1.60	0.50	0.20
Prices	Prices	0.30	0.55	0.15
	Earnings	0.10	0.25	0.05

Note:
Figures rounded to the nearest 0.05 per cent.

As explained, given the evidence of past pensioner income growth, the likelihood that those eligible for pension credit in the future will have higher state retirement pension income than previous cohorts, and the growth of non-pension income, such as earnings, this assumption is likely to be unrealistic.

The long-term cost of pension credit, housing benefit and council tax benefit will also depend greatly on the decisions made by future governments in annual uprating statements. This Government are committed to increase the guarantee in line with average earnings for the remainder of this Parliament, ensuring that all pensioners share in rising national prosperity. Following the introduction of pension credit, the Government will be spending an additional £9.2 billion on pensioners in 2004–05 as a result of measures introduced since 1997.

Pensioners (Council Tax)

Dr. Jack Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many pensioners were in receipt of (a) full and (b) partial council tax benefit in Copeland (i) in 1996–97 and (ii) in the last financial year for which figures are available; what percentage of all pensioners in Copeland this represents in each case; and if he will make a statement. [138471]

Mr. Pond: The available information is in the table.

Council tax benefit beneficiaries aged 60 and over in the North West Government Office Region: May 1997 and May 2002

	Partial benefit	Full benefit	Total
Number of beneficiaries
May 1997	143,000	181,000	324,000
May 2002	115,000	259,000	374,000

1. Figures are based on a 1 per cent sample and are therefore subject to a degree of sampling variation.
2. Valid figures from a 1 per cent. sample are not available by local authority as they would be subject to a high degree of sampling error.
3. Caseload figures have been rounded to the nearest thousand.
4. Percentages have been rounded to one decimal place.

Pensions

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what plans he has to amend the FRS17 account measure for company pension schemes; and if he will make a statement. [137121]

Malcolm Wicks: Amendment of FRS17 is not a Government responsibility. It set by the independent Accounting Standards Board for the purpose of providing clarity of liabilities in company accounts. Its full implementation has been deferred awaiting the development of a revised International Accounting Standard, being developed by the independent International Accounting Standards Board (IASB). It is anticipated that the revised international standard will be agreed by 2004.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions by which means pensioners who receive their pension by order book and have not replied to his Department's literature about direct payment by April 2005 will receive their payments. [138797]

Maria Eagle: 90 per cent. of pensioners already have an account suitable to receive Direct Payment.

Key figures on the progress of conversion to Direct Payment are available in the Library and are updated every four weeks.

We will be writing to the remaining pensioners over the next year. In addition we will be making further contact with those who have not responded.

However, we have always recognised that there will be some people who are genuinely unable to operate any type of bank account. For those customers an exceptions method of payment will be available. It is likely that the exceptions method of payment will be a cheque based solution and will be available at Post Office branches.

Remploy

Adam Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions, how many disabled people were employed by Remploy in each of the last four years. [135285]

Maria Eagle: Remploy directly supports disabled people through employment in one of its businesses, through placement with a third party employer, or by providing ongoing support to an employee of a mainstream employer to enable them to retain employment.

The actual number of disabled people employed by Remploy is different to the number the company supports under WORKSTEP, as it includes a small number of disabled people who are not supported by the programme and excludes a number of people who are supported by Remploy under the WORKSTEP programme, but who are employed by a third party.

	Disabled people employed by Remploy
1999–2000	9,613
2000–01	9,255
2001–02	8,728
1001–03	7,191

	Disabled people supported by Remploy through WORKSTEP	Of which employed by third party
1999–2000	10,262	672
2000–01	10,423	1,196
2001–02	10,523	1,839
2002–03	9,543	2,411

Winter Fuel Payments

Mr. Stevenson: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (1) what estimate he has made of the number of people who were newly entitled to the winter fuel payment in 2003–04 in (a) North Staffordshire, (b) Stoke-on-Trent and (c) the Stoke-on-Trent South constituency; [137775]

(2) how many people newly entitled to the winter fuel payment in 2003–04 claimed in (a) North Staffordshire, (b) Stoke-on-Trent and (c) Stoke-on-Trent South constituency. [137776]

Malcolm Wicks: The information is not available in the format requested. However, for the parliamentary constituencies of Stoke-on-Trent South, North and Central 3,911 winter fuel payment claim forms were issued to people who need to claim a payment for this winter. Of those 2,483 have submitted their claim forms.

We are publicising the availability of winter fuel payments and how to obtain a claim form. Those who need to claim for this winter have until 30 March 2004 to do so.

Note:

Information to identify those likely to be entitled was extracted from the Departmental Central Index based on postcodes.

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many people in (a) the City of Edinburgh local authority area, (b) Edinburgh West, (c) Edinburgh Central, (d) Edinburgh North and Leith, (e) Edinburgh South, (f) Edinburgh Pentlands, (g) Edinburgh East and Musselburgh will be eligible for winter fuel payments in 2003–04; and how many of these will receive the payment automatically. [138453]

Malcolm Wicks: The information is not available in the format requested. However, such information as is available is set out in the following table:

The number of people who would receive the winter fuel payment automatically in winter 2003–04 is expected to be similar to those in the table.

DEFENCE

Al Yamamah Programme

Norman Lamb: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department intends to introduce monitoring of sub-contractor performance in the Al Yamamah programme. [137237]

Mr. Ingram: The Department has no contractual relationship with sub-contractors, whose performance is a matter for the Al Yamamah Programme prime contractor, BAE Systems, and has no plans to introduce monitoring of sub-contractors.

Asset Valuation

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has made to the Treasury concerning the valuation of assets in his Department. [137914]

Mr. Hoon: Officials have held regular discussions and meetings with HM Treasury regarding the Department's financial position, including on the issue of asset valuations.

Bechtel

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the contracts for consultancy and other work carried out by Bechtel for agencies responsible to his Department in each year since 1997, stating in each case (a) the nature of the work, (b) the value of the contract and (c) the duration of the contract; and if he will make a statement. [137879]

Mr. Ingram: According to our records no contracts have been placed with Bechtel.

Chemical Ali

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on (a) the claim by UK armed forces to have killed the Iraqi known as Chemical Ali in Basra during the conflict earlier this year and (b) the recent claim by the US Administration to have captured Chemical Ali. [136708]

Mr. Ingram: Ali Hassan al-Majeed—"Chemical Ali"—is in US custody.

On 6 April there were indications that Ali Hassan al-Majeed had been in a building in Basra when it was destroyed by coalition aircraft. We said at the time that we believed that a body found was that of Ali Hassan al-Majeed but that we could not be certain until scientific tests had been performed to positively identify it. The tests subsequently proved that the body was not, in fact, his.

Chinook Helicopters

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what process the Mark 3 Chinook helicopter has undergone to ascertain its readiness for release to operational service; [137492]

(2) what the latest estimate is of the cost of the Mark 3 Chinook helicopter procurement project; [137497]

(3) when the budget for the Chinook Mark 3 Procurement project was authorised; and what the total cost forecast was at contract stage; [137498]

(4) what the differences between the Mark 2 Chinook helicopter, the Chinook 47-H and the Mark 3 Chinook helicopter are; [137493]

(5) what the differences between the Mark 2 Chinook helicopter, the Chinook 47-H and the Mark 3 Chinook helicopter are; [137494]

(6) how the validation process of the FADEC system fitted to the Mark 3 Chinook helicopter differs from the validation process used to validate the FADEC system fitted to the Mark 2 and Mark 2a Chinook helicopter; [137613]

(7) how many lines of software cope were written in programming the FADEC system fitted to the Chinook Mark 3 helicopter; [137614]

(8) what operational requirement the Mark 3 Chinook helicopter was designed to fulfil when the original order was placed in October 1995; [137495]

(9) what cost-benefit analysis was conducted prior to initiating procurement of the Mark 3 Chinook helicopter; and what the results were; [137496]

(10) what software language was used in writing the software for the FADEC fitted to the Mark 3 Chinook helicopter; and what sub-contractors have been used to conduct this work; [137615]

(11) which company was contracted to fit the FADEC system into the Mark 3 Chinook helicopter; [137616]

(12) what differences there are between the FADEC system fitted to the Mark 3 Chinook and the MH47 Chinook helicopter. [137617]

Mr. Ingram: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the release to service of the Mark 3 Chinook helicopters. [138386]

Mr. Ingram: I will write to the hon. Member and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

Cluster Munitions

Norman Lamb: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) air-launched and (b) ground-launched cluster munitions his Department purchased from Israeli Military Industries in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [135857]

Mr. Ingram: No air-launched cluster munitions are purchased from Israel. Ground-launched cluster munitions, which consist of Shell 155mm HE L20A1 Extended Range Bomblet Shell (ERBS), are purchased from Royal Ordnance Defence (ROD) as the prime contractor, who sub contract the manufacture of ERBS shell to Israeli Military Industries (IMI). The fuse is fitted by ROD Glascoed where the entire round is packaged.

The following quantities of ERBS have been purchased in the last five years: 6,000 in financial year 2002–03, 20,100 in financial year 2003–04, with a further quantity of 3,009 being provided against an option on the contract.

Clyde Dockyards

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for defence pursuant to his answer of 20 October 2003, Official Report, columns 373–4W, on departmental staff, what the total number of civilian personnel working at the Clyde dockyards was at the time of transfer of management to the private sector; what the procedure was (a) leading up to the decision for the transfer to be undertaken and (b) from the time of the decision for the transfer to be undertaken to the handover to the private sector; what companies participated in the process; what commitments in relation to job maintenance in Scotland were (i) sought and (ii) given as part of the transfer; and if he will make a statement. [138570]

Mr. Caplin: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Defence Budget (Scotland)

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much of the defence budget was spent in Scotland in the most recent year for which figures are available (a) in actual terms and (b) as a percentage of the total defence budget; and if he will make a statement. [138573]

Mr. Ingram: The information is not held centrally in the form requested and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

HMS Colchester

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will take steps to name a Royal Navy fighting ship, HMS Colchester. [139006]

Mr. Ingram: The new class of Royal Navy destroyers (the Type 45 or D Class) are to bear names beginning with the letter 'D', so Colchester cannot be a candidate for any of these. The same applies to the new Astute Class of submarine whose names all begin with the letter 'A'.

The Ships Names and Badges Committee has the task of assessing all the possible names for new ships before making their recommendation through the First Sea Lord and Secretary of State for Defence for final approval by Her Majesty the Queen. I am sure that Colchester, of which there have been six ships previously with the name, whose last Battle Honour was at the Battle of Lowestoft in 1665, will be among the names considered for future suitable vessels.

Iraq

Mr. Tynan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) bridges, (b) sewerage pumping stations and (c) power stations have been reconstructed and repaired by United Kingdom forces operating in Iraq. [134597]

Mr. Ingram: Responsibility for the repair of civil infrastructure lies with the Coalition Provisional Administration. Where possible, and within resource constraints, United Kingdom Forces will assist the Iraqi authorities in the reconstruction and repair of Iraqi infrastructure when requested to do so.

UK Forces have supported Iraqi engineers in the repair of sewerage pumping stations and power stations but we do not hold central records of the numbers involved. We have no record of UK Forces having repaired or reconstructed bridges in Iraq.

Mr. Tynan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what (a) distance of (i) road and (ii) electricity transmission system has been repaired and (b) length of railway has been returned to service by United Kingdom forces operating in Iraq. [134598]

Mr. Ingram: Responsibility for the repair of civil infrastructure lies with the Coalition Provisional Administration (CPA). Where possible, and within resource constraints, United Kingdom forces will assist the provisional Iraqi authorities in the reconstruction and repair of Iraqi infrastructure when requested to do so.

We have no record of any repairs to the road network. UK forces have repaired approximately 50 kilometres of electricity transmission system. In addition, UK forces have carried out repairs to the rail network in the Um Qasr region of Iraq and supported Iraqi rail maintenance crews on a number of other occasions.

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether all troops in the Gulf are fully equipped with desert clothing; and if he will make a statement. [122977]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 3 July 2003]: The Ministry of Defence has previously acknowledged the difficulties faced during Operation Telic in determining the in-theatre rate of consumption of, and tracking of, desert clothing. However, I can confirm that sufficient personal equipment, including desert clothing, has been despatched to theatre to equip all deployed UK Servicemen and women.

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what compensation will be paid to the estates of Iraqi civilians who died as a result of British military action in Iraq. [125109]

Mr. Ingram: There are no plans to pay compensation to Iraqi civilians killed during combat operations in Iraq.

The handling of claims made by Iraqis for losses which do not arise in connection with combat operations are governed by section 6 of the Coalition Provisional Authority Order Number 17. This provides that any such claims shall be submitted to and dealt with by the parent state of the person whose activities are alleged to have caused the loss. The claims will then be dealt with in a manner consistent with the national laws of that parent state.

Where a claim against British troops arises from activity which would not give rise to a legal liability to pay compensation under English law, there may nevertheless be an ex gratia payment made to the injured person or to the family of the deceased where this would be in accordance with local custom or directed to meet a particular urgent humanitarian need.

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the mechanisms in place for the sharing of information between the British and other coalition forces involved in operations in Iraq. [133309]

Mr. Ingram: The Ministry of Defence works closely with our partner nations to ensure effective sharing of information and intelligence including through the use of embedded officers within national command structures. Within the Multinational Division (South East), which is led by the United Kingdom, there is a combined Command and Control structure that includes all partner nations.

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what procedures are followed by UK personnel in Iraq before live ammunition is fired at civilians; and whether protocols have been agreed with US forces on procedures to be followed. [133417]

Mr. Ingram: Use of lethal force by United Kingdom armed forces personnel in Iraq is governed by the extant Rules of Engagement for Operation Telic. It is not our practice to comment on Rules of Engagement and I am withholding information regarding their contents under Exemption 1 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

We cannot comment on the Rules of Engagement used by other nations.

Military Colleges

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many students awarded service scholarships, undergraduate bursaries and cadetships, who were due to enter military colleges in the past five years, have withdrawn from the scheme; how many of those who have withdrawn repaid in full funds advanced to them prior to their withdrawal; whether the armed forces continue to pursue those who have not repaid sums received; and how much has been written off in each of the past five years. [133866]

Mr. Caplin: Those awarded university cadetships or bursaries are required, as a condition of the offer, to agree to refund the costs of the cadetship or bursary should they fail to complete five years (cadetships) or three years (bursaries) productive service (six years for Medical Cadetships and the RAF Flying Branch). Each case is considered on its merits, but it is the Department's normal practice to seek to recover its appropriate outlay when the specified return of service is not given, through a decision to leave the Service attributable to the individual. Salary payments are not recovered in respect of cadetships. Allowance is not made for time served except in respect of uniform costs. Recovery is not sought from those individuals whose service, or bursary, is terminated through no fault of their own (e.g. on medical grounds) and may be waived in whole or part on compassionate grounds or in other exceptional circumstances.

The following table gives details of the number of withdrawals from Army and RAF scholarships, cadetships and bursaries.

Withdrawal from scholarships, cadetships and bursaries

	*RN/RM	Army	RAF
1999–2000	11	57	Not available
2000–01	11	77	58
2001–02	24	69	58
2002–03	17	55	32
2003–04	17	34	21
Total	80	292	169

The number of recoveries initiated:

Recoveries initiated

	Army	RAF
1999–2000	46	58
2000–01	63	39
2001–02	68	48
2002–03	55	27
2003–04	34	18
Total	256	190

All award holder withdrawals (with the exception of the few who are excused repayment in accordance with the above policy) are pursued for full recovery, although some write-off actions have occurred and these are detailed as follows. The year in which write-off action is taken is not necessarily the year in which withdrawal occurred.

2000–01	0	4
2001–02	4	7
2002–03	4	2
2003–04	8	0
Total	16	13

I will write to the hon. Member once similar figures regarding withdrawals from Royal Marines scholarships, cadetships and bursaries have been collated and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

Operation Southern Focus

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the role of British forces in Operation Southern Focus. [129895]

Mr. Ingram: United Kingdom forces were not involved in Operation Southern Focus.

Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act

Brian White: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what statutory investigatory powers the Department has; which ones will be superseded by use of the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act 2000; and what plans he has for removing these legacy powers. [136130]

Mr. Caplin: In addition to the powers governed by the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act 2000, the Ministry of Defence Police have statutory investigatory powers under the MOD Police Act 1987 (as amended by the Anti-Terrorism Crime and Security Act 2001) and Service police investigatory powers are specified in the Army and Air Force Acts 1955 and the Naval Discipline Act 1957 (as amended by the various Armed Forces Acts).

No existing statutory investigatory powers will be superseded by use of the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act. Existing statutory investigatory powers to compel production of information will not be used to compel disclosure of communications data under Part 1 Chapter 11 of RIPA and there are no plans to repeal those existing powers.

Reservists (Life Insurance)

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to his answer of 27 October 2003, Official Report, columns 6–7W, on life insurance, what provisions were put in place to cover Reservists called up for service in the six months prior to 1 July. [138098]

Mr. Caplin: For many years, the Ministry of Defence has provided attributable death and injury benefits for Reservists under the War Pension Scheme and the Reserve Forces (Attributable Benefits Etc) Regulations. Commercial insurance has offered—and still offers—additional cover to those requiring it. The decision whether to take out such cover has always been a matter for the individual; MOD neither endorses nor sponsors commercial insurance schemes.

Reservists called up for service in the six months prior to 1 July 2003 could, if they wished, have taken out life cover under RPAX, and at that time been covered for war risks on joining the scheme. Information about RPAX was then, and still is, promulgated, periodically, to individual Reservists and units. In addition, Reservists would have been briefed on its availability at their respective mobilisation centres.

Saudi Arabia

Norman Lamb: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to the answer of 3 November 2003, Official Report, column 428–29W, on Saudi Arabia, when his Department's Permanent Secretary raised the allegations against British Aerospace/BAE Systems and Robert Lee International with the Chairman of BAE Systems; how these allegations were raised; what type of claims have to be endorsed by staff of his Department's Director General of the Saudi Armed Forces Project; what the terms of the Al Yamamah contracts are in respect of the endorsement claims; and if he will make a statement. [137234]

Mr. Ingram: The Department's Permanent Secretary raised the matter with the Chairman of BAE Systems in May 2001, in the context of the Government's firm anti-fraud policies.

The Al Yamamah contracts provide for a set of accounting processes, jointly agreed between the UK and Saudi Arabian Governments, which cover the endorsement and recording of approved claims. The processes cover claims for goods and services supplied to Saudi Arabia under the Al Yamamah contracts. Staff of the Directorate General Saudi Armed Forces Project endorse the fact that such goods and services have been supplied to the agreed specification or standard and at the price set out in the Al Yamamah contracts. All claims are made in the name of the Prime Contractor, BAE Systems.

Ships (Sale and Disposal)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) submarines and (b) surface ships are decommissioned and awaiting (i) sale and (ii) disposal. [137561]

Mr. Ingram: Currently, one conventionally powered (diesel electric) Upholder Class submarine is undergoing refurbishment pending handover to Canada. Twelve nuclear-powered submarines have been decommissioned and will be disposed of in due course. In addition, one decommissioned surface ship (a Fleet Diving Tender) is awaiting sale and one (Fearless Class) is awaiting disposal.

Territorial Army

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Territorial Army personnel are on active service; and how many are expected to be on active service over the Christmas period. [138440]

Mr. Caplin: As at 1 September 2003, 4,160 members of the Territorial Army (TA) were mobilised, either on operations abroad, or in support of those operations in the United Kingdom.

It is estimated that 1,600 members of the TA will be on active service over the Christmas period. This figure does not include those individuals who, although still compulsorily mobilised, have returned home from active service but not yet completed their post operational tour leave.

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the role of the Territorial Army in Iraq. [138441]

Mr. Caplin: The Territorial Army (TA) undertake any and every task that is performed by their regular armed forces counterparts and are present throughout British Army units in Iraq. This is entirely in accordance with the Strategic Defence Review which set out a requirement for the TA to become a more integrated, relevant, useable force, better able to support their Regular counterparts on operations overseas.

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what assessment he has made of the effect of the change in the number of annual training days in the Territorial Army on (a) morale, (b) retention and (c) recruitment; [138443]

(2) how the change in the number of annual Territorial Army training days will affect the pay of (a) privates and (b) majors in the TA. [138442]

Mr. Caplin: It has been assessed that the change in the numbers of annual training days in the Territorial Army being put in place will have no significant effect on morale, retention and recruitment.

The change will not affect the pay of privates or majors in the Territorial Army, nor will it impact on the ability of members of the Territorial Army to earn their annual bounty payment.

Unexploded Ordnance

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment his Department has made of the (a) quantity, (b) spread and (c) location of (i) mines, (ii) unexploded cluster bomb submunitions and (iii) unexploded conventional munitions in Iraq; what efforts are (A) planned and (B) underway to locate, defuse and remove these munitions; and if he will make a statement. [133319]

Mr. Ingram: The provision of a safe, secure and risk free environment for the Iraqi people is a key aspect of restoration activity for all members of the International Coalition in Iraq. The United Kingdom takes seriously its obligations as a member of that coalition to deal with unexploded ordnance. Unexploded ordnance in Iraq includes munitions from the Iran-Iraq war, mines laid by Iraqi forces, stores of ammunition and other ordnance left by Iraqi military and paramilitary forces as well as ordnance fired or dropped by both sides during recent hostilities.

Since the end of major combat operations UK and other Coalition forces have been engaged in clearing sites containing unexploded ordnance. In the UK's area of responsibility an average of about 45 new sites have been discovered each week. Whenever a site is discovered UK forces mark the site and inform those in the vicinity. The munitions are then recovered or destroyed as soon as resources permit. To date around 1,600 sites have been cleared, containing about 619,000 munitions. We do not record individual types of munitions cleared.

We are not in a position to comment on progress made in other areas of Iraq by our coalition partners.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment his Department has made of the (a) quantity, (b) spread and (c) location of (i) mines, (ii) unexploded cluster bomb submunitions and (iii) unexploded conventional munitions in Afghanistan; what efforts are (A) planned and (B) underway to locate, defuse and remove these munitions; what countries are participating in these efforts; and if he will make a statement. [133320]

Mr. Ingram: Responsibility for the assessment and clearance of unexploded ordnance (UXO) in Afghanistan rests with that nation's ruling authorities. The majority of the assessment and the clearance of UXO is conducted by Non-Governmental Organisations (NGO) and commercial demining companies, in many cases working under the auspices of the United Nations. At the end of 2002, independent assessment showed that some 263 square kilometres of land had been cleared of UXO.

The Ministry of Defence carries out assessments of the quantity, spread and location of mines and UXO to ensure the force protection of our Service personnel or to counter any immediate threat to civilian life in Afghanistan. Military Explosive Ordnance Disposal (EOD) capability is currently provided by Canada, France, Germany, Italy, Sweden and Croatia as part of the International Stabilisation and Assistance Force (ISAF).

Wideawake Airport

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the running cost in 2003–04 is of the establishment at Wideawake airport, Ascension Island; and what the estimated budget for the next financial year is. [139101]

Mr. Caplin: Wideawake is a United States airfield and is jointly operated by the US Air Force and the RAF. Excluding the value of assets, the Department's net operating cost budget for RAF Ascension Island in Financial Year 2003–04 is £9,547,243. The equivalent figure presently planned for FY 2004–05 is £8,425,000.

PRIME MINISTER

House of Lords

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister if the Secretary of State will require the House of Lords Appointments Commission to publish in its Annual Report statistics relating to the participation of people's peers in votes, questions and debates. [138515]

The Prime Minister: No.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister how many and what proportion of the local and national organisations contracted by the House of Lords Appointments Commission to help identify suitable nominees for a people's peerage responded to the request by furnishing names; and if he will make a statement. [138658]

The Prime Minister: The House of Lords Appointments Commission did not collate this information.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister how many applicants for a people's peerage since April 2001 were self-nominated. [138662]

The Prime Minister: The Appointments Commission does not distinguish between nominations and self-nominations and, therefore, does not keep figures on the number of self-nominations received. All nominations are considered against the same criteria, regardless of whether they are nominated or self-nominated, and all nominees complete the same nomination form.

EU Summits

Keith Vaz: To ask the Prime Minister how many EU summits are scheduled for next year; and how many the Prime Minister plans to attend (a) in connection with and (b) unconnected with the Presidency. [139237]

The Prime Minister: There are four European Council summits planned next year for Heads of State and Government, which I plan to attend. Two will be under the Irish Presidency and two under the Presidency of the Netherlands.

Heads of State (Television Footage)

Norman Baker: To ask the Prime Minister if he will set controls on the use of recorded footage of Her Majesty The Queen and foreign heads of state to prevent their use for political purposes by foreign heads of state and government. [139282]

The Prime Minister: The media facilities for this State Visit will follow the same pattern as in previous Visits, including the recent State Visit of President Putin in June this year.

It is not the role of the Government to instruct the media, both British and foreign, in the use of the material they obtain during their coverage of State Visits.

Iraq

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister pursuant to his answer of 27 October 2003, Official Report, column 50W, on Iraq, what steps he took to ascertain the nature of the delivery system to which the time of 45 minutes, mentioned in the Joint Intelligence Committee's assessment of 9 September, referred. [138629]

The Prime Minister: This intelligence report did not significantly amend the long standing Joint Intelligence Committee assessment that Iraq had command and control and logistical arrangements in place for the use of weapons of mass destruction. This particular piece of intelligence added precision as to timing which had not previously been available but did not change the overall picture and therefore there was no reason to seek further information.

As the Intelligence and Security Committee noted in their report on 9 September 2003 there was convincing intelligence that Iraq had active chemical, biological and nuclear programmes, the capability to produce chemical and biological weapons. All of this, irrespective of the means by which such weapons were to be delivered, was in breach of UN Security Council Resolutions.

Policy Advice

Norman Baker: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the subjects on which he has asked the right hon. Member for Hartlepool (Mr. Mandelson) to undertake policy advice to ministers and other Government work since 1 January. [139275]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 11 September, Official Report, column 367W.

President Bush (State Visit)

Norman Baker: To ask the Prime Minister what analysis of historical precedent was undertaken in deciding to invite President Bush to make a State Visit to the United Kingdom. [139283]

The Prime Minister: Each State Visit is considered on an individual basis, underlining the relationship between the UK and the nation of the visiting Head of State. The UK and US have a deep and close relationship across a wide spectrum of issues.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Discrimination

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the Government's policy is on extending discrimination law to include the media. [138165]

Ms Hewitt: Media organisations are covered by existing discrimination law in the same way as other employers and service providers. There are no plans to extend legislation specifically in relation to the media industry.

Arms Exports

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry pursuant to her answer of 6 October 2003, Official Report, column 1069W, for what reason her Department has not provided support to Interpol's international weapons and explosives tracking system. [138613]

Mr. Timms: The Department has no responsibility for tracking weapons or explosives.

British Energy

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress has been made in the restructuring of British Energy; and if she will make a statement. [139571]

Mr. Timms: I refer the hon. Member to the written statement made by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, on 14 October 2003, Official Report, columns 10WS–12WS about the progress in the restructuring of British Energy. I also refer to the company's further related announcement on 31 October "Update on Proposed Restructuring", a copy of which I have placed in the Libraries of the House.

Call Centres

Mr. Andrew Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will encourage large companies to keep their call centre bases in the United Kingdom. [135473]

Mr. Timms: Companies in the UK are operating in an increasingly competitive, global marketplace. It is a commercial matter for companies to decide where to locate their operations. In doing so companies will need to consider a number of factors including, inter alia, the strategic importance to the business of their call centre operations and the relative risks and benefits of transferring these overseas, the geographic distribution of their customer base and the need to be close to customers, location of their competitors, relative costs, and the ability to maintain service quality. The United Kingdom has by far the greatest number of call centre operations in Europe reflecting our expertise in call centre management and the wish by many companies to retain call centre bases here.

A protectionist approach would run the risk of forcing companies to locate completely out of the UK which would not be to our long term economic benefit. We are, however, continuing to create a stable, competitive, economic environment in the UK for all companies to operate in. Our long term economic interest will be based on our ability to innovate to produce high value-added goods and services, supported by a highly skilled workforce, high calibre managers, forward looking unions and knowledgeable consumers.

Company Regulation (Cold Calling)

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans she has to regulate companies which cold call customers. [138717]

Mr. Timms: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Huddersfield (Mr. Sheerman) on 10 November 2003, Official Report, column 22W.

Competitiveness Council

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the outcome was of the Competitiveness Council held on 10 and 11 November; what the Government's stance was on the issues discussed, including its voting record; and if she will make a statement. [138785]

Jacqui Smith: I represented the UK at the Competitiveness Council, Brussels on 10 November 2003. Andy Kerr MSP was also present.

There was an initial exchange of views over the proposed Directive on Unfair Commercial Practices.

The Council reached General Agreement on the Electromagnetic Compatibility Directive. This is designed to guarantee free movement of electrical equipment within the Internal Market, whilst ensuring that such equipment does not create unacceptable levels of electromagnetic disturbance.

The Council adopted a Resolution on the application of New Approach Directives.

The Commission presented its new proposal for a Chemicals Regulation, stressing its importance for European industry. There were differing views of the impact on downstream users, and the Commission stated that it would like to discuss this, and the question of impact assessment at a public meeting on 23 November.

The Presidency said that this was a priority issue in the Competitiveness Council agenda. There will be a policy debate at the next meeting on 26 and 27 November 2003. I asked for environmental and industrial interests to work together, and called for more effective prioritisation and simplification of the registration procedure, with one substance and one registration.

There was a discussion on Competitiveness Policy. The Commission recognised the need for its proposals to take competitiveness aspects properly into account. The Council and European Parliament would be able to see improvements in the extended impact procedure in the 2004 work programme.

I supported the idea of a competitiveness test and called for a better regulation 'expert' working group to be established as soon as possible to help assess the quality of impact assessments.

The Presidency concluded that the Competitiveness Council needed to work with other Council formations to ensure they took competitiveness into account in their work.

The Presidency asked for views on the Growth Initiative in the light of the October European Council's conclusions.

Several of the projects are in the field of Research and Development. Key areas were nanotechnology, space and high speed networks for research bodies. I stated that I wanted to see clear criteria for projects based upon project readiness and EU added value. I also confirmed that UK preferences were close to those of the Commission.

The Presidency concluded that the Council should agree a new list of priority projects on 27 November, for presentation to the December European Council.

The Council agreed a Resolution on Researchers' Careers.

There was a discussion over lunch on the EU candidate site for ITER (International Thermonuclear Experimental Reactor).

Copyright Directive

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress has been made with ensuring compliance with the EU Copyright Directive; and if she will make a statement. [137542]

Ms Hewitt: The Copyright and Related Rights Regulations 2003 (SI 2003 No. 2498) bringing UK law into full compliance with the EU Copyright Directive came into force on 31 October 2003.

Debt Collection

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will take steps to prevent companies from using the same home visiting personnel both to sell loans and collect debts. [138598]

Mr. Sutcliffe: The practice of one agent both selling loans, and collecting the payments due, is extensively used in the doorstep lending sector. This practice has not been shown to be inconsistent with either fair dealing or responsible lending and there is some evidence that it is valued by many consumers. I therefore do not intend to take any action in this matter.

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will place in the Library the responses received to the Office of Fair Trading consultation on debt collection. [138237]

Mr. Sutcliffe [holding answer 13 November 2003]: The responses received to the Office of Fair Trading consultation on debt collection, other than those where the respondent requested confidentiality, are available for viewing at:

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many licences have been (a) granted and (b) revoked by the Office of Fair Trading to (i) debt collectors and (ii) lenders, (A) since the Consumer Credit Act 1974 was introduced and (B) in each year since 1997. [138238]

Mr. Sutcliffe [holding answer 13 November 2003]: The information is not available in the form requested. Information on licence revocations is not broken down by market sector and is not available for the early years. Disaggregated information is available on the issue of Minded to Revoke Notices (MTRs). There is no licence category which precisely corresponds to "lenders". "Consumer Credit Business" is likely to be wider and "Finance Companies" narrower. The available information is set out as follows:

Employers' Liability Insurance

Brian Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions she has had with the Department for Work and Pensions on the progress of the second stage report of its review of Employers' Liability Compulsory Insurance. [130824]

Nigel Griffiths: I have had four meetings with colleagues on the review of Employers' Liability Insurance, and we will continue to meet to ensure good progress on the second stage report.

A statement was made to the House before Recess, on 22 May 2003, and a first stage report published on 3 June 2003, which is in the Library of the House. The second stage report will be published in the autumn.

Employment Regulations

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when she will lay before Parliament the final draft Conduct of Employment Agencies and Employment Business Regulations; and if she will make a statement. [137778]

Mr. Sutcliffe: I hope to make an announcement on this matter in the near future.

The new Regulations will take account of the needs of the private recruitment industry and the interests of those using the services provided.

Exports to Morocco

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry for what reason strategic exports of (a) toxic chemical precursors and (b) technology for the production of toxins have been licensed for sale to Morocco. [136727]

Mr. Timms: Following careful consideration against the consolidated EU and national arms export licensing criteria, these exports have been licensed for sale to Morocco as they are for the production of pharmaceuticals and toothpaste and will not be used for any strategic purposes.

Fireworks

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what methods the Government use to monitor the distribution, from ports of entry, of imported fireworks. [138003]

Mr. Browne: I have been asked to reply.

There is no routine monitoring of the distribution of fireworks from the port of entry.

The storage of fireworks is regulated by HSE in partnership with local authorities under the Explosives Act 1875. Anyone storing fireworks illegally will be liable to prosecution.

HSE works with local authorities and Customs and Excise to verify whether firework importers have licensed storage facilities in Great Britain. The evidence from these checks is that the overwhelming majority of fireworks imports declared to Customs and Excise are being imported by firms with licensed storage available to them.

Industrial Development Act

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) how many jobs her Department forecast would be created under each scheme in each of the past six years under (a) section 7 and (b) section 8 of the Industrial Development Act 1982, and at what cost per job; how many people are still employed as a direct result of financial assistance in each scheme; and if she will make a statement on her Department's (i) financing and (ii) monitoring of jobs created under the Act; [138775]

(2) what the value was of (a) applications received and (b) offers accepted for financial assistance in each year since 1997 under (i) section 7 and (ii) section 8 of the Industrial Development Act 1982. [138776]

Jacqui Smith: The forecast of jobs expected to be created and safeguarded in England as a result of offers accepted under Section 7 (Regional Selective Assistance) and the average cost per job were:

	Jobs	Average cost per job (£)
1997–98	39,167	4,287
1998–99	27,838	4,606
1999–2000	35,270	3,152
2000–01	32,184	6,378
2001–02[1]	16,714	4,723
2002–03	19,856	5,426
Total	171,029	4,673

[1] The reduction in jobs is the result of a transfer of smaller RSA cases (capital investment less than £500,000) to a separate Enterprise Grant scheme under Section 8, w.e.f. 1 January 2000).

To date, 117,256 of these jobs have been achieved with approximately 65 per cent. of projects completed. The jobs achieved will increase as further projects are completed.

It is not policy to continue monitoring firms once the conditions of an offer of grant have been met.

Schemes under Section 8 are not primarily targeted on job creation and no forecasts have been made.

Further details on the schemes operating under Sections 7 and 8 can be found in the Industrial Development Act Annual Report, published by The Stationery Office.

Internet Banking

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what work her Department is doing with banks to improve the security of internet banking. [136170]

Mr. Timms: Security of Internet Banking services is a matter for the individual banks concerned and falls within the overall regime for the conduct of banking operations which is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer. The Department promotes the security of business processes and transactions generally and is thus in regular contact with individual banks and the Association for Payment and Clearing Services (APACS). The banking sector has been an important contributor to the development of tScheme which is committed to improving trust in electronic commerce. TScheme was created in response to the Electronic Communications Act 2000.

The financial sector, including internet banking, is one of the business sectors targeted as part of the UK's critical information infrastructure policy which is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary. I understand that there are regular contacts between the banking sector and the National Infrastructure Security Co-ordination Centre to develop and implement policy in this area.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will list the visits made by Ministers in her Department in each of the last five years, broken down by constituency. [136918]

Ms Hewitt: These details are not held centrally and to provide the information would be only at disproportionate cost in terms of financial and physical resource.

Policyholders Protection Act 1975

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on reform of the Policyholders Protection Act 1975 resulting from the case of Aitken v. Financial Services Compensation Scheme Ltd., 30 May, SL7 OH Court of Session. [136826]

Ruth Kelly: I have been asked to reply.

The courts have upheld the Financial Services Compensation Scheme decision in the case of Aitkin v. Financial Services Compensation Scheme. The Government see no reason to depart from our current policy as a result of the ruling.

Post Office

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will list the Post Office network income from clients for each year since 1997, broken down by main source. [138773]

Mr. Timms: The information requested is an operational matter for the Post Office. I have therefore asked the Chief Executive to reply direct to the hon. Member.

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which (a) local authorities and (b) housing associations used the Post Office for the payment of (i) rent and (ii) insurance premiums for home contents policies in each year since 1997. [137704]

Mr. Timms: We do not collect the information requested, which is an operational matter for the Post Office, and I have therefore asked the Chief Executive to reply direct to the hon. Member.

Post Office Card Account

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which company operates the systems for the Post Office Card Account; and what safeguards have been put in place to ensure the adequate data protection of personal data of account holders where those data are transmitted outside the UK. [138796]

Mr. Timms: These are matters that fall within the day-to-day responsibility of Post Office Ltd. and I have therefore asked the Chief Executive to reply direct to the hon. Member.

Post Office Subsidy Scheme

John Thurso: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much of the Sub-Post Office Start-Up Capital Subsidy scheme has been spent to date, broken down by region. [138897]

Mr. Timms: I understand from Post Office Ltd, who administer the Scheme on my Department's behalf, that payments totalling £1,238,722.18 had been made to the end of September 2003, the latest date to which data is available. As at the same date, the total value of grants approved was £1,712,811.62. I also understand that details of grants approved and paid are not recorded by region but are available on a country basis and that payments totalling £151,401.98 had been made to sub post offices in Scotland as at the end of September 2003.

Post Offices (Closure)

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many urban post offices have been (a) proposed and (b) approved for closure since the inception of the network reinvention scheme in (i) West Chelmsford parliamentary constituency and (ii) mid-Essex. [137154]

Mr. Timms [holding answer 12 November 2003]: Proposals for post office closures and final decisions on them, following public consultation under the Code of Practice, are operational matters for Post Office Ltd. I am advised by Post Office Ltd that data on urban reinvention proposals and closures is not available in the form requested as the company does not require this data for operational reasons. However, I understand that since March 2000 the company has recorded details of post office closures, including those under the urban reinvention programme, which commenced in late 2002, on the basis of Government Region. In the East of England Region as a whole, there have been 43 closures under the urban reinvention programme to the end of September 2003, the latest quarter for which figures are currently available.

Working Time Directive

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry pursuant to her oral answer of 6 November, if she will negotiate the maintenance of the UK opt-out of the 48 hour limit under Article 18 of the Working Time Directive before 23 November. [137819]

Ms Hewitt: The European Commission intends to issue an initial Communication on the Working Time opt-out, the definition of Working Time with regard to on-call time and the Working Time reference period, around the end of November. We are not expecting the Communication to contain any firm proposals. There will then follow a consultation period before the Commission produce formal proposals. The Government will fully engage in this process, and will seek to ensure that the outcome safeguards choice for individuals over the hours they work, whilst ensuring their employment rights are protected.

Mr. Alexander: My ministerial responsibilities are set out in the List of Ministerial Responsibilities (LMR), copies of which are available in the Libraries of the House. LMR is also available in electronic form and can be accessed at www.knowledgenetwork.gov.uk/elmr/minister.nsf.

Knowledge Network Project

Dr. Cable: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office (1) if he will list, by subject, the statistics that have been collected for the first time at constituency level under the Knowledge Network project, stating in each case the date on which the first in the series was completed; if he will place a copy of the most recent of each set of statistics listed in the Library; and if he will make a statement; [135301]

(3) what the cost has been to date of the new Knowledge Network system; and if he will make a statement. [135306]

Mr. Alexander: The Knowledge Network is a government-wide electronic communications tool promoting collaborative working both within and between departments as part of the modernisation and e-government initiatives. The Network does not collect statistics by subject at constituency level.

Access to the Knowledge Network is restricted to Ministers and civil servants via the Government Secure Intranet. There is currently no access to the Knowledge Network other than for these groups. The UKonline website provides a range of government services and information to the public and is an easy entry point for people who want to search government information and find out about local services.

Since its inception in 1999, the Knowledge Network project has cost £13.7 million to develop and manage. £10 million of this was from the Capital Modernisation Fund to improve information sharing across Government.

Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act

Brian White: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what statutory investigatory powers the Department has; which ones will be superseded by use of the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act 2000; and what plans he has for removing these legacy powers. [136127]

Mr. Alexander: My Department has no investigatory powers.

TREASURY

Business Costs

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the cost to business of the statistical inquiries of businesses carried out by the Office for National Statistics in 2002; and if he will make a statement. [136798]

Ruth Kelly [holding answer 6 November 2003]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Colin Mowl to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 17 November 2003:

The National Statistician has been asked to reply to your recent question concerning the cost to business of the statistical inquiries of businesses carried out by the Office for National Statistics in 2002. I am replying in his absence. (136798)

The overall compliance costs to business are controlled within limits agreed by Treasury Ministers and the Office for National Statistics (ONS). Each year ONS produces a Compliance Plan to help monitor and control the load on businesses of its statistical surveys. It also includes information on initiatives to minimise the form-filling load, such as the use of efficient and fair sampling procedures.

Between 1994 and 1997 compliance costs showed a progressive decrease. However from 1998 onwards compliance costs have risen steadily, as a result of the need for high quality statistics to capture changes in the economy, such as the development of E-commerce and the increasingly important service sector.

The latest compliance plan has calculated the compliance cost to business of ONS surveys in 2002 at £28.9 million at 2002 prices, which was within the agreed limit. The figure is the same as 1995 in real terms.

Heroin

Mr. Hepburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much heroin, and of what value, has been seized in (a) Tyne and Wear, (b) the North East and (c) the UK in each year since 1997. [138432]

John Healey: The Home Office has published data on controlled drugs seized in the UK by Customs and other law enforcement agencies in the annual Home Office Statistical Bulletin on Drugs Seizure and Offender Statistics 2000 and Home Office Findings 2002 (Seizures of drugs in the UK 2001). Figures for seizures in 2002, for the value of drugs seized in 2001, and for seizures in Tyne and Wear are not available. Copies are available in the Library of the House and on the Home Office Research, Development and Statistics Directorate's website at http://www.homeoffice.gov.uk/rds/pdfs2/hosb402.pdf.

Business Taxation

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what assessment he has made of the rate of change in the burden of business taxation in (a) the UK, (b) Japan, (c) the USA and (d) EU member states; [137604]

(2) what assessment he has made of the burden of business taxation in (a) the UK and (b) the USA. [137605]

Dawn Primarolo: The OECD publishes figures on "taxes on corporate income" and "employers' social security contributions" in its annual Revenue Statistics publication, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

The Government are fully committed to a fair and modern UK tax system that recognises the realities of modern business. Since 1997, the Government have introduced a wide-ranging package of tax measures to make the UK an attractive place for business to locate, boost productivity and help small businesses.

Cancer Survival Rates

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what research he has commissioned on cancer survival rates in the United Kingdom compared with other EU countries. [133894]

Ruth Kelly [holding answer 27 October 2003]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Colin Mowl to Mr. Jim Cunningham, dated 17 November 2003:

The National Statistician has been asked to reply to your recent question concerning what research the Chancellor of the Exchequer has commissioned on cancer survival rates in the United Kingdom compared with other EU countries. I am replying in his absence. (133894)

Comparable statistics on cancer survival in the UK and most other EU countries have been produced in three studies funded by the European Commission (the EUROCARE studies). Cancer registries in the UK, including staff from the National Registry at ONS, have been involved in these studies since they began in 1989.

The results indicated that survival was generally highest in Sweden, the Netherlands, France and Switzerland, and lowest in Estonia, Poland, Slovakia and Slovenia. Survival in the UK and Denmark was lower than in other western European countries for common tumours such as those of lung, breast, stomach, large bowel, prostate and kidney. However, international differences in survival were not large for tumours amenable to cytotoxic therapy, such as testicular cancer and Hodgkin's disease.

Government plans for funding cancer research were published in the NHS Cancer Plan in September 2000; copies of which are available in the Library. The Plan acknowledged that "survival rates for many of the major cancers lag behind the rest of Europe".

CAT Standard

Tim Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many CAT standard products have been (a) launched and (b) withdrawn in each year since the CAT mark was introduced. [138426]

Ruth Kelly: This data is not collected centrally.

Tim Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the CAT standard endorsed products, broken down by category of product. [138427]

Ruth Kelly: There are CAT standards for equity, insurance and cash ISA products and there is a CAT standard for fixed and variable rate mortgages.

Tim Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many credit card companies have (a) applied for and (b) been granted the CAT standard mark. [138428]

Ruth Kelly: The Government have not adopted a CAT standard for credit cards.

Consumer Debt

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent assessment he has made of the level of consumer debt; and what estimate he has made of the change in the number of companies offering (a) credit and (b) loans in the last three years. [138832]

Ruth Kelly: The Government's forthcoming pre-Budget report will include an assessment of developments in consumer debt. The Office of Fair Trading's Annual Report contains statistics on consumer credit licences granted and the Financial Services Authority's Annual Report contains statistics on lenders regulated by the FSA (available respectively at www.oft.gov.uk/News/Annual+report and www.fsa.gov.uk/pubs/annual).

Council Tax

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the average weekly amount of council tax, net of council tax benefit, paid by (a) all pensioner households and (b) pensioner households whose taxable income is below the income tax threshold. [137692]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Steve Webb, dated 17 November 2003:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your recent question asking for the average weekly amount of council tax and net council tax benefit paid by all pensioners, and pensioners whose taxable income is below the income tax threshold. (137692)

Estimates for council taxes are based on the analysis "The effects of taxes and benefits on household income 2001–02" produced by the ONS and published on the National Statistics website on October 21st 2003. The analysis can be obtained from the House of Commons Library or from the National Statistics website at http://www.statistics.gov.uk/taxesbenefits. It includes measures of income inequality for the United Kingdom as a whole based on data from the Expenditure and Food Survey. This is a sample survey covering about 7,500 households in the UK and sample sizes for pensioner households are only sufficient to give approximate estimates. The Family Resources Survey would have been an alternative source with a larger sample size, but the taxes and benefits analysis has been used for consistency with answers to other recent parliamentary questions.

Pensioner households have been defined as those where the Household Reference Person is retired or unoccupied and aged 65 or more and male, or 60 years of age or more and female, and economically inactive.

Detailed information on the definition of the Household Reference Person can be found in Appendix D of the document at the following address: http://www.statistics.gov.uk/downloads/theme_social/Family_Spending_2001-02_revised/Family_Spending_revised.pdf

Estimates for 2001–02 are shown in the following table for all pensioner households (single and couples) in Great Britain and for those who did not pay income tax (i.e. their reported income tax was zero). Council tax is not paid in Northern Ireland. The survey does not record the income tax threshold of household members so the absence of recorded income tax has been used as the relevant measure. Net council tax is defined as gross council tax less benefits and discounts, where a household reports taking up a council tax benefit entitlement.

Average weekly amount of Council Tax paid by (a) all single and couple pensioner households and (b) all single and couple pensioner households who did not report paying income tax[1] for 2001–02: Great Britain

£ per week

Single and couple pensioner households	Average net council tax	Average council tax benefit	Average gross council tax
All single and couple pensioner households	10.90	2.80	13.60
All single and couple pensioner households who did not report paying Income Tax	5.70	6.10	11.80

[1] Income Tax is net of tax relief at source on life assurance premiums

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much council tax was paid as a proportion of gross incomes for households in each income quintile group in each English region for the last year for which data are available. [138147]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Colin Mowl to Mr. Edward Davey, dated 17 November 2003:

The National Statistician has been asked to reply to your recent question asking how much council tax was paid as a proportion of gross incomes for households in each income quintile group in each English region for the latest year for which data is available. I am replying in his absence. (138147)

Estimates in the following table are produced from the Office for National Statistics' analysis "The effects of taxes and benefits on household income" produced by the ONS and published on the National Statistics website on October 21st 2003. The analysis can be obtained from the House of Commons Library or from the National Statistics website at http://www.statistics.gov.uk/taxesbenefits. It includes measures of income inequality for the United Kingdom as a whole based on data from the Expenditure and Food Survey. This is a sample survey covering about 7,500 households in the UK and sample sizes for each region are only sufficient to give approximate estimates. The Family Resources Survey would have been an alternative source with a larger sample size, but the taxes and benefits analysis has been used for consistency with answers to other recent parliamentary questions.

The table shows, for 2001–02, the average net council tax paid for all households in each Government Office Region and for each income quintile group within each region where households are ranked by equivalised disposable income. Equivalisation is a standard methodology that takes into account the size and composition of households and adjusts their incomes to recognise differing demands on resources. The net council tax figures are gross council tax less reported council tax benefits and discounts. The table also shows the boundaries between equivalised disposable income quintiles, which have been calculated separately for households in each Government Office Region. For example, the 1st quintile boundary is the income level below which one fifth of those households are estimated to lie. The results are subject to a high degree of uncertainty due to increased sampling variability arising from small sample sizes, particularly for some regions.

Families (Taxation)

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the treatment for the purposes of (a) taxation and (b) tax credits of (i) families with two children of different ages and (ii) families with twins. [137461]

Dawn Primarolo: In any single tax year there are currently no differences in the treatment of families with two children of different ages and of families with twins for the purposes of taxation or tax credits.

Financial Literacy

Mr. Drew: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish the Treasury's strategy for improving the level of financial literacy. [136757]

Ruth Kelly: Raising standards of financial literacy is an important part of the Government's wider strategy to reduce social and financial exclusion, and promote appropriate participation in the financial services industry, while tackling overindebtedness, and promote saving. Financially literate, confident, and independent consumers also spur firms to offer high quality, value for money products and services, and promotes effective competition.

A number of departments and agencies are active in achieving our ambitions. For example, we are the first Government to introduce a framework for Personal, Social and Health Education (PSHE) that provides for personal finance education to be taught throughout Key Stages 1 to 4 of the school curriculum.

We also work closely with the Financial Services Authority.

In his 2002 Review of Medium and Long Term Saving Ron Sandler suggested that the FSA should lead and coordinate further work in this area. Partly in response to those proposals, the FSA announced on 20 October 2003 the membership of their Financial Capability Steering Group. This group will bring together government, consumer representatives, the industry, the media, and the regulator to develop and implement a national strategy for financial capability.

The FSA has already delivered a great deal to help consumers and has fostered initiatives on financial literacy, working closely, for example, with the Personal Finance Education Group, which has undertaken valuable work on good practice I delivering personal finance teaching in schools. But the steering group announcement recognised that more needs to be done, to engage with and learn from the widest range of organisation.

Financial Services Authority

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to make the equity release market subject to Financial Services Authority regulation. [138959]

Ruth Kelly: Mortgage based equity release schemes will be regulated by the Financial Services Authority (FSA) with effect from 31 October 2004. On 11 November 2003, I published a consultation document seeking views on whether home reversion plans should come within the scope of FSA regulation. Copies of this consultation document are available in the Library.

Flooding

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the scope for the application of economic instruments in promoting the development of flood defences. [138933]

Ruth Kelly: The 2001 Flood and Coastal Defence Funding Review recommended that the Government should consider the application of economic instruments as part of alternative funding streams for flood defence. We agree with the review's analysis and have therefore asked Defra to work up proposals as part of their Spending Review 2002 commitments. They have since consulted on a range of options, including a Floodplain Development Connection Charge to be levied on new developments in the floodplain. The work on this is still at a very early stage, and will be taken forward as part of Defra's new flood management strategy.

Graduate Income

Mr. Hepburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the average wage for a new graduate was in each year since 1997 in (a) the North East and (b) the UK. [137458]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Colin Mowl to Mr. Stephen Hepburn, dated 17 November 2003:

The National Statistician has been asked to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the average wage for new graduates in the North East and the UK. I am replying in his absence. (137458)

Table 1 overleaf gives estimates of the average gross weekly earnings of all working age graduates resident in the UK and the North East region who are full-time employees.

Table 2 gives estimates of the average gross weekly earnings of graduates aged 25 and under resident in the UK who are full-time employees. Similar estimates for graduates aged 25 and under resident in the North East region are not reliable because the survey sample sizes available are too small.

These estimates are from the Labour Force Survey (LFS) for the twelve month period ending August of each year from 1998 to 2003. Estimates for all new graduates, irrespective of age, cannot be produced as the LFS does not include a question about how long ago respondents graduated.

International Monetary Fund

John Barrett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he is taking to reform the workings of the International Monetary Fund in favour of lower income countries. [138389]

John Healey: The UK Government believe that International Monetary Fund (IMF) support to low-income countries should work within its areas of competence to help these countries achieve the macroeconomic stability and supporting policy measures crucial to poverty reduction and delivery of the Millennium Development Goals. The IMF's chief form of support to low-income countries is through the Poverty Reduction and Growth Facility, which was created in 1999. This facility is designed to support country-led poverty reduction strategies, and the UK has been at the forefront of efforts to ensure that the IMF's work is based on these strategies.

Discussions were held at the annual meetings of the IMF and World Bank in Dubai in September where my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer chaired the International Monetary and Finance Committee meetings. The Committee noted that faster growth will be needed in low-income countries in order to reduce poverty, and that this would require stronger policies and institutions, better governance and increased and more effective aid.

The Committee observed that the IMF should remain engaged with these countries in the long-term, encouraging it to undertake further initiatives to support higher sustained growth and poverty reduction, improved governance, and reduced vulnerability to shocks. The IMF will prepare a number of Board papers on these issues, and the Committee looks forward to a review of progress at its next meeting.

The Committee also noted the need for increased and more effective aid, and for enhanced market access. The Committee urged the IMF to work with the World Bank on aid effectiveness, aid absorption, results-based measurement systems and financing mechanisms, including the International Finance Facility. Developing and emerging market countries are being consulted on this, and France will host an international conference in spring next year.

In respect of representation of developing countries on the Boards of the IMF and World Bank, the Development Committee, meeting in Dubai, agreed to continue efforts to build the necessary political consensus on this issue, with a roadmap to be produced for the spring meetings. The International Monetary and Financial Committee welcomed measures under way and asked the IMF to examine these issues further.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Treasury's policy regarding the content and extent of answers to written parliamentary questions, with particular reference to the Treasury's policy on the provision of lists, where lists are requested by a written parliamentary question; [137644]

(2) pursuant to the Financial Secretary to the Treasury's Answer of 30 October 2003, Official Report, column 310W, on the euro, if he will list (a) the meetings attended by ministers to campaign for a pro-European consensus, the ministers at these meetings and the dates of these events and (b) the events planned at which ministers will campaign for a pro-European consensus, the ministers who will attend these events, and the dates of these events. [137694]

Ruth Kelly: I refer the hon. Gentlemen to the answer I gave him on 30 October.

Treasury Ministers seek to give accurate information to Parliament in reply to written questions, taking account of such factors as the level of detail sought by questioners and the availability of information.

Pension Incomes

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the impact of an increase in the use of property to generate pension incomes on (a) the British economy, (b) Government expenditure and (c) the housing market. [138616]

Ruth Kelly: Box A3 in Annex A of PBR 2002 discusses the impact on the housing market and the wider economy of diversification out of equities into property.

Pensions and Financial Ombudsmen

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many (a) Pensions Ombudsman and (b) Financial Ombudsman cases were considered in the last year for which figures are available; how many cases were (i) upheld and (ii) rejected; what the average time taken to consider a case was; and what the average cost per case was. [137333]

Ruth Kelly: The Pensions Ombudsman operates a two stage process. Stage 1 involves identifying which applications are to be accepted for investigation and redirecting those where the decision is not to investigate. Stage 2 involves an in-depth investigation.

The Pensions Ombudsman's Office tell me that for the year ended 31 March 2003, they dealt with a total of 4363 cases. The table below shows a breakdown of all cases resolved during the period:

Outcome of cases	Year ended 31 March 2003
Stage 1	3,684 of which 98 per cent. of decisions were taken within four weeks.
Stage 2	679 decisions made in the course of the year.

So far as the Pensions Ombudsman's formal determinations are concerned 23 per cent. resulted in a finding of the complaint being upheld; 34 per cent. of the complaint being not upheld and 43 per cent. of the investigations which were closed.

The unit cost per case is divided by the expenditure of the office by the 679 Stage 2 completed investigations, the average cost per case is £2,160; and for Stage 1 completion the cost is £336. There is however an element of double counting involved in the last calculation: a case which went through Stage 1 at the beginning of the year and where the Stage 2 completion was before the end of the year will be counted as two cases in the calculation which produces the 336 figure.

It is not possible to answer the query about average time taken to consider a case without incurring additional costs. However, the times taken to complete Stage 2 cases were:

Cases taking in excess of 12 months 240 (35 per cent.)

Cases taking between 6 and 12 months 255 (38 per cent.)

Cases taking less than 6 months 184(27 per cent.)

The Financial Ombudsman Service tell me that for the financial year ending 31 March 2003, the Financial Ombudsman Service received a total of 62,170 cases.

The following table shows a breakdown of the outcome of all cases resolved during the period.

Outcome of cases

Year ended 31 March 2003	Percentage
Resolved by mediation or conciliation	40
Resolved after investigation by an adjudicator	49
of which:
13 mixed outcome (partial win/lose for both sides)
18 in favour of the consumer
69 in favour of the firm
Resolved by final decision of an ombudsman	11
of which:
15 mixed outcome (partial win/lose for both sides)
35 in favour of the consumer
50 in favour of the firm

The average time taken to resolve cases in the year ending 31 March 2003 was 135.8 days.

The unit cost per case (calculated by dividing the total expenditure—less financing costs—by the number of cases closed) for the year ending 31 March 2003 was £518.

Quarterly Financial Reporting

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has had with representatives of (a) the European Union, (b) the Institute of Chartered Accountants and (c) business concerning the European Union's proposals for quarterly financial reporting; and if he will make a statement. [137608]

Ruth Kelly: Officials from HM Treasury, together with colleagues from the FSA and the UK Permanent Representation to the European Union, have been involved in intensive discussions on the Transparency Directive with representatives from the European Institutions. Efforts have focused on achieving agreement on a final text that balances the objective of increasing market transparency with the need to reduce the burden and costs for businesses, in particular concerning the European Commission's proposal to introduce quarterly reporting for companies with shares on regulated EU markets.

Officials have also been consulting on this Directive with businesses and their representatives and advisers since November 2002. These consultations have included regular roundtable meetings, which give participants an opportunity to make their concerns known, to get feedback on the process in Brussels, and to quiz officials involved in the process. Officials have also been holding smaller meetings with business representatives, including the Institute of Chartered Accountants, to provide an additional forum for consultation.

Tax and Benefit Reforms

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer pursuant to his answer of 10 July 2003, Official Report, column 928W, if he will provide a breakdown of the impact of his tax and benefit reforms on households with annual income of (a) £30,000, (b) £50,000, (c) £75,000 and (d) over £75,000. [127058]

Dawn Primarolo: The following table shows the average change in net household incomes as a result of all personal tax and benefit measures introduced since 1997, for households with annual gross incomes in the ranges specified in the question.

Household gross income	Average change 2003–04 compared to 1997–98 (£)
Up to £30,000	1,100
Up to £50,000	950
Up to £75,000	875
All households	775

Tax Credits

John Barrett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer pursuant to his answer of 6 November 2003, Official Report, column 804W, on tax credits, (1) when he expects the Family Resources Survey 2003–04 will be available; and if he will place take-up estimates of (i) child tax credit and (ii) working tax credit, broken down by (A) parliamentary constituency and (B) local authority area, in the Library when the survey is available; [138393]

(2) whether it is possible to make estimates of take-up of (a) child tax credit and (b) working tax credit by (i) parliamentary constituency and (ii) local authority area using 2002–03 figures. [138394]

Dawn Primarolo: In line with previous years, the Family Resources Survey (FRS) for 2003–04 is expected to be available by late 2004. The FRS sample size is not sufficient to allow the estimation of take-up rates for either child tax credit or working tax credit at the level of parliamentary constituency or local authority area.

Official estimates of take-up of income related benefits or tax credits require data which identifies individuals who are entitled to the particular credit or benefit but who are observed as not taking up that entitlement. Such data for the child tax credit or the working tax credit will not be available from sources for 2002–03 as the tax credits were not introduced until April 2003.

Taxes (London)

Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent estimate he has made of taxes paid by (a) people and (b) organisations in London; and if he will make a statement. [135161]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Simon Hughes, dated 17 November 2003:

As National Statistician I have been asked to reply to your recent question on taxes paid by people and organisations in London. (135161)

The table below shows estimates of taxes on income, taxes on products, taxes on production and other taxes paid by individuals and businesses in London and in the UK in 1998. The London figures were produced by ONS for the estimation of sub-national government accounts on an experimental basis and were published in a news release on 31 October 2002. They were produced as part of a pilot study funded by the European Commission and there are no current plans to update this analysis. Separate information on taxes paid by individuals and businesses is not available.

Value Added Tax

Mrs. Brooke: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has had with the European Commission on a new reduced rate category of VAT for protective and safety equipment; and what the outcome was. [138774]

John Healey: The Directive covering reduced rates of VAT is currently under discussion by European Ministers, following a proposal from the Commission earlier this year. This proposal challenges a number of the UK's zero rates including those for children's clothing and several reliefs targeted at charities and disabled people. We have made clear in the negotiations that we will not agree to the removal of any of our zero or reduced rate VAT derogations.

The Commission's approach to this review has significantly narrowed the scope to consider the introduction of new reduced rates. However, as well as defending our zero rates, the Government continue to press for our long standing commitments for reduced rates for repairs to listed places of worship and the purchase of energy-saving materials for do-it-yourself installation, and also for energy-efficient products.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Bechtel

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will list the contracts for consultancy and other work carried out by Bechtel in each year since 1997 by his Department's predecessors in areas relating to regional government, stating in each case (a) the nature of the work, (b) the value of the contract and (c) the duration of the contract; and if he will make a statement. [137736]

Yvette Cooper: There have been no contracts awarded to Bechtel since 1997 by the predecessor Departments of the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister.

Billboards

Mr. Drew: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the regulations that apply to the display of billboards (a) in the open countryside and (b) on telegraph poles on public or private land without planning permission. [138682]

Keith Hill: The display of outdoor advertisements including billboards in the open countryside and on telegraph poles on public and private land is controlled by the Town and Country Planning (Control of Advertisements) Regulations 1992. The express consent of the local planning authority is required before these advertisements may be lawfully displayed. The local planning authority must consider amenity and public safety issues. The consent of the owner of the land is also required. Local planning authorities have enforcement powers under sections 224 and 225 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1990 which they may use to remove, or require the removal of, advertisements displayed in contravention of the Regulations.

Business Planning Zones

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what guidance he offers to local authorities on the establishment of (a) business planning zones and (b) business improvement districts, with particular reference to (i) Sunderland and (ii) Redcar and Cleveland. [139425]

Mr. Raynsford: The information is as follows:

Business Planning Zones

Guidance for local planning authorities will be published for public consultation next year. Broad policy will be set out in draft PPS4: Planning for Economic Development, and more detailed guidance on how local planning authorities should establish such zones will be produced in due course.

Business Improvement Districts

Draft guidance on Business Improvement Districts is available on the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister's website (www.odpm.gov.uk) Consultation on this guidance has recently completed and the final version will be published when the regulations relating to BIDs legislation are laid before the House in spring 2004.

The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister is not aware of any specific issues in Sunderland or Redcar and Cleveland which would require more specific guidance on Business Planning Zones or Business Improvement Districts.

Cash Incentive Scheme Grants

Ms Oona King: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many Cash Incentive Scheme grants were made by each local authority in London in 2002–03; and what the total value of these grants was for each local authority. [139271]

Mr. Raynsford: The number of Cash Incentive Scheme grants made by those London borough's running schemes in 2002–03 and the total value of grants made are shown in the table.

Mr. Raynsford: Tabled are the figures for Government grants paid to the London Borough of Havering in each financial year from 1996–97. Figures are not available for calendar years.

Credit Unions

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what role credit unions play in alleviating poverty in communities; and what role they (a) have and (b) will have in the future as part of New Deal for Communities. [136289]

Yvette Cooper: Credit unions have an important role to play in tackling financial exclusion. By bridging the gap between mainstream financial services and those of limited means, credit unions make a real difference to the individuals and communities they serve.

New Deal for Communities (NDC) Partnerships have a broad remit to tackle issues of crime, worklessness, education, health and housing in the physical environment in some of our most deprived neighbourhoods. A number of NDC Partnerships have already done work to develop credit unions or are covered by credit unions that already exist in their area—such as East Manchester NDC and Knowsley NDC—and Partnerships will continue to do this in future where it is relevant to the needs of the neighbourhood. For example, in the Brent area there are currently on-going discussions between Camden Credit Union and South Kilburn NDC on the subject of Camden Credit Union extending their common bond to the NDC area.

Disabled Facilities Grant

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what the average time has been between applying for a disabled facilities grant and (a) assessment of needs, (b) provision of finance and (c) the completion of buildings work, broken down by each local authority. [138162]

Keith Hill: Local authorities are required by statute to respond to a completed application for disabled facilities grant within six months. The Government do not collect information on the average waiting times for these grants.

The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister, jointly with the Department of Health, has issued draft guidance to local authorities setting out best practice in delivering a first class housing adaptations service for disabled people. This includes target times for the complete delivery process including needs assessment, processing of the application and the completion of building works. These target times will depend on the complexity of, and priority attached to, individual cases but the guidance suggests that the maximum target time for the entire process should in any event be no more than 260 working days and only 80 working days in high priority cases. We are currently considering responses to this consultation and hope to issue final guidance to local housing and social service authorities early next year.

Elected Regional Assemblies

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what assessment he has made of whether the proposed referendums on elected regional assemblies give people living in the regions affected an opportunity for their regions to have similar powers to those of (a) the Scottish Parliament and (b) the Welsh Assembly. [139126]

Mr. Raynsford: Elected assemblies will be given powers over key regional issues, such as jobs, planning, housing, transport, culture and economic development. The Regional Governance White Paper, "Your Region, Your Choice: Revitalising the English Regions", sets out the Government's proposals and takes into account the functions that are best dealt with at a national, regional or local level. As the proposals relate to the English regions, the powers of the Greater London Authority are also a relevant consideration.

There are no plans to revisit the package as a matter of course, but there may be changes in the way some central Government functions are delivered. In developing policies, the Government will consider the opportunities offered by the creation of elected assemblies. For example, the Fire White Paper, "Our Fire and Rescue Service", announced that regional fire and rescue authorities will be established in those regions that choose to have elected assemblies.

Expenses and Allowances

Mr. Flook: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the advice given by the inland revenue on tax and national insurance issues in the guidance to local councils on the expenses and allowances payable to mayors and district councils. [138830]

Mr. Raynsford: Guidance relating to local authority members' allowances was issued to all local authorities in July 2003. This contains guidance on the tax and national insurance treatment of expenses and allowances for all members of local authorities, including mayors.

Graffiti

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the extent of the problem of graffiti; and how much he estimates was (a) lost by businesses through dealing with the problem of graffiti and (b) spent by local authorities in dealing with graffiti in 2002–03. [138286]

Yvette Cooper: Local authorities budgeted to spend £456 million on street cleaning and litter in 2002–03. The detailed information requested is not held centrally, and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

The Local Environmental Quality Survey for England, prepared by Environmental Campaigns (ENCAMS) on behalf of the Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (Defra), indicates graffiti is not a major problem over the whole of the country, but those areas where it is a problem suffer particularly badly.

Homeless People

Mr. Hepburn: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what funding has been allocated to reduce the number of homeless people in the UK since 1997. [128713]

Yvette Cooper: A variety of investment streams contribute to tackling and resolving homelessness but these have wider housing and social objectives too, and it is not possible to identify specific homelessness elements within all of them.

In March 2002, the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister published "More than a Roof", a report into tackling homelessness, which identified the problems and the steps that were needed in order to tackle homelessness in England. The Homelessness Directorate was established in the previous Department for Transport, Local Government and the Regions (DTLR) in March 2002 and brought together the Rough Sleepers Unit, the Bed and Breakfast Unit and a new team to ensure effective implementation of new homelessness legislation and to assist local authorities (and voluntary agencies working with them) in the development of their strategies to tackle homelessness.

The Homelessness Directorate invested £114.5 million in 2002–03 and has a £260 million budget over 2003–04 to 2005–06.

Local authorities also receive funding for their homelessness responsibilities through the local government finance settlement. The funding is paid as general grant and it is for local authorities to decide on their spending priorities taking into account their statutory responsibilities and the wishes of their electorate.

Between 1997–98 and 2001–02, the following net current expenditure on homelessness incurred within the General Fund Revenue Account:

	£ million
1997–98	123
1998–99	150
1999–2000	171
2000–01	203
2001–02	186

Much of this expenditure is on the provision of temporary accommodation for homeless households for which authorities claim housing benefit subsidy In relation to general capital investment for housing, the total budget for housing capital investment in 1997–98 was £1.7 billion and £4.3 billion for 2003–04. These budgets provide new affordable housing and improvements to existing housing, both of which can help to prevent and resolve homelessness.

Future funding will complement increases in investment in affordable housing and the funding available from 1 April 2003 for services to help homeless people under the Supporting People programme. Provision for support relating to homelessness within the Supporting People budget totalled over £353 million this year—a fifth of the £1.8 billion grant for the 2003–04 programme. This expenditure would have previously come from a variety of programmes including housing benefit and Supported Housing Management Grant, but was not identified separately for homeless client groups within these programmes.

Housing

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will amend total cost indicators in the grant system for housing associations so that it is more profitable for them to build homes with three and four bedrooms. [138589]

Keith Hill: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given on 6 November 2003, Official Report, column 796W. The Housing Corporation's Total Cost Indictor (TCI) framework is designed to be cost neutral across all types of homes irrespective of size.

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what assessment his Department has made of how to increase the construction by housing associations of (a) two, (b) three and (c) four bedroom homes in an economically viable way while meeting his Department's targets to increase the density of new housing developments. [138590]

Keith Hill: The Housing Corporation has recently announced its bidding round for social housing grant for 2004–05 and 2005–06. It has identified a number of ways of achieving better value for money through, for example, partnering arrangements. The detailed programme will reflect priorities identified in Regional Housing Strategies and the funding recommendations made by Regional Housing Boards. Bids from registered social landlords should reflect the local needs that they are aiming to meet.

The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister believes that it is possible to achieve net development densities of up to 50 dwellings per hectare with a mix of different types and sizes of housing. Registered social landlords are already providing homes at an average of about 48 dwellings per hectare.

Housing Stock

Mr. Byers: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what action he proposes to take to ensure that regional government offices monitor the activities of local authorities to ensure that they comply with the requirements laid down by the Government in relation to the disposal of council housing stock. [138893]

Keith Hill: The Government Office for the Regions already work with all local authorities on housing matters, including where the authority is considering a housing transfer. In addition the Office's Community Housing Task Force work with authorities to help them deliver housing transfers within the framework set out by Government.

The Government Offices will continue to work with an authority post transfer on its strategic and statutory housing roles.

London Boroughs (Council Tax)

Simon Hughes: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister pursuant to his answer of 29 October 2003, Official Report, columns 302–04W, on London boroughs (council tax), how much and what proportion of council tax was collected in the London boroughs in each year from April 1993 to April 1996. [139216]

Mr. Raynsford: The following table shows the amount of council tax collected in each London borough and the City of London, irrespective of the financial year to which they relate, in each year from 1993–94 to 1996–97.

financial year to which it relates. This means that the percentage of council tax ultimately collected for any financial year is greater than that shown in the table.

Regional Assemblies

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will include with the postal ballot for the proposed English regional assemblies explanatory memoranda setting out the expected costs and savings of the new structure. [137559]

Mr. Raynsford: The Political Parties, Elections and Referendums Act 2000 prohibits publication of any material relating to a referendum during the 28 days prior to the poll by any Minister of the Crown, Government Department or local authority. Therefore, the postal ballot for the proposed English regional assemblies will not include any such material. However, the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has launched an information campaign to ensure that relevant information about the role and composition of Elected Regional Assemblies is made easily available in each of the three northern regions where referendums may be held. This includes an estimate of the costs of running elected assemblies and the savings to other public bodies whose staff transfer to the assembly.

Regional Co-ordination Unit

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister when the Regional Co-ordination Unit was established. [138131]

Yvette Cooper: The Regional Co-ordination Unit was set up in the summer of 2000 following the publication of the Performance and Innovation Unit Report, "Reaching Out—The Role Of Central Government At Regional And Local Level".

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many research projects the Regional Co-ordination Unit (a) plans to commission in 2003–04 and (b) commissioned in 2002–03; and what the rationale for each project was. [138134]

Yvette Cooper: The Regional Co-ordination Unit (RCU) currently has no plans to commission any research in 2003–04.

In 2002–03, the following research was commissioned:

a study of staff appraisal to see if there are any subjective differences in the way appraisals are carried out on staff of different gender, ethnicity or disability; and a report into "Incorporating Regional Perspectives into Policy Making". This was commissioned jointly by the RCU and the Cabinet Office Strategy Unit to investigate ways in which central Departments and the Government Offices could better work together to develop policy.

Ward Boundaries (Devon)

Nick Harvey: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister when he plans to introduce orders giving effect to the Boundary Committee's recommendations for Devon County Council's ward boundaries. [138903]

Mr. Raynsford: These are now matters for the independent Electoral Commission, to which the periodic electoral reviews functions of the former Local Government Commission for England and my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister were transferred by the Local Government Commission for England (Transfer of Functions) Order 2001 (S.I 2001/3962).

Wiltshire Fire Authority

Mr. Key: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will list the members of the Wiltshire Fire Authority indicating (a) by whom each was nominated, (b) by whom each was appointed and (c) the political affiliation of each member. [137455]

Mr. Raynsford: This information is not held centrally.

Work-related Stress

Dr. Cable: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many cases of work-related stress have been reported in his Department in each of the last three years; how much compensation has been paid to employees; how many work days have been lost due to work-related stress, and at what cost; what procedures have been put in place to reduce work-related stress, and at what cost; and if he will make a statement. [136842]

Yvette Cooper: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister was established following machinery of government changes in May 2002.

For the period 2002–03, there have been eight cases of alleged work-related stress in the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister, amounting to 126 days absence. There have been no compensation claims for work-related stress.

The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has a Stress at Work policy in place, which is supported by practical guidance issued to staff on dealing with the issue. In addition, the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has access to a counselling and support facility. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister is committed to meeting the targets for reducing the number of days lost due to work-related injuries and ill health arising from the Government's Revitalising Health and Safety initiative. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has been in recent discussions with the Health and Safety Executive about the development of a new proactive stress prevention programme.

EDUCATION AND SKILLS

Paternal Contact

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what encouragement departments and agencies give to fathers in keeping in contact with their children after separation. [136442]

Margaret Hodge: The Government's approach to the issue of child contact is based on the principle in the Children Act 1989, that in all decisions and arrangements about child contact, the child's best interests must be paramount. Figures from recent studies and surveys indicate as follows:

60 per cent. of non-resident parents agreed contact with the resident parent.

77 per cent. of non-resident parents saw their children every day, or at least once a week, or at least once a month. (Office for National Statistics survey).

47 per cent. of all non-resident fathers were having at least weekly contact, 68 per cent. at least monthly contact and only 3 per cent. had no contact at all, with their children. (Bradshaw, Stimson, Skinner and Williams—"Absent Fathers?" 1999).

69 per cent. of formerly married parents reported on-going contact. Only 5 per cent. reported that there had never been any contact and 27 per cent. said contact had been interrupted or had ended. (McLean and Eekelaar—"The Parental Obligation: a study of parenthood across households" 1997).

The Government believe that children generally benefit from the continued involvement of both parents in their lives following divorce or separation, with the interests of the child always being paramount. I am currently considering our response to the Report of the Children Act Sub-committee of the Advisory Board on Family Law "Making Contact Work" to see what further practical steps we can take to facilitate and support contact between children and their parents.

Meanwhile, the Government have already taken the following initiatives:

have published the Parenting Plan, designed to help parents make practical arrangements for their children following divorce or separation, and age-related information leaflets for children concerned; are supporting a publicity campaign to emphasise the benefits of safe contact for children and to encourage parents to resolve disputes constructively; have made available public funding for family mediation for the resolution of disputes over children. 250 services now have contracts to provide family mediation and in 2001/02 are expanding the provision of child contact facilities.

Special Educational Needs and Disability Act

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what assessment he has made of (a) the effect of provisions of the Special Educational Needs and Disability Act 2001 and (b) progressing schools in fulfilling their duty to draw up accessibility plans. [137910]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Schools will be reporting on these matters during 2004.

Child Protection Database

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what representations he has received about the impact of data protection laws on his plans to introduce a database for child protection. [138422]

Margaret Hodge: My right hon. Friend has not received any direct representations about the impact of data protection laws on our plans to introduce a database for child protection.

The Green Paper "Every Child Matters" sets out our proposals to protect children at risk within a framework of universal services, including the collection and sharing of information on children. The consultation period ends on 1 December.

Education Act

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) with which schools and local authorities he has discussed proposals to take advantage of the flexibility provisions of the Education Act 2002; [137087]

(2) how many inquiries he has received about use of the flexibility provisions of the Education Act 2002. [137088]

Mr. Miliband [holding answer 10 November 2003]: I refer the hon. Member to the answers given to the hon. Member for Harrogate and Knaresborough (Mr. Willis) on 12 May 2003, Official Report, column 52W; the hon. Member for Ashford (Mr. Green) on 6 October 2003, Official Report, column 1131W; the hon. Member for Altrincham and Sale, West (Mr. Brady) on 27 October 2003, Official Report, column 72W and the noble Baroness Sharp of Guildford, Official Report, House of Lords, 6 October 2003, c. A-Levels

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what proportion of pupils from secondary school went on to take A-levels in (a) the North West region, (b) Merseyside, (c) St. Helens and (d) England in each year since 1997. [137997]

Mr. Miliband: The precise information requested is not available. As the National Pupil Database is developed further, this type of analysis will be possible. As a proxy, the following tables show (i) the number of 17-year-old students who took at least one A level in

(a) the North West region, (b) Merseyside, (c) St. Helens LEA and (d) England in schools and colleges for the years 1997–2003 and (ii) the number of 15-year-old pupils in secondary schools in (a) the North West region, (b) Merseyside, (c) St. Helens LEA and (d) England, two years before each of the years shown in (i).

(ii)

		1995	1996	1997	1998	1999	2000	2001
a	North West	78,452	80,647	79,799	79,339	80,875	80,350	83,894

d	England	578,197	594,035	586,766	575,210	580,972	580,393	603,318

Although the exact information required is not currently available, a rough approximation can be obtained by dividing the number of 17-year-old A level students by the number of 15-year-old pupils two years before. It should be noted however that this is not based on data which tracks the same pupils over time.

The following figures approximately show the percentage of 15-year-old pupils who went on to take A levels at 17 in the North West region and in England.

	1995	1996	1997	1998	1999	2000	2001
North West	28	29	29	29	30	34	33
England	33	33	34	34	35	38	38

Similar figures for the Merseyside area and St. Helen's LEA are less accurate due to where students choose to pursue their further education studies.

Advertising/Marketing

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how much money his Department spent on advertising and marketing in each month since 1997. [137571]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Information for expenditure per month for the period and areas specified could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Expenditure from the Department's central advertising and publicity budget is as follows:

	£000
1997–98	10,879
1998–99	13,426
1999–2000	9,902
2000–01	14,595
2001–02	11,688
2002–03	14,089
2003–04 (to date)	2,937

In addition to expenditure from this central budget, expenditure from budgets allocated to individual programmes will also include spend on publicity and marketing related activity. It is not possible, except at disproportionate cost, to separately identify all such expenditure. However, it is possible to identify separately expenditure on advertising, and this is as follows:

	£000
1997–98	9,992
1998–99	15,673
1999–2000	11,900

Domestic Violence

Ms Shipley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what plans he has to increase support for the non-abusive parent in cases of domestic violence where children are involved. [134909]

Margaret Hodge: The Government have proposed a number of measures which will improve the support and protection available to the children and non-abusive partner of a violent parent. These were set out in our consultation paper "Safety and Justice: The Government's Proposals on Domestic Violence" and include:

making sure that child contact arrangements in domestic violence cases guarantee the safety of all parties. We will be expanding the provision of supervised child contact centres and services. Where domestic violence (or other safety issues) features in contact cases it is vital that the families are referred to services that are able to meet their needs, especially on safety. Baroness Ashton of Upholland and I plan to announce successful applicants for funding from a joint Children's Fund/

Sure Start Investment Stream of £2.9 million for new supervised contact services. We expect new services to commence from the New Year; improving the support available to children and young people affected by domestic violence, both for the benefit of the children and young people themselves and to relieve pressures on their parents;

providing help for victims of domestic violence as early as possible, and making sure that the civil and criminal law offer the maximum protection to all victims, children and adults, to prevent the violence recurring; providing advice and information to victims on how to get access to support services and legal protection;

ensuring an effective police response when victims report domestic violence and ensuring that victims are not deterred by the way they will be treated at any stage of the judicial process;

improving the sharing of information so that child and adult victims are better protected and supported; increasing the full range of accommodation options, including supporting people to stay in their own home. Children can particularly suffer by moving away from their friends, school, pets and other familiar surroundings; helping victims who have ended or left a violent relationship to rebuild their lives; and raising awareness about domestic violence among the general public and key professionals;

The Government are currently considering the responses to these proposals.Our Green Paper Every Child Matters recognises that supporting parents and carers is a significant factor in our general strategy to improve children's lives. It sets out the Government's vision of better integrated services for all children that are focused around the needs of the child, to ensure no child falls through the net and all children get the support they need to fulfil their potential:

integrating services for children and families within Children's Trusts. This will particularly benefit the families in which children are affected by domestic violence as they may have a range of physical, emotional and psychological needs and may often be in temporary accommodation or moving around; providing access to specialist services. Being a victim of, or witnessing, domestic violence can have a long-term negative impact on children's behaviour, health and educational outcomes. The Green Paper sets out how the Government will seek to ensure specialist provision is available so that all children achieve and are in good physical and mental health; strengthening child protection arrangements. The Green Paper sets out proposals for changes to arrangements for safeguarding children, which we hope will lead to a better response to the needs of vulnerable children including those affected by domestic violence; improving information sharing will ensure that difficulties are picked up earlier and acted upon in a coherent way. We are consulting on the best way to use information about families and parents in such cases to build a complete picture of the risks to the child; improving both universal and targeted support for parents. Such support will be appropriate and non-stigmatising. It will help parents in supporting their children and the universal support in particular will be a gateway to more specialist services, for example, support for families affected by domestic violence; and improving maternity services. 30 per cent. of domestic violence cases start during pregnancy and existing violence often escalates during it. Through the National Service Framework for Children, Young People and Maternity Services the Government are piloting routine antenatal questioning for domestic violence by midwives.

Fair Trade (Universities)

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what action his Department has taken to promote fair trade accreditation at UK universities. [138388]

Alan Johnson: The Government are committed to encouraging responsible trade and encourages all organisations to consider whether their purchasing policies can be adjusted to benefit the poor in developing countries. Through the Department for International Development, the Government have provided £0.5million to support UK development awareness and education campaigns centred around Fairtrade over the past two years. Higher education institutions are however independent, autonomous bodies, entirely responsible for their own trading arrangements, and we cannot directly influence their trading choices.

Falling Rolls

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many (a) primary and (b) secondary schools in England have falling rolls; and if he will make a statement. [136792]

Mr. Miliband: In January 2003, out of a total of 17,861 maintained primary schools, there were 10,100 schools that showed a decrease in pupil numbers of at least one pupil compared to January 2002.

Also in January 2003, out of a total of 3,436 maintained secondary schools, there were 1,017 schools that showed a decrease in pupil numbers of at least one pupil compared to January 2002.

Funding

Matthew Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many bodies receive some or all their funding from his Department; what funding was received by each body in each year since 1997; and who the chief executive is of each body. [133677]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: The information on funding of executive non departmental public bodies is published annually in the Departmental Report. Information on the chief executives is contained in the individual annual reports issued by each of the executive non departmental public bodies. Information on other bodies is not available, except at disproportionate cost.

Gifted Pupils

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what differences there are in the amounts that rural and urban areas received for gifted pupils; and what the reasons are for the differences. [138385]

Mr. Miliband: The majority of dedicated funding for gifted and talented education is made available through Excellence in Cities, including Excellence Clusters and Aim Higher. These programmes are targeted at areas of greatest deprivation which are concentrated in urban areas although not exclusively so. Each area receives only a notional allocation for work on gifted and talented education. It is for the local partnership or cluster to decide how much to spend on this, relative to other dimensions of their programme.

Local education authorities and schools can also use funding from other sources for gifted and talented education, and choose whether or not to take up a range of national resources available to them. These decisions are influenced by a variety of local priorities and needs.

GNVQs

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills pursuant to his answer of 27 October 2003, Official Report, columns 73–6W, on GNVQs, what the total percentage was of pupils achieving 5 A*-C grades at GCSE/GNVQ level was in each year since 1996; and if he will make a statement. [136715]

Mr. Miliband: The percentage of pupils achieving 5 + A*-C grades at GCSE/GNVQ are as follows:

	Percentage
1995/96	44.5
1996/97	45.1
1997/98	46.3
1998/99	47.9
1999/2000	49.2
2000/01	50.0
2001/02	51.6
2002/03 (Provisional)	52.6

Graduate Tax

Paul Farrelly: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what discussions he had with colleagues from other departments on variants of a graduate tax as alternatives to fund higher education. [138549]

Alan Johnson: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has had a number of discussions with colleagues across Government on all aspects of the proposals set out in the recent in the White Paper "The future of higher education" (Cm 5735).

Paul Farrelly: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills pursuant to his letter of 11 April, on student funding, for what reasons it was stated that a graduate tax arrangement could not run alongside the existing student loan repayment scheme. [138562]

Alan Johnson: The circular referred to is a party political document. I will write to my hon. Friend separately.

Higher Education

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what proportion of students from (a) the North West Region, (b) Merseyside, (c) St. Helens and (d) England in higher education received (i) a grant and (ii) a student loan in each year since 1997. [138000]

Alan Johnson: The support arrangements under the mandatory awards scheme for eligible undergraduate students domiciled in England and Wales on courses which began before 1 September 1998 consisted of payment, usually in full, of their tuition fees, a grant towards their maintenance, depending on income, and a non-income assessed loan. New students in academic year 1998/99, with a few exceptions, were expected to contribute up to £1,000 a year towards the cost of their tuition depending on family income. In 1998/99, income-assessed grants on average only formed about a quarter of the support available and all students were entitled to a non income-assessed loan which comprised the remaining three-quarters of support available and which will be repayable on an income contingent basis. New entrants to higher education from 1999/2000, together with those who started in 1998/99, received support for living costs solely through loans which are partly income-assessed. Grants for living costs are no longer available except for some limited allowances, e.g. for students with dependants; students who require assistance with travel, books and equipment; lone parent students; students leaving care; students with dependant children who are eligible for school meals grants; and disabled students.

National level data are published annually in the Department's Statistical First Releases (SFRs) (SFR 11/2003 for 2001/02). Data on grants are collected from the local education authorities (LEAs) to produce national estimates and the data collection exercise does not allow for the production of firm figures below this level, and therefore data by region and local education authority are not available. The percentage of English domiciled students receiving a grant is shown in the table.

[4] Student Support Scheme students in 1998/99 received support for maintenance through income-assessed grants (comprising about a quarter of the support available) and non income assessed student loans (comprising about three-quarters of the support available) repayable on an income contingent basis.
[5] Data on maintenance expenditure for student support scheme students from 1999/2000 relate to additional allowances/grants available to eligible students for extra help depending on their circumstances, e.g. students with disabilities, students with dependents, single parent students, those incurring certain travel costs, and those who have recently left care. Includes students who are eligible for allowances/grants but who may not receive the means tested grants following income assessment.

[1] New student support arrangements were introduced from academic year 1998/99. New students in 1998/99 (apart from certain specified exceptions) received support for maintenance expenditure through means-tested grants (comprising about a quarter of the support available) and non income-assessed student loans (comprising about three-quarters of the support available). From 1999/2000, students who entered higher education after 1998/99 received support for maintenance expenditure through loans, of which approximately three-quarters of the value was non income-assessed. Loans made under these arrangements are repayable on an income contingent basis.

[4] Data up to an including 1998/99 are not available below United Kingdom level.

Information on the region or local education authority of domicile of applicants for student loans is not available prior to academic year 1999/2000; data on the domicile of students taking out fixed rate mortgage style loans (normally those who entered higher education before 1998/99) is not available because applications are made through their education institution. The number of students estimated to be eligible for loans is compiled from data provided by the Higher Education Statistics Agency (covering HEIs) and from separate surveys covering higher education students in further education colleges. These estimates do not allow for robust disaggregation to LEA level.

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many students from (a) the North West Region, (b) Merseyside, (c) St. Helens and (d) England in higher education paid up-front fees in each year since 1997. [138001]

Alan Johnson: The student support arrangements up to, and including, academic year 1997/98 included the payment of tuition fees in full from public funds on behalf of eligible students domiciled in England and Wales. New student support arrangements came into effect at the start of academic year 1998/99 when new entrants to higher education were expected to contribute towards the cost of their tuition. The amount of the contribution depends on family income.

The number of students in England in academic years 1998/99 to 2001/02 (latest year for which data are available) who have been assessed to make a partial or full contribution towards the cost of their tuition is shown in the table.

Student Support Scheme Students number (thousand) [1,2]

1998/99	125
1999/2000	244
2000/01	375
2001/02	402

[1] Contributions towards the cost of tuition are assessed by local education authorities in England for students normally domiciled in their area and studying in the UK.

[2] Data for academic year 1998/99 comprise the cohort of students who entered higher education in that year; data for 1999/2000 comprise the 1998/99 and 1999/2000 cohorts; data for 2000/01 comprise those who entered in 1998/99, 1999/2000 and 2000/01; and data for 2001/02 comprise those students still in study from 1998/99 onwards and new entrants from 2001/02.

[3] Includes students who withdrew from their course before the fee due date (and therefore no fee payment was made by the local education authority). In 1998/99, includes estimation for students who, because they did not expect to receive a contribution towards the cost of their tuition from public funds, did not make an application to their local authority.

Key Stage 2

Mr. Flook: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what proportion of children in (a) Wiltshire, (b) Dorset, (c) Devon and (d) Somerset gained level 4 and above at Key Stage 2 in (i) English and (ii) mathematics in each year since 1997. [138962]

Mr. Miliband: The percentage of 11-year-olds in (a) Wiltshire, (b) Dorset, (c) Devon and (d) Somerset who gained level 4 and above at Key Stage 2 in (i) English and (ii) mathematics in each year since 1997 are as follows:

The 2003 information is based on provisional data.

Literacy

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the literacy level is in (a) the constituency of Romford and (b) other population centres in Essex. [136476]

Mr. Miliband: The constituency of Romford falls within the London borough of Havering education authority. The Key Stage 2 English results for Havering are above average with 80 per cent. of pupils achieving the expected level for their age (level 4+) in 2003, an 11 percentage points increase since 1998, when the National Literacy Strategy was introduced. Nationally, 75 per cent. of pupils achieved level 4+ in English at Key Stage 2 in 2003, a rise of 10 percentage points since 1998.

The 2003 Key Stage 2 results for Havering, compared with those for the London boroughs of Redbridge and Barking and Dagenham, and with the unitary authorities of Southend-on-Sea and Thurrock, and with Essex local education authority are set out in the table. The table shows the percentage of pupils who achieved the expected level for their age (level 4+) in the Key Stage 2 English tests since 1998 in these areas:

Local Education Authorities

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills when he expects the 2002–03 contextual value added indicators to be distributed to local education authorities; and if he will place a copy in the Library. [136817]

Mr. Miliband: The Department will share contextual value added information for secondary schools with individual LEAs before the end of this term. The analysis will be based on provisional data for 2003 results at Key Stage 3 and Key Stage 4, and therefore subject to slight revision. The information is provided on a confidential basis in order to help authorities to review and evaluate the performance of their schools, and to challenge any underperformance.

We have no plans to publish this analysis.

London Universities

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the drop-out rate for universities in London was by (a) percentage and (b) number in each year since 1997. [138665]

Alan Johnson: The available information on non continuation rates is contained in "Performance Indicators in Higher Education", published by the Higher Education Funding Council for England (HEFCE). The figures cover full-time first degree courses only, and show, for each individual HE institution in the UK, the numbers and proportion of entrants who failed to complete their course. Copies of the HEFCE publication are available for students starting courses in 1996–97, 1997–98, 1998–99 and 1999–00 in the House Library. The next edition, covering students starting courses in 2000–01, is scheduled for publication in autumn 2003.

NVQs

Rob Marris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many NVQs were completed in further education colleges in (a) 2001–02 and (b) 2002–03. [136977]

Alan Johnson: The National Information System for Vocational Qualifications (NISVQ) showed that 146,000 NVQs/SVQs of a total 315,000 NVQ/SVQs were achieved[1] in further education colleges/tertiary colleges in England in 2001/02. The equivalent figure for 2002/03 is not yet available.

[1] NISVQ collects information on full NVQ/SVQs awarded. It does not collect information on those qualifications which were completed but not achieved.

Rob Marris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what proportion of NVQs were completed in further education colleges in (a) 2001–02 and (b) 2002–03. [136978]

Alan Johnson: The National Information System for Vocational Qualifications (NISVQ) showed that 46.4 per cent. of a total 315,000 NVQ/SVQs were achieved[1] in further education colleges/tertiary colleges in England in 2001/02. The equivalent figure for 2002/03 is not yet available.

[1] NISVQ collects information on full NVQ/SVQs awarded. It does not collect information on those qualifications which were completed but not achieved.

Performance and Assessment Reports

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills when he expects the 2002–03 Ofsted PANDA information to be distributed to schools; and if he will place a copy in the Library. [136818]

Mr. Miliband: This is a matter for Ofsted. HM Chief Inspector, David Bell, will write to my hon. friend and place a copy of his letter in the Library.

Performance-related Pay

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills whether the costs for every local education authority's performance-related pay expenditure for 2004–05 will be funded in full by government grant, including the on-going costs arising from performance awards in earlier years. [136889]

Mr. Miliband: The threshold performance payments made by schools are refunded in full by the Department, including for on-costs. In 2003–04 we are also contributing a further £205 million towards other performance-related payments to teachers, principally to help meet the costs of the upper pay scale. This will be sufficient to meet all schools' continuing commitments arising from the performance-related pay grant provided in 2002–03 and will support the costs of similar progress along the Upper Pay Scale for those teachers becoming eligible for performance points in September 2003.

For 2004–05, the £205 million we have allocated this year will be uprated at least in line with the headline pay settlement. And if proper arrangements for point 3 of the upper pay scale can be settled with the stakeholders, additional resources will be allocated from September 2004.

Pupil Funding

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the standard deviation from the mean per pupil funding is across (a) primary and (b) secondary schools in 2003–04. [137200]

Mr. Miliband: The information requested is contained in the following table:

Per pupil funding for primary and secondary schools for the 2003–04 session

	Per pupil funding
	Mean	Standard deviation
Primary schools	2,660	642
Secondary schools	3,269	556

School Funding

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the average per pupil funding for (a) primary schools, (b) secondary schools and (c) special schools was in each local education authority area for (i) 2002–03 and (ii) 2003–04. [133603]

Mr. Miliband: The information requested has been placed in the Libraries.

School Meals

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many (a) primary and (b) secondary school students are eligible for free school meals in each English local education authority area. [137546]

Mr. Miliband: The information requested has been placed in the House of Commons Library.

School Workforce Agreement

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how much he has included in his 2004–05 Schools budget for the full implementation of the School Workforce Agreement. [136887]

Mr. Miliband: On 29 October we announced a package of measures to deliver greater stability in school budgets for 2004–05. These measures provide headroom over the average cost pressures that schools face to help schools implement the National Agreement on workforce reform.

In addition, much progress can also be made from schools managing their total resources—people and resources—in different ways. For example, in September 2004, a limit of 38 hours will be introduced on the amount of cover an individual teacher can be required to undertake. Although the majority of teachers will not be affected by this initial limit, it provides an opportunity for schools to examine the use of supply teachers for providing short-term cover, and developing the use of cover supervision by trained support staff.

Secondary Education (Somerset)

Mr. Flook: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many pupils entered secondary education in Somerset in each of the last six years; and how many secondary school admission appeals there were in the Somerset local education authority in the same periods, broken down by (a) successful and (b) unsuccessful appeals. [137382]

Mr. Miliband: The available information is shown in the table.

Maintained secondary schools: appeals lodged by parents against non-admission of their children 1996/97 to 2001/02

Mr. Challen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many pupils entered secondary education in the Leeds Local Education Authority over the last five years; and how many secondary school admission appeals there were in Leeds LEA over the same period, broken down between (a) successful and (b) unsuccessful appeals. [136786]

Student Finance

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what assessment has been made of the average indebtedness of students upon graduation in each of the last 10 years. [137475]

Alan Johnson: The table shows the average student loan debt at the point at which they entered repayment status for borrowers who became liable to repay their loans in financial years 1999–2000 to 2002–03. Data for earlier years are not available.

Average student loan debt on entering year entered repayment status[1]

[1] Data rounded to nearest £10. Includes interest accrued up to the point of entering repayment status. Excludes any early voluntary repayments which may have been made before borrowers enter repayment status. Debt of borrowers with more than one loan type has been split between types.
[2] Borrowers enter repayment status in the April following their graduation or otherwise leaving their course. Borrowers may have accounts in more than one cohort year of entering repayment.
[3] Loans made to students who entered higher education up to 1997–98 or who entered in 1998–99 under existing arrangements. Includes loans repayable to the private sector following the sale of two trenches of student loans.
[4] Loans, repayable on an income contingent basis, available to students who entered higher education from academic year 1998–99. These loans were subject to a repayment holiday until April 2000. Includes hardship loans.
[5] Fixed-rate loans made to eligible part-time students, introduced in September 2000.

The first cohort of students on a three-year degree course who entered higher education under the new student support arrangements became liable for repayment in April 2002. That, and earlier, cohorts includes a disproportionate number of students on shorter courses as well as those who have left higher education before completing their courses. Therefore the average level of debt will not be representative of the average debt experienced by those who complete their courses.

Borrowers are liable to repay their loans from the April following graduation or otherwise leaving their course. Students who started their course from the 1998–99 academic year will repay income contingent loans. Loans for those who started their course before 1998–99 are repayable on a mortgage style basis.

The Department does not have annual data for HE students' total debt on graduation (including bank loans, overdrafts, credit cards, and informal debts to family and friends). The Student income and Expenditure Survey (SIES), which collects this information is undertaken every three to four years. Findings from the last survey in 1998–99 showed that the average total anticipated debt of all full-time students graduating in 1998–99 was £3,462. The Department has conducted a SIES for the 2002–03 academic year which will be published shortly.

Student Loans

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the average student loan for a student from (a) the North West region, (b) Merseyside, (c) St. Helens and (d) England was in each year since 1997. [137996]

Alan Johnson: Information on the region or Local Education Authority of domicile of applicants for student loans is not available prior to academic year 1999/2000; data on the domicile of students taking out fixed rate mortgage style loans (normally those who entered higher education before 1998/99) is not available because applications are made through their education institution.

The available information on students taking out income contingent loans is shown in the table:

Average income-contingent loan[1] taken out by domicile of student—academic years 1999/2000, 2000/01 and 2001/02

[1] New student support arrangements were introduced from academic year 1998/99. From 1999/2000 students who entered higher education after 1998/99 received support for maintenance expenditure through loans, of which approximately three quarters of the value was non income-assessed. Loans made under these arrangements are repayable on an income contingent basis. The ratio of support for mandatory award holders, i.e. those who entered higher education up to 1997/98, was roughly 50 per cent. means-tested grant and 50 per cent. non means-tested loan repayable on a mortgage style basis.

[3] Excludes the fixed rate loan (£500) for eligible part-time students, introduced in September 2000.
[4] From academic year 1999/2000, student support students apply to their Local Education Authority for assessment of their eligibility for student support, including student loans, irrespective of their place of study. Mandatory award holders, i.e. those eligible for mortgage style loans, continue to make applications for student loans through their education institution.

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the average size of (a) grants, (b) student loans and (c) the debt acquired to enable students to finance higher education has been in each year since 1997. [138043]

Alan Johnson: The support arrangements under the mandatory awards scheme for eligible undergraduate students domiciled in England and Wales on courses which began before 1 September 1998 consisted of payment, usually in full, of their tuition fees, a grant towards their maintenance, depending on income, and a non-income assessed loan. New students in academic year 1998/99, with a few exceptions, were expected to contribute up to £1,000 a year towards the cost of their tuition depending on family income. In 1998/99, income-assessed grants on average only formed about a quarter of the support available and all students were entitled to a non income-assessed loan which comprised the remaining three quarters of support available and which will be repayable on an income contingent basis. New entrants to higher education from 1999/2000, together with those who started in 1998/99, received support for living costs solely through loans which are partly income-assessed. Grants for living costs are no longer available except for some limited allowances, e.g. for students with dependants; students who require assistance with travel, books and equipment; lone parent students; students leaving care; students with dependant children who are eligible for school meals grants; and disabled students.

The overall maintenance grant and student loan is shown in the table.

Form F503G survey of local education authorities on student support and Student Loans Company

The Department does not collect annual data for HE students' total debt on graduation (including bank loans, overdrafts, credit cards, and informal debts to family and friends). The Student Income and Expenditure Survey (SIES), which collects this information is undertaken every three to four years. Findings from the last survey in 1998/99 showed that the average total anticipated debt of all full-time students graduating in 1998/99 was £3,462. The Department has conducted a SIES for the 2002/03 academic year which will be published shortly.

Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what targets (a) his Department and (b) the Student Loans Company have for delivering loan payments; and what assessment he has made of whether these targets have been met. [138669]

Alan Johnson: We set performance targets for the Student Loans Company each year. The latest figures on performance against targets are for 2001–02. The 2001–02 targets for delivering mortgage style and income contingent loan payments to students were that the Company should pay 100 per cent. of loan payments within 17 days of receiving an actionable application form. For mortgage style loans, 99 per cent. payments were made within that timescale; for income contingent loans, 98.5 per cent. payments were made within the timescale. Figures showing performance against targets for 2002–03 will be available shortly.

Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many (a) new students and (b) continuing students received their loans within (i) two weeks, (ii) one to two months, (iii) two to three months and (iv) four to five months of sending their applications for academic year 2003–04. [138670]

Alan Johnson: The information is not available in the requested format. All students who applied by the published deadlines with the correct information have now been paid.

Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what provisions are in place to support students awaiting loan payments. [138671]

Alan Johnson: The Hardship/Access to Learning Fund is made available to institutions with HE students to provide discretionary financial help for both full and part-time undergraduate and postgraduate students. Students can receive an emergency short-term loan from the Fund, where their first loan payment has been delayed beyond the start of term.

Sure Start

John Mann: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what plans he has to extend Sure Start's Business Success for Childcare programme to more areas of England, with particular reference to Bassetlaw. [138213]

Margaret Hodge: The Business Success for Childcare Programme delivers free business support training to childcare providers through a series of workshops supported by workbooks.

There are no workshops currently scheduled in the Bassetlaw area. However, 16 workshops have taken place or are due to take place nearby in Mansfield and Nottingham. In addition, the training materials developed for the Programme can be easily accessed via our website www.surestart.gov.uk/support4business.

Sustainable Development

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what steps he is taking to ensure that the Department's bid to the forthcoming Government Spending Round contributes toward the UK's objectives on sustainable development. [138689]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Department for Education and Skills has direct responsibility for one of Government's key sustainable development priorities, and influences seven others, set out in the UK Strategy for Sustainable Development. I launched the Sustainable Development Action Plan for Education and Skills on 23 September 2003. This plan commits this department to work with our partner organisations and other Government departments to ensure that sustainable development is an integral part of education and skills development of this country and its economy. We are working with HM Treasury in the context of the 2004 Spending Review to ensure that sustainable development remains at the heart of the development and renewal of the strategic priorities for this department. We are working closely with colleagues in Defra to ensure the impact of our policies can be measured through the new sustainable development indicators currently being developed as part of the review of the UK Sustainable Development Strategy.

Teacher Recruitment

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how much was spent on the fast track teacher recruitment scheme in each year since the scheme's inception, broken down by category of activity. [138534]

Mr. Miliband: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given on 8 September 2003, Official Report, column 144W.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how much his Department spent on measures to aid teacher recruitment in each year since 1997–98, broken down by programme. [138535]

Mr. Miliband: Many of the Government's policies in education and other areas have contributed to the 25,000 more teachers employed in England since 1997 and the record numbers of trainees now beginning courses of initial teacher training.

Most dedicated programmes intended to increase the numbers of new recruits to teaching in England are administered on the Government's behalf by the Teacher Training Agency. Details of expenditure on these for years up to and including 2002–03 are contained in the Agency's audited accounts, which have been placed in the Library.

Teachers (Qualifications)

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what subject qualifications a teacher requires to teach (a) mathematics, (b) English and (c) science at (i) Key Stage I, (ii) Key Stage II, (iii) Key Stage III, (iv) Key Stage IV and (v) AS/A2 level. [138533]

Mr. Miliband: The deployment of teachers and other school staff is a matter for the professional judgment of headteachers.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many lessons in (a) mathematics, (b) science and (c) English were identified in the 2003 Curriculum and Staffing Survey as being taught by teachers without a subject-specific qualification in the subject being taught. [138536]

Mr. Miliband: In the November 2002 Secondary School Curriculum and Staffing Survey, 13 per cent. of mathematics; 8 per cent. of combined/general science; and 11 per cent. of English periods were taught to year groups 7 to 13 by full time teachers without a post A-level qualification in the subject being taught. The data underpinning these percentages are still undergoing thorough validation. Estimates of the total number of periods taught by full time teachers to year groups 7 to 13 by subject will be published in the statistical volume "School Workforce in England (2003 edition)".

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what steps he has taken to ensure that teachers without formal qualifications in (a) mathematics, (b) science and (c) English receive professional development to teach these subjects. [138537]

Mr. Miliband: Through the National Literacy and Numeracy Strategies, the Government are already offering comprehensive support and training for the teaching of English and maths in primary schools. The Key Stage 3 Strategy provides similar support for subject knowledge and professional development for teachers teaching English, maths and science in secondary schools.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what estimate he has made of the number of additional (a) mathematics, (b) science and (c) English teachers that would need to be recruited if all lessons at Key Stage III and Key Stage IV were to be taught by teachers with a formal qualification in the appropriate subject. [138538]

Mr. Miliband: My right hon. Friend has made no such estimate. However, the financial incentives and new routes to Qualified Teacher Status that the Government has created are bringing specialists in these subjects into teaching in record numbers. Figures published by the Teacher Training Agency on 10 November showed that, in the last five years, the number of recruits to conventional undergraduate and postgraduate courses of initial teacher training and the employment-based Graduate Teacher Programme has risen in mathematics by 91 per cent, in English by 33 per cent, and in science by 40 per cent. In these subjects alone, there have been almost 2,700 more recruits to training so far this year than in 1998–99.

In addition to these huge gains, the widely welcomed remodelling of the school workforce that the Government and its partners are tak'ng forward will enable all subject specialists to use their knowledge to the maximum benefit of learners in the classroom.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many newly qualified teachers who registered on the database of teacher records in each of the last three years for which figures are available had degrees in psychology. [138539]

Mr. Miliband: The table shows the number of teachers who qualified in England in each of the calendar years shown with psychology as a subject of their first degree.

Calendar year	Psychology as a subject of first degree[1]
2000	720
2001	850
2002[2]	870

Top-up Fees

Paul Farrelly: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what action he (a) has taken and (b) proposes to take to meet concerns expressed by hon. Members about the proposed implementation of variable top-up fees. [137555]

Alan Johnson: We published our response to the Education and Skills Select Committee's report on the Higher Education White Paper on 28 July. We also published on that date our response to the consultation on the Higher Education White Paper. In addition, I have had a number of meetings with hon. Members about our higher education policy, and will continue to do so.

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what arrangements will apply if top-up fees are introduced for the allocation of resources for student bursaries in situations where two or more higher education institutions make joint arrangements to facilitate access to their courses. [137878]

Alan Johnson: Universities will be able to make joint arrangements for bursaries—we already encourage collaboration between institutions in order to widen participation through programmes such as Aimhigher.

Tuition Fees

Paul Farrelly: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what research he has collated on the impact of variable fees on social access to university medical places in (a) the United States, (b) Canada and (c) Australia. [137213]

Alan Johnson: We are aware of research on the impact of variable fees on social access to a range of university courses in Australia and Canada. I have placed copies of a number of pieces of research in the House Library.

With regard to access to medical places in this country under the proposed variable fees system, we do not anticipate that there will be any significant effect on applications to medical courses. Applications to medical schools in the UK have gone up since 1988, as have the total number of students studying medical courses. However, Department of Health Ministers have made it clear that they will, if necessary, take measures to ensure that any increase in the level of tuition fees will not have an adverse impact on the supply, retention, diversity or quality of students undertaking medical training.

Paul Farrelly: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what estimates his Department has made of the demand for places on medical courses if students are charged the maximum tuition fee per year. [137215]

Alan Johnson: We do not anticipate any significant impact on demand for medical courses after the introduction of variable fees. The Department of Health will, however, be monitoring demand for, and take-up of, medical courses. Department of Health Ministers have made it clear that they will, if necessary, take measures to ensure that any increase in the level of tuition fees will not have an adverse impact on the supply, retention, diversity or quality of students on health professional courses, including medicine.

Since the introduction of tuition fees in 1998, demand for places on medical courses has continued to outstrip significantly the number of places, despite an increase in the number of places available. Between 1999 and 2001, plans for some 2,250 more medical school places in the UK were announced. As a result of the extra investment, the number of students entering medical school will increase to over 7,300 in 2005. The number of UK applicants to study medicine at UK universities is also at its highest since 1986 (the earliest year for which data are available).

As I said on 6 November in response to an earlier question from my hon. Friend, I have placed in the House Library copies of a number of pieces of international research on the impact on social access to a range of university courses.

Paul Farrelly: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many of the responses to the Higher Education White Paper (a) were supportive (b) had reservations about and (c) were opposed to variable fees. [137299]

Alan Johnson: I refer my hon. Friend to the Government's response to the consultation on the Higher Education White Paper that was placed on the website of the Department for Education and Skills on 28 July 2003. An electronic copy of all the responses was also placed in the House Library.

Paul Farrelly: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will place in the Library copies of the evidence collated from overseas on the impact of variable tuition fees on social access to medical courses. [137570]

Alan Johnson: I have placed in the House Library copies of a number of documents containing evidence from Canada and Australia on the impact of variable fees on social access to a range of university courses.

I will also place in the House Library a copy of a piece of research from New Zealand which also contains evidence on this matter.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what estimate his Department has made of the cost to a student of financing up-front payment of a £3,000 student tuition fee over the anticipated period of repayment. [138532]

Alan Johnson: The Government has proposed that students who choose to defer payment of their tuition fees until after they have graduated will repay their fee loans at zero real rate of interest. A graduate will, therefore, repay the same amount, in real terms, as he or she borrowed initially.

Mr. Keith Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what percentage of tuition fees he intends that each university should pay out in bursaries to students from low-income families; and what definition of a low-income family he will use for this purpose. [138716]

Alan Johnson: We are considering and discussing the contents of access agreements and the duties of the Office for Fair Access, and will make a statement in due course.

Paul Farrelly: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills pursuant to his answer of 12 November 2003, Official Report, columns 354–5W, on tuition fees, if he will give the column reference and name of the honourable Member who put the question he answered on 6 November in respect of international research on social access and higher education. [139408]

Alan Johnson: The answer to question 137214 was intended to refer to question number 137213, tabled by the hon. Member himself for answer on 6 November. Due to an administrative error PQ 137213 had not been answered by the time the reply to 137214 was tabled. The information referred to has been placed in the Libraries.

University Applicants

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) what options he has examined for assessing (a) the standard of university applicants and (b) their suitability for different types of university courses; [137676]

(2) if he will make a statement on the use of psychometric testing in the university admissions procedure. [137677]

Alan Johnson: Admissions are a matter for universities. Professor Steven Schwartz, Vice Chancellor of Brunel University is currently leading an independent review of the options which English institutions should consider in assessing the merits of applicants for their courses. His review will help universities to draw on best practice and the latest research. We expect that the review will provide a statement of high level principles that we hope all universities will adopt.

University Courses (Vacancies)

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) how many places on courses offered by universities were not filled in each academic year since 1997, broken down by course; [133069]

(2) when he will reply to the question of 15 October from the hon. Member for Hertsmere, ref 133069. [136717]

Alan Johnson: Information on the number of unfilled places on courses offered by universities is not collected centrally.

University Entrants

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) expressed as a percentage of the total student body in (a) 1992, (b) 1997 and (c) 2001, what percentage of (i) student entrants and (ii) student drop-outs came from each socio-economic class; [135781]

(2) what percentage of new student entrants to Russell Group universities came from each socio-economic class in (a) 1992, (b) 1997 and (c) 2001; and what the figures were of all universities in those years. [135782]

Alan Johnson: Information for years prior to 1994 is not available centrally. The available information covers UK domiciled accepted applicant numbers to full time and sandwich first degrees through the Universities and Colleges Admissions Service (UCAS) to Russell Group institutions and all UK institutions. Figures are shown in the table.

The available information on non-completion rates by institution is contained in the Higher Education Funding Council for England (HEFCE) publication "Performance indicators in higher education in the UK", a copy of which is in the House Library. The figures cover full-time first degree courses only, and show, for each individual HE institution in the UK, the proportion of entrants who failed to complete their course, but these data are not disaggregated by social class.

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what estimate he has made of the cost of reaching the target of 50 per cent. of 18 to 30-year-olds entering university by 2010. [137204]

Alan Johnson: The funding for higher education up to 2005–06 was set out in the White Paper 'The Future of higher education' (Cmd 5735), and in the annual grant letter to the Higher Education Funding Council for England. Assessments of the costs for increasing and widening participation beyond 2005–06 will be made as part of the 2004 Spending Review.

Vocational Education

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will make a statement on the importance placed on the promotion of vocational education within the schools system. [137545]

Mr. Miliband: We attach great importance to vocational education in schools and are taking many steps to promote it as a first class option for all pupils. Not only have we made available eight GCSEs in vocational subjects, and backed them up with the £120 million 'Increased Flexibility for 14–16 Year Olds' programme, but we are also developing more GCSEs in vocational subjects and work-related learning will become a statutory requirement for all in 2004.

In the longer term, we will be considering the recommendations of the 14–19 Working Group as to how we can strengthen vocational programmes for young people.

Work-related Stress

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many cases of work-related stress have been reported in his Department in each of the last three years; how much compensation has been paid to employees; how many work days have been lost due to work-related stress, and at what cost; what procedures have been put in place to reduce work-related stress, and at what cost; and if he will make a statement. [136845]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The information requested is not held by my Department in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

My Department is committed to providing its employees with a safe and healthy working environment. It is also committed to meeting the targets for reducing work related injuries and illnesses arising from the Government's Revitalising Health and Safety initiative. This includes ensuring that work practices are safe and that effective occupational health policies and good health management practices are developed.

My Department has procedures in place to reduce stress related absences which include:

Training events on stress management available to all staff;

An interactive on-line package to help with recognition and prevention of stress;

An employee assistance service which includes an advice and counselling service; and

An occupational health service that provides practical advice on occupational health issues.

No compensation has been paid to employees specifically for work related stress in any of the last three years.

Youth Workers

Paddy Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many youth workers were employed in (a) 2002–03 and (b) 2003–04, broken down by local education authority. [136967]

Mr. Miliband [holding answer 6 November 2003]: This information is not yet available, although the figures for 2002–03 should be available within the next two months. I will of course write to my hon. Friend setting out the figures for both 2002–03 and 2003–04 as soon as I have them and I will place a copy in the House Library.

HEALTH

Disabled People (Sexual Relationships)

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what programmes (a) there are and (b) he intends to introduce to enable more disabled people to have fulfilled sexual relationships. [137909]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Primary care trusts (PCTs) have been given the flexibility to provide services to best meet local needs, and we would expect this to include appropriate sexual health services for disabled people where such a need exists. To support PCTs in this role, the Department has published best practice information on commissioning sexual health services, which emphasises the need to provide services which are accessible and equitable, including advice on sexual health promotion for disabled people. The Department is also supporting, through a Section 64 grant, the Family Planning Association's project to provide training, advice and support in sexual health to people working with, and caring for, adults with learning disabilities.

Genetically Modified Food

Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what techniques are available for identifying unintended changes in GM foods at the molecular level; and what research he has published on this subject; [136235]

(2) how unintended changes in GM foods approved in Europe are evaluated; and what research he has commissioned on this subject. [136238]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Each genetically modified (GM) food approved to date in Europe has been assessed on a case by case basis. A comparison is made between the GM food and its non-GM counterpart and the assessment focuses on any differences between the two. This includes a detailed analysis of the inserted gene and the protein produced, and any differences observed in the overall composition of the food.

There are a number of techniques, which could potentially be used for identifying unintended effects in GM foods at the molecular level. These include two-dimensional protein gel electrophoresis, protein microarrays, nuclear magnetic resonance and gas and liquid chromatography mass spectrometry.

The Food Standards Agency funds two research programmes, which underpin the safety assessment of GM foods. One of the programmes is exploring the potential use of the above techniques for detecting unintended changes at the molecular level. The programme started in September 2001 and will finish in 2004.

NHS Dentistry

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many individuals resident in the City of Sunderland were registered with an NHS dental practitioner in each year since 2000; and how many NHS dental practitioners were practising in the Sunderland PCT area in each year. [136518]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Table 1 shows the number of registrations in the general dental service (CDS) for dentists located in the Sunderland area between 2000 and 2003, at 31 August each year.

Accident and Emergency Services

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the average waiting time was for patients in accident and emergency departments in each of the hospitals in (a) the Havering, Barking and Redbridge national health service trust and (b) Romford in the last year for which figures are available. [137319]

Mr. Hutton: Information on the total time patients spend in accident and emergency departments from arrival to admission, transfer or discharge is collected each quarter from national health service trusts and is routinely published on the Department's website at http://www.doh.gov.uk/hospitalactivity.

Copies of the information for England and for each national health service trust and strategic health authority for the last year have been placed in the Library.

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the average waiting time in accident and emergency departments has been in each of the past 12 months, broken down by strategic health authority. [135417]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Information is not collected on the average waiting time in accident and emergency departments. Information on the total time patients spend in accident and emergency departments from arrival to admission, transfer or discharge is collected each quarter from national health service trusts and is routinely published on the Department of Health website at http://www.doh.gov.uk/hospitalactivity/. Copies of the information for England and for each national health service trust and strategic health authority have been placed in the Library.

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients admitted to accident and emergency in Worthing hospital in (a) 2001, (b) 2002 and (c) 2003 waited for more than (i) 12 and (ii) four hours before being treated or transferred to a ward. [134776]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Information on accident and emergency is not collected centrally at individual hospital level, or on the time patients wait for treatment. However, the table shows the number of patients who waited more than four hours for a bed in a ward following a decision to admit at Worthing and Southlands Hospitals National Health Service Trust. Information for patients waiting more than 12 hours is not available.

Alcohol

Mr. Stevenson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will require health warnings to be displayed on alcoholic drinks; and if he will make a statement. [137771]

Miss Melanie Johnson: This issue will be examined as part of the work on the development of the Alcohol Harm Reduction Strategy for England, which is currently being undertaken by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's Strategy Unit. The strategy is due to implemented from 2004, in line with the commitment given in the NHS Plan.

Alcohol-related Violence

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the cost to the NHS of treating the victims of alcohol-related violence in town and city centres. [136360]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The most recent estimates of costs to the national health service arising from alcohol-related illness and disease was undertaken by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's Strategy Unit and published in their Interim Analytical Report on 19 September 2003. This document reported the annual cost of alcohol-related attendances at accident and emergency (A and E) units and alcohol-related ambulance journeys in England at around £0.5 billion per year. This estimate covers all alcohol-related attendances at A and E and ambulance journeys, and does not break the costs down by reason for attendance. However a proportion of these costs will be attributable to alcohol-related violence in town centres.

Alternative Medicine

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the NHS trusts which provide (a) alternative and (b) complementary medicine. [138105]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Details of which national health service organisations provide access to complementary or alternative medicines are not recorded centrally.

However, a survey of general practices in England, conducted in 2001 for the Department by the Medical Care Research Unit, University of Sheffield, found that almost half the practices offered patients some access to complementary or alternative medicines. The therapies most frequently provided were acupuncture and homeopathy.

Ambulance Control Centre (Merseyside)

Mr. Benton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the change in the number of emergency calls received by Merseyside Ambulance Control Centre was in each year since 1993; what the change in staffing levels at Merseyside Ambulance Control Centre was in each such year; and if he will make a statement. [137845]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 12 November 2003]: The information is not available in the requested format. The Merseyside Ambulance Control Centre has updated its call routing system in October this year. As a result, only data from 1993 and 2003 is available. The figures for 1993 are available because the control centre documented data in 1993 in order to carry out a ten year comparison in 2003. In 1993–94, the control centre received 368,800 emergency calls. In 2002–03, the figure was 468,700.

The staffing levels at the Merseyside Ambulance Control Centre are shown in the table.

	Percentage of staff
1998–99	57.78
1999–2000	57.78
2000–01	57.78
2001–02	66.79
2002–03	66.79

Ambulances

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the average response time of ambulances to 999 calls in the London borough of Havering was in the last year for which figures are available. [137321]

Mr. Hutton: Information on response times is collected on a national health service trust basis. A copy is available in the Library and at http://www.doh.gov.uk/public/sb0313.pdf.

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the average time an ambulance took to reach hospital was for the last 12 months that figures are available in (a) England, (b) the north west region, (c) Merseyside and (d) St. Helens. [138004]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Details of ambulance performance are contained in the Department of Health Statistical Bulletin, "Ambulance Services, England 2002–03". A copy of the bulletin is available in the Library and on the Department's website at www.doh.gov.uk/public/sb0313.htm.

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many ambulance call-outs were made in the last 12 months for which figures are available in (a) the St. Helens trust area, (b) Merseyside and (c) England. [138005]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Information about the number of emergency calls received by national health service ambulance trusts, including Mersey Regional Ambulance Service, is contained in the Department of Health Statistical Bulletin, "Ambulance Services, England 2002–03". A copy of the bulletin is available in the Library and on the Department's website at www.doh.gov.uk/public/sb0313.htm.

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of ambulance call outs in the most recent 12 months for which figures are available have taken more than (a) 15, (b) 30 and (c) 50 minutes to respond to category A emergency calls in (i) the St. Helens and Knowsley Trust area, (ii) Merseyside and (iii) England. [138008]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Details of ambulance performance are contained in the Department of Health Statistical Bulletin, "Ambulance Services, England 2002–03". A copy of the bulletin is available in the Library and on the Department's website at www.doh.gov.uk/public/sb0313.htm.

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action is being taken by his Department to respond to the concerns of the Commission for Health Improvement in relation to (a) ambulance response times being manipulated, (b) wide variations in the categorisation of calls, (c) poor management practice in ambulance trusts and (d) the need for appropriate outcome measures for the ambulance service. [138059]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Department of Health and the ambulance service recognise that response times can sometimes be recorded inconsistently. We are determined to resolve this and have already begun to hold constructive discussions with the service and other key stakeholders about how to tighten up and standardise procedures.

We will not tolerate any deliberate mis-reporting of data and have made it very clear that serious consequences will follow any individual or trusts that seek to manipulate their performance data.

Response time will always be an important measure of the service to patients and there is no immediate prospect of moving away from the eight minute standard. The standard has clinical origins—it is based on the optimum time limit for intervention in heart attack cases. But there are other signifiers of progress and other measures of success, and we intend to explore the possibilities of supplementing response times with other standards, including those directly related to clinical outcomes.

We are working closely with the Modernisation Agency and key stakeholders concerning management practices raised within this report.

Appliance Contractors

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what steps he will take to protect patient access to a full range of products after the deregulation of the appliance contractor market; [137358]

(2) what arrangements he is putting in place for the production of bespoke products after the deregulation of the appliance contractor market; [137359]

(3) what estimate he has made of the savings that the national health service will make under the deregulation of the appliance contractor market; [137360]

(4) if he will make a statement about his proposals to deregulate the appliance agency market. [137362]

Ms Rosie Winterton: We are currently consulting on a range of measures to modernise the regulatory system which governs whether or not a community pharmacy or appliance contractor can dispense national health service prescriptions, known as the "control of entry" test. As well as maintaining and improving access to pharmaceutical services, including the supply of appliances, in all our communities and continuing to raise standards for patients, the aim is to make the system more business friendly, to provide more certainty and reliability for the companies who depend on it and to make the process less time-consuming.

The measures include a proposal to exempt from that test applications from contractors who intend to provide a wholly mail order or internet based service by implementing the provisions of Section 43 of the Health and Social Care Act 2001 relating to the remote provision of NHS pharmaceutical services. This exemption would be subject to the range of services such contractors are to provide being agreed within the proposed new national contractual framework.

Full details are given in Chapter 4 of the consultation document, "Proposals to reform and modernise the NHS (Pharmaceutical Services) Regulations 1992", published on 29 August 2003 and available on the Department's website at www.doh.gov.uk./pharmacy regulationconsultation. It also includes at Annex C a draft regulatory impact assessment and competition assessment setting out further details of the possible costs and benefits of the proposals.

Comments can be sent, by 21 November 2003, to Peter Dunlevy, Pharmacy and Prescriptions Branch, Department of Health, Room 155 Richmond House, 79 Whitehall, London SW1A 2NS or e-mail to peter.dunlevy(a doh.gsi.gov.uk

We have also set up a multi-disciplinary advisory group to advise on the details of implementation of the reform proposals. We have asked the group to report by December this year.

Asbestos-related Diseases

Chris McCafferty: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether his Department is able to trace the sources of (a) mesothelioma and (b) other asbestos-related diseases through its records. [137383]

Mr. Browne: I have been asked to reply.

The information held by the Department and the Health and Safety Executive (HSE) on mesothelioma and other asbestos-related diseases is not sufficiently detailed to trace accurately the specific sources of such diseases.

HSE maintains mesothelioma and asbestosis registers based on information from death certificates but then give only the last known occupation. They also hold information on the medical examinations of asbestos removal workers to assess if in the longer term they are more likely to contract an asbestos-related disease than other occupational groups.

Claimants for mesothelioma under the Department's Industrial Injuries Benefit scheme provide details of employers where they claim they were exposed to asbestos. But this is a no-fault scheme that does not attribute the cause to a specific employer.

Asperger's Syndrome

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the adequacy of health provision for people with Asperger's syndrome. [136954]

Ms Rosie Winterton [holding answer 6 November 2003]: No assessment has been made of the adequacy of health provision for people with Asperger's syndrome. It is the responsibility of local statutory authorities to determine the pattern of services in their area in the light of their knowledge of local needs and priorities. People with Asperger's syndrome have the same right of access to health services as everyone else. Adults with Asperger's syndrome are covered by the mental health national service framework in respect of any mental health problems that they may have. We have also issued guidance to the national health service, which states that:

> "adults with Asperger's syndrome are not precluded from using learning disability services, where appropriate, and may require an assessment of their social functioning and communications skills in order to determine their level of need".

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether (a) his Department and (b) the National Institute for Clinical Excellence has issued guidance to trusts and doctors on whether Asperger's syndrome should be considered a mental disorder in relation to the Mental Health Act 1995; and if he will make a statement. [138833]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Asperger's syndrome is a developmental disorder on the autistic spectrum and as such comes under the definition of mental disorder in the Mental Health Act 1983. Although the Mental Health (Patients in the Community) Act 1995 amended the 1983 Act, it did not change the definition of mental disorder. Guidance on the operation of the Mental Health Act 1983 (the Code of Practice ISBN 0–11–322111–8) was produced by my Department and the then Welsh Office and published by the Stationery Office in 1999. It does not make specific mention of Asperger's syndrome.

Audiology

Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to improve the (a) pay structure and (b) employment package for qualified audiologists; and if he will make a statement. [137854]

Mr. Hutton: "Agenda for Change", the new pay system for national health service employees, including healthcare scientists working in the discipline of audiology, has been negotiated over the past four years by NHS staff and NHS employer representatives working in partnership. From 2003–04 to 2005–06 the package will give a 10 per cent. pay increase to all staff, plus an estimated 5.9 per cent. on average from the reform package in the longer run.

"Agenda for Change" is being tested in 12 'early implementer' sites with a view to implementing the new system nationally from October 2004.

Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many audiologists qualified in each of the last five years for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement; [137857]

(2) how many people are being trained as audiologists. [137859]

Dr. Ladyman: The information requested is not available centrally.

The Health Professions Council (HPC) holds information on the numbers of clinical scientists in audiology on its register, a prerequisite for employment in the United Kingdom. This information can be found on the HPC website at http://www.hpc-uk.org/about us/facts figures cpsm registrants.htm.

Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how long it takes for an audiologist to become qualified. [137858]

Mr. Hutton: The length of time it takes to become a qualified audiologist depends upon an individual's entry qualifications and experience. The major education and training route into audiology, and associated with a defined scope of practice, will be the new four year BSc (Hons) vocational degree in audiology. Within this programme, there will be an opportunity for some non-audiology graduates to undertake a fast track two year education and training route leading to a graduate diploma.

Good honours graduates in relevant science subjects can still enter into the national health service as clinical scientist audiology trainees. They spend a period of up to four years in postgraduate education and training (incorporating an MSc degree and clinical training) before becoming registered with the Health Professions Council (HPC) as a clinical scientist in the modality of audiology.

Vera Baird: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects digital hearing aids to be available to patients on the NHS in the borough of Redcar and Cleveland. [136464]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The James Cook University hospital, Middlesbrough, will be fitting digital hearing aids routinely as a part of a modernised hearing aid service by March 2004.

Breast Feeding

Mrs. Brooke: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he is taking to encourage more hospitals in England to seek baby-friendly accreditation from UNICEF by promoting increased uptake of breast feeding. [135034]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 29 October 2003]: The Department works closely with the UK Baby Friendly Initiative to help further the mutual aim of promoting increased uptake of breast feeding. It is for local national health service trusts to decide whether to seek baby-friendly accreditation from UNICEF.

Mrs. Brooke: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he is taking to ensure that student (a) midwives and (b) health visitors receive adequate education on breast feeding as part of their pre-registration training. [135043]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 29 October 2003]: The regulatory Council for Nursing and Midwifery sets the standards and outline requirements for pre-registration nurse and midwifery education. Additional content may be included to reflect the employment needs of the local service providers. National health service trusts, as local service providers, will wish to ensure that their staff receive adequate education on breast feeding to enable them to deliver the targets in the Priorities and Planning Framework to increase breast feeding initiation rates. In the NHS Plan, the Government have made a commitment to provide increased support for breast feeding.

Cancer

Mrs. Calton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will amend the Cancer Patient Information Strategy to ensure that information on (a) diagnosis and (b) treatment is available for all people affected by (i) breast cancer and (ii) cancer in general who want it. [137454]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The provision of a range of high quality, accurate, culturally sensitive and timely information materials about cancer and cancer services for patients and carers throughout the course of their illness is one of the key recommendations in the NHS Cancer Plan (September 2000). It is also in the draft National Institute for Clinical Excellence's supportive and palliative care guidance, due to be published in February 2004. These build on the Cancer Information Strategy, published in June 2000,

Work to address this need is being taken forward by the coalition for cancer information (CCI). The CCI, which was formed in June 2002, brings together producers and consumers of cancer information, including Breast Cancer Care, CancerBACUP and Macmillan Cancer Relief. The role of the CCI is to oversee the development of high quality information materials for those affected by cancer. It is presently taking forward work on quality assurance and accreditation and it will also address issues concerning the development of information, dissemination and delivery to patients.

Cannabis

Paul Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will take steps to accelerate the process to allow the prescription of medicinal cannabis. [138354]

Dr. Ladyman: A marketing authorisation has not yet been issued for cannabis for pain relief use. The Medicines and Healthcare products Regulatory Agency will consider any application for a medicinal product containing cannabinoids for the treatment of spasticity and other symptoms related to multiple sclerosis.

Like any other medicinal product, however, cannabis-based medicines can only be granted a marketing authorisation for medical purposes when supporting data have been submitted to demonstrate that the quality, safety and efficacy of the product are satisfactory for the intended use.

Care Home Beds

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has received from the National Care Standards Commission on the number of care home beds in (a) 2002 and (b) 2003. [138892]

Dr. Ladyman: The National Care Standards Commission (NCSC) noted in their annual report, published in September 2003, that there were 426,600 care places in homes registered in England at 31 March 2003. This figure excludes some local authority homes which had not been registered and therefore is not comparable with data for previous years published by the Department of Health.

Due to operational and technical problems with the NCSC database they have been unable to produce information for 2002.

Care Home Inspection

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many care home inspectors are employed; how many vacancies there are in each region for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [136868]

Dr. Ladyman: The information requested is shown in the table.

British Lung Foundation

Mr. Stevenson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent discussions he has held with the British Lung Foundation; and if he will make a statement. [137773]

Dr. Ladyman: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, will be meeting representatives of the British Lung Foundation in the near future.

Care Homes

Mr. Collins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the cost of converting residential rooms operated by the Leonard Cheshire Organisation at the Holehird home for the disabled in Windermere to comply with new national care standards. [137922]

Dr. Ladyman: The national minimum standards for care homes for adults 18 to 65 and those for care homes for older people were introduced in April 2002. It is not possible to estimate the cost for individual care homes of meeting the standards as this will vary from home to home depending on the individual circumstances of the home, including the type of resident cared for and the extent to which it already meets the necessary standards. It is for the National Care Standards Commission to inspect care homes to ensure they meet the assessed needs of their residents.

Mr. Collins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the proposed closure of the Holehird Leonard Cheshire home for the disabled in Windermere. [137924]

Dr. Ladyman: The decision to close Holehird is an operational one for the Leonard Cheshire Foundation. It is not generally appropriate for central government to intervene when a home closes.

We appreciate how traumatic it can be for vulnerable people who have to be moved from residential care homes which have become their true homes. It is, therefore, important that any decision to close a home is taken as sensitively and appropriately as possible.

Local councils have a responsibility for making satisfactory alternative arrangements for anyone that they place in a home which subsequently closes. There should be adequate time for the safe and satisfactory transfer of all residents to other suitable homes. This should be done in a way that takes into account the views of residents and their relatives and creates the minimum possible discomfort to all concerned.

Cervical Cancer

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people participated in the limited implementation human papilloma virus pilot scheme in (a) Newcastle, (b) North Bristol and (c) Norfolk and Norwich; and if he will make a statement on the scheme. [136880]

Miss Melanie Johnson: A pilot study of liquid based cytology (LBC) and human papilloma viruses (HPV) testing as triage within the national health service cervical screening programme began in April 2001 at three sites. The independent evaluation report on the LBC arm of the pilot was sent to the National Institute for Clinical Excellence (NICE) in April 2003. On 22 October 2003, NICE published its appraisal of LBC and recommended that this new technology be introduced across the NHS. The independent evaluation of the HPV arm of pilot is due to report in spring 2004.

Details of the number of people who participated in the pilot are shown in the table.

	Number of people participating
Pilot site	HPV	LBC
Norfolk and Norwich	3,220	61,684
Bristol	3,858	81,155
Newcastle	5,109	80,116

Chiropody

Mr. Baron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients recorded as first contacts for chiropody services during 2002–03 (a) had a foot condition that was cured and (b) did not go on to receive foot care. [131565]

Dr. Ladyman [holding answer 14 October 2003]: This information is not collected centrally.

Mr. Baron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what studies he has commissioned on access and eligibility criteria used by primary care trusts for NHS chiropody provision; and what the results were; [131566]

(2) what steps are being taken to harmonise access and eligibility criteria for chiropody services across (a) primary care trusts and (b) regions; [131567]

(3) what extent access and eligibility criteria for chiropody services operated by primary care trusts are based on (a) patient need and (b) funding requirement. [131568]

Dr. Ladyman [holding answer 14 October 2003]: We have not commissioned any such studies. Eligibility criteria are broadly the same everywhere and are essentially clinical though there may be detail differences from place to place. Access in individual cases may depend on a variety of factors including funding but predominantly acuteness of problem, medical risk or clinical need. It is for primary care trusts to determine the level of resources to devote to the treatment of different conditions in their localities.

Continence Services

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many primary care trusts include the development of an integrated continence service in their health improvement programme. [137936]

Dr. Ladyman: We do not collect this information centrally. Health improvement programmes have now been replaced by local delivery plans (LDPs). Each national health service trust is now responsible for creating its own business plan, which shows how it will deploy its resources to deliver on both national and local priorities and fit within the plans of its primary care trust (PCT) commissioners. These local plans will not be analysed centrally.

Strategic health authorities (SHAs) will bring together those PCT plans into a comprehensive LDP for their area. In general, the SHA-level local delivery plan will be the only plan the Department will formally sign-off. The LDP that is submitted to the Department addresses the Priorities in the Planning and Performance Framework (Improvement, expansion and reform: The next three years' priorities and planning framework, 2003–06). Formal monitoring only covers those priorities and will not provide detail of individual service provision like continence services.

The national service framework for older people includes a milestone that, by April 2004, all local health and social care systems should have established an integrated continence service.

CT Scans

Mrs. Calton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the average time was between diagnosis of a suspected haemorrhagic stroke and the administration of a CT scan in 2002–03. [137347]

Dr. Ladyman: This information is not collected centrally. The target in this area is to achieve a computed tomography or magnetic resonance imaging scan in less than 48 hours. The summary report of the 2001–02 National Sentinel Stroke Audit reported that more patients than ever had brain imaging, with at least 83 per cent., meeting that target.

Dentistry

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the availability to new patients of NHS dentistry in the Gosport constituency; and what the prescribed minimum level of availability is in England. [135595]

Ms Rosie Winterton [holding answer 4 November 2003]: The Government are committed to ensure that national health service dentistry is available to all those who need and seek it. Those wishing to see a NHS dentist can do so by contacting NHS Direct for information on dentists offering NHS dental services in their areas. It is recognised that not all dentists on general dental service lists of primary care trusts (PCTs) are accepting new NHS registrations. We have set up a NHS Support Team to work with PCTs on dental access. We have also announced new funds totalling £44 million for 2003–04 and 2004–05 to support dental access, choice and quality.

Subject to Parliament, the Health and Social Care (Community Health and Standards) Bill will give new duties for PCTs to secure primary dental services. With these new responsibilities will go the £1.2 billion financial resources currently held centrally.

On 1 August 2003, as part of the new arrangements for NHS dentistry, we set up the new special health authority in shadow form to support PCTs. A team from the special health authority and the NHS dentistry support team met with NHS officials for Hampshire and the Isle of Wight at the end of October to discuss the development of a dentistry action plan and the support team will be working closely with the NHS locally to take this forward.

In the meantime, the Fareham and Gosport primary care trust is putting in place a range of measures to improve access to dental services in the area. This includes a dental access centre in Fareham designed to provide unregistered patients with access to NHS dentistry. This is supported by an incentive scheme which offers additional access to NHS dental care based in existing dental surgeries.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many dentists in north east Lincolnshire provide NHS dentistry for adults; and how many will take new NHS clients onto their rolls; [137695]

(2) what proposals he has for improving access to NHS dentistry in north east Lincolnshire. [137696]

Miss Melanie Johnson: 44 general dental service (GDS) dentists were working in the North East Lincolnshire Primary Care Trust (PCT) area on 30 June 2003, all of whom provided national health service dentistry for adults.

The www.nhs.uk website shows that no dentists are taking on new NHS patients in the North East Lincolnshire PCT area.

Patients seeking to register with a dentist can access information on the dental practices taking on new NHS patients by contacting NHS Direct, their local PCT or by accessing the www.nhs.uk website. Registrations are being accepted in Stamford, Grantham and Lincoln.

The Department has approved an application for funding one full time salaried dentist plus support staff, which has been submitted by North East Lincolnshire PCT.

Following local discussion between the PCT and local dental practitioners, a proposal has been developed to establish an urgent "dental access service" based in Grimsby to serve north east Lincolnshire patients.

Disciplinary Investigations

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what guidelines are in place to ensure that disciplinary investigations within NHS trusts are independent; [137371]

(2) what scrutiny is undertaken to ensure that (a) disciplinary investigations within NHS trusts are independent and (b) investigatory panels make undisputed conclusions. [137372]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 12 November 2003]: National health service trusts are free to employ staff under such terms as they see fit (section 16, NHS and Community Care Act 1990). Trusts are also responsible for the establishment of their own local disciplinary procedures for medical and dental staff. In the 1990s, many trusts developed new procedures often based on the procedures set out in circulars HC(90)9 and HSG(94)49.

The Department has been working closely with the British Medical Association to develop a new national framework. Trusts will be required to ensure that their local procedures adhere to the principles and procedures set out in the framework.

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to ensure that, in contentious disciplinary cases, evidence submitted to an investigation is not (a) altered and (b) summarised. [137373]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 12 November 2003]: All disciplinary issues are a matter for the employing national health service trust, which must ensure that their procedures comply with employment law. The Department is currently working with the British Medical Association to introduce a new national framework for hospital doctors and dentists. Serious cases should be referred to the General Medical Council or the General Dental Council.

Distalgesic Tablets

Mr. Dhanda: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the decision was taken to place Distalgesic tablets on Schedule 10 to the NHS (General Medical Services) Regulations 1992; and on what advice the decision was taken. [137097]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Distalgesic tablets were placed on Schedule 10 of the NHS (General Medical Services) Regulations 1992, in April 1985. The listing was made on the recommendation of the then advisory committee on national health service drugs, an independent committee of pharmaceuticals and medical experts.

East Kent Hospitals

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the payment to overcome exceptional circumstances referred to in his July announcement on the future of East Kent Hospitals and in his Minister of State's letter to the hon. Member for Canterbury is a grant or a loan. [130350]

Ms Rosie Winterton [holding answer 16 September 2003]: Kent and Medway Strategic Health Authority has been told by the NHS Bank to assume the one-off payment of £17 million in respect of East Kent Hospitals is recoverable from future primary care trust allocations after the current planning round.

Elderly Medicine

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the likely demand for specialists in elderly medicine. [138155]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The NHS Plan provides for increases in national health service staffing, including 7,500 more consultants between 1999 and 2004. So far, an additional 155[1] specialists in geriatric medicine and 84[1] in old age psychiatry have been appointed, in addition to a range of other specialties who provide services to older people. The NHS has developed local delivery plans for 2003 to 2006, which are based on local assessment of need for staff. These suggest annual increases of between 3 per cent. and 4 per cent. between now and 2006 in geriatric medicine (+20 to 30 whole-time equivalent) and between 3 per cent. and 4 per cent. between now and 2006 in old age psychiatry (+10 to 20 whole-time equivalent).

Emergency Care Strategy Unit

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the (a) priorities and (b) work programme of the Emergency Care Strategy Unit. [138073]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The emergency care strategy team within the Department of Health is responsible for managing and developing government policy relating to emergency care. The scope of this work includes accident and emergency ambulance services and critical care, with priorities to reflect NHS Plan targets.

Further information can be found on the emergency care pages on the Department's website at www.doh.gov.uk/emergencycare.

Emergency Services

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many times in each of the last 12 months an ambulance has taken over (a) 15 minutes, (b) 30 minutes, (c) 60 minutes and (d) 90 minutes to respond to category B emergency calls in East Sussex; and if he will make a statement; [136044]

(2) what percentage of emergency calls from GPs surgeries were answered within 15 minutes in East Sussex in each of the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement; [136045]

(3) what percentage of emergency calls were answered within 19 minutes in East Sussex in each of the last 12 months, broken down by category; and if he will make a statement. [137191]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Department does not collect this information by general practitioner surgeries. Information is collected on National Health Service trust basis. A copy is available in the Library and at http://www.doh.gov.uk/public/sbQ313.pdf.

Eye Tests

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many pensioners in the Haltemprice and Howden constituency received free eye tests in the last two years for which figures are available. [135924]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The table shows the number of National Health Service sight tests paid for in East Riding and Hull Health Authority for 2001–02 and 2002–03. Figures for the number of sight tests by constituency or age are not collected centrally. The table shows the number of sight tests where "patient aged 60 and over" was given as the eligibility category and all sight tests.

Eligibility to NHS sight tests was extended to those aged 60 and over from 1 April 1999.

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people died during operations in the hospitals in the London borough of Havering in 2002. [137322]

Mr. Hutton: This information is not collected centrally.

Flu Vaccine

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the take-up rates for flu vaccine were at (a) 1 November and (b) 1 December 2002 for each health authority. [138158]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Influenza vaccine uptake rates in those aged 65 years and above for 1 November and 1 December 2002 by strategic health authority are shown in the following table.

Miss Melanie Johnson: Monitoring of influenza vaccinations given to those aged 65 and over started in 2000. The number of people receiving flu vaccine since 2000 are shown in the table.

Food Manufacturers

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent representations he has received from manufacturers of foods for particular nutritional uses. [136892]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Food Standards Agency officials have met recently with various stakeholders to discuss issues affecting foods for particular nutritional uses. Topics discussed include the draft European Regulation on health and nutrition claims, the proposed European Directive on 'sports foods' and gluten-free foods.

Manufacturers of foods for particular nutritional uses have concerns about the potential impact of the proposed regulation on health and nutrition claims on the labelling of these foods.

Food Supplements

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the Food Standards Agency will meet representatives of (a) the Health Food Manufacturers Association, (b) the Institute for Optimum Nutrition and (c) other stakeholder organisations to discuss ways of improving the evidence base for the assessment of nutrient safety. [136610]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Food Standards Agency has been in regular dialogue with stakeholders. This has included meeting manufacturers' associations and other stakeholders to advise on the requirements for submission of dossiers on nutrient sources to European Food Safety Authority, and advising, where requested, on the types of research needed to fill data gaps on the safety of individual vitamins and minerals.

Foundation Hospital Trusts

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will require chief executives of putative NHS foundation hospital trusts to publish details of their consultations with the public on the proposal for foundation hospitals together with an assessment of the results. [138521]

Mr. Hutton: Before authorising a national health service foundation trust, the Independent Regulator must be satisfied that consultation has taken place and has been satisfactory. Documentation submitted to the Independent Regulator by applicants must therefore show evidence of consultation with key stakeholders. This document will be public.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions he has had with putative NHS foundation trusts concerning the means whereby the token sum required for people to become members might be collected. [138557]

Mr. Hutton: The Health and Social Care (Community Health and Standards) Bill was amended in House of Lords Committee to remove the requirement on prospective members of national health service foundation trusts to commit to paying a sum of up to a pound.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether doctors who have been struck off the medical register are eligible for election to the board of governors of a foundation trust. [138558]

Mr. Hutton: Subject to Parliament, the legislation on national health service foundation trusts will allow a NHS foundation trust's constitution to make further provision as to the circumstances in which a person may not become or continue as a member of the Board of Governors. It will be up to each NHS foundation trust to decide whether to include in their constitution a provision that doctors who have been struck off the medical register are not eligible to sit on the Board of Governors.

If a NHS foundation trust's constitution did not include any such provision, then a doctor who had been struck off the medical register would be eligible to sit on the Board of Governors if elected by any of the public, patient or staff constituencies, provided that they were otherwise eligible to stand.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to his answer of 4 November 2003, Official Report, column 585W, on foundation hospitals, if he will place in the Library copies of the material produced by putative NHS foundation hospital trusts which seek public support for such status. [137591]

Mr. Hutton: Copies of the documents requested will be placed in the Library shortly.

Guidance Updates (NICE)

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the cost was in each of the last three years of sending guidance updates from the National Institute for Clinical Excellence to (a) all hon. Member and (b) Members of the National Assembly for Wales. [136601]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The average cost per mailing for both right hon. and hon. Members and Welsh Assembly Members is £500.

GP Waiting Times

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the average waiting time for an appointment with a general practitioner was in the London borough of Havering in 2002–03. [137325]

Mr. Hutton: Information on the time each patient waits to see a general practitioner is not collected. However, data on the availability of appointments show that in March 2003, 90 per cent. of the population of Havering Primary Care Trust were able to be offered an appointment with a general practitioner within two working days.

GPs

Mr. Flook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients were registered with GP practices in Taunton in each year since 1997. [137230]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Information on the number of patients registered with general practitioner practices in Taunton since 1997 is shown in the tables.

Group B Streptococcus

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what cost analysis he has carried out of introducing a pilot screening programme for pregnant women to test for Group B Streptococcus; and what he estimates the costs involved would be. [136418]

Dr. Ladyman: The UK National Screening Committee (NSC) has commissioned an assessment of the existing evidence on screening for Group B Streptococcus in pregnancy against criteria used to assess potential screening programmes to ensure they do more good than harm. This assessment will include consideration of the costs that would be involved in introducing a screening programme. The NSC is expected to consider policy options at its meeting in December 2003.

Health Care (York)

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the (a) average waiting time for an initial appointment to see a cancer specialist and (b) average time between initial referral and appropriate specialist treatment for cancer at York District Hospital was in each year since 1996–97. [135960]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information is not available in the format requested. The table shows the number of cancer patients treated within certain timeframes at York Hospitals National Health Service Trust.

Health Service Ombudsman

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many Health Service Ombudsman cases were considered in the last year for which figures are available; how many cases were (a) upheld and (b) rejected; what the average time taken to consider a case was; and what the average cost per case was. [137334]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Health Service Ombudsman publishes information about the handling of cases in her annual report, copies of which are available in the Library and on the Ombudsman's website at www.ombudsman.org.uk.

Health Services (Somerset)

Mr. Flook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) children and adolescents, (b) adults and (c) pensioners were treated by the Somerset Partnership Mental Health Trust in each year since 1997. [135422]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Information on the total number of patients admitted for treatment by Somerset National Health Service Trust since 1997 is available by age, and is shown in the table. Admissions are defined as the first period of in-patient care under one consultant within one healthcare provider. These figures do not represent the number of in-patients as a person may have more than one admission within the year.

Mr. Flook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to his answer of 5 November 2003, Official Report, column 689W, on Health Services (Somerset), what the reasons are for the increases in (a) places in private residential homes in 1998 and (b) places in independent nursing homes in 1998. [138828]

Dr. Ladyman: The years 1997–99 showed a steady increase in the numbers of places in private residential homes and places in independent nursing homes, in Somerset, as shown in the table. The reasons behind this trend have not been determined.

Hepatitis C

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on progress in working out the details in relation to his announcement on 29 August that he would establish a financial assistance scheme for people infected with hepatitis C as a result of being given blood products by the NHS. [137747]

Miss Melanie Johnson: We are making every effort to progress the hepatitis C financial assistance scheme as quickly as possible and expect to announce details of the scheme's eligibility criteria and payment structure shortly.

Herceptin

Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to ensure that there is equal access in different areas to Herceptin. [136283]

Miss Melanie Johnson: My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Health, has asked the National Cancer Director, Professor Mike Richards, to look at the National Health Service in every region and ensure the cancer drugs and treatments, including herceptin, which have been approved by the National Institute for Clinical Excellence, are available nationally.

Professor Richards will be working with cancer networks and the pharmaceutical industry over the next few months to assess the position and identify and address any underlying variations in prescription rates.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many people are waiting for hip replacements in each of the London boroughs; [137324]

(2) how many patients are waiting for orthopaedic surgery in the London borough of Havering; [137327]

(3) how many patients are waiting for cancer surgery in each of the London boroughs. [137329]

Mr. Hutton: The information on specific procedures is not identified in the headline waiting times collected by the Department, which are specialty based.

Information for individual trusts and specialties is available on the Department's website at www.doh.gov.uk/waitingtimes.

Hypertension

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much extra funding will be provided to practices to support standards in managing high blood pressure; and what the criteria will be for claiming it. [130111]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The new contract for general medical services (QMS), accepted by general practitioners on 20 June 2003, will significantly benefit patients by improving the quality of care, including the management of high blood pressure, and widening the range of services available at GP surgeries.

Two thirds of the additional investment linked to the GMS contract has been earmarked to reward practices for better services. This funding will be allocated through a new Quality and Outcomes Framework, which sets out a range of indicators relating to the detection, recording and management of patients with high blood pressure. Practices will gain a certain number of points according to their performance against these indicators. A typical practice with average list size achieving all the hypertension points might expect to earn £12,975.

Under the new arrangements for the national health service as outlined in "Shifting the Balance of Power", primary care trusts now allocate funding from their own devolved budgets to deliver national targets and milestones and to meet local priorities. The NHS Planning and Performance Framework target for coronary heart disease (CHD) registers requires that the majority of patients at high risk of CHD, particularly those with hypertension, diabetes and a body mass index greater than 30 are covered by systematic treatment regimes, including appropriate advice on diet, physical activity and smoking.

Infant Formula Milk

Mrs. Brooke: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what representations he has received on advertisements for infant formula milk (a) on television and (b) in parents' magazines; [135035]

(2) what representations he has received on stopping the promotion of breast milk substitutes for feeding to infants. [135042]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 29 October 2003]: I have received some letters and emails within the last year about these subjects in general. The Infant Formula and Follow-on Formula Regulations 1995 control the advertisement and promotion of infant formula milk and breast milk substitutes.

Insulin

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what estimate he has made of the number of patients who are suited to treatment with animal insulin rather than synthetic insulin; [137592]

(2) how many people with diabetes require (a) animal insulin and (b) synthetic insulin; [137597]

(3) what representations his Department has received from patients about the suitability of synthetic insulin. [137600]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Data on the number of people using these insulins are not collected. However, the table shows the number of prescription items that were dispensed in the community in England, and their cost, in the 12 months ended June 2003.

Decisions on the most suitable type of insulin should be made by people with diabetes in consultation with their healthcare providers. The Department has received no representations about the suitability of synthetic insulin.

Number of prescription items and net ingredient cost of Insulins that were dispensed in the community in England for the 12 months ending June 2003

	Number of prescription items (thousand)	Net ingredient cost (£000)
Highly purified animal insulin	128.1	4,217.2
Human sequence (GM Insulin)	3,522.0	150,528.8
All Insulins	3,650.0	154,746.0

Notes:

1. The data is from the Prescription Cost Analysis (PCA) system which covers all prescription items that are dispensed in the community in England. This does not include drugs dispensed in hospitals or private prescriptions.
2. Insulins are those defined in the British National Formulary (BNF) paragraph 6.1.1, "Insulins". Insulin drugs have been grouped into highly purified animal and human sequence (GM) insulin in line with the British National Formulary (BNF).
3. Doctors write prescriptions on a prescription form. Each single item written on the form is counted as a prescription item. The net ingredient cost refers to the cost (which the dispenser is reimbursed) of the drug before discounts and does not include any dispensing costs or fees.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what evidence he has received on adverse reactions to synthetic insulin among diabetics which were not experienced when animal insulin was used; and if he will make a statement; [137593]

(2) what plans he has to issue guidance to the medical profession about adverse reactions to synthetic insulin; [137595]

(3) what studies he has (a) commissioned and (b) received on the suitability of synthetic insulin for treatment of diabetes; [137598]

(4) what steps his Department takes to avail itself of research from a wide range of sources into the safety and suitability of synthetic insulin. [137599]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Committee on Safety of Medicines (CSM) and its Sub-Committee on Pharmacovigilance (SCOP) have kept the safety of synthetic (human) insulins under close review and have considered the available data on a number of occasions. Most recently in 2002, the SCOP considered the findings of an independent review of controlled clinical trial data by the Cochrane Collaboration. The conclusions of the Cochrane review were that there is no difference in the incidence of adverse events between patients on synthetic insulin compared with patients on animal insulins. The SCOP confirmed its previous advice that there is no clear evidence of safety problem specific to human insulin. However, the issue will be reviewed again should further information become available.

The Medicines and Healthcare products Regulatory Agency (MHRA) receives reports of suspected adverse drug reactions (ADRs) via the Yellow Card scheme. The most commonly reported suspected ADRs with both synthetic (human) and animal insulins are disorders of metabolism and nutrition such as hypoglycaemia and hypoglycaemia unawareness, followed by skin and subcutaneous tissue disorder such as injection site reaction. However the reporting of a reaction does not necessarily mean that the drug caused the problem.

A higher number of suspected ADR reports have been received in association with synthetic insulin through the Yellow Card Scheme, however this may reflect the fact that 80 per cent. of patients with Type 1 Insulin Dependent Diabetes Mellitus are estimated to be receiving synthetic insulin in the United Kingdom.

Full guidance on prescribing and use of synthetic insulins, including possible side effects, is provided in the product information for prescribes and patients. This includes warnings about the risk of hypoglycaemia unawareness particularly upon transfer from animal insulins to synthetic insulins. Key prescribing information is also included in the British National Formulary, which is sent by the Department to doctors and pharmacists.

Both human and animal derived insulins are currently available and the MHRA is not aware of any specific plans for the discontinuation of production of animal derived insulins. However, decisions as to the most suitable type of insulin for particular patients are clinical matters and must be made by individual doctors.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will meet representatives of the Insulin Dependent Diabetes Trust to discuss the continued (a) choice between and (b) availability of (i) synthetic and (ii) animal insulin. [137594]

Ms Rosie Winterton: I am not aware of any problems with either the choice between or availability of the various types of insulin. I should, however, be interested to have details of the Insulin Dependent Diabetes Trust's concerns and would be happy for them to write to me in the first instance.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he will take to ensure competition in (a) the manufacture of insulin and (b) the manufacture of different types of insulin for treatment of diabetes; and if he will make a statement. [137596]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Department, working closely with other bodies such as the NHS Purchasing and Supply Agency and pharmaceutical companies, has arrangements in place to ensure security of supply of medicines.

In addition the Pharmaceutical Price Regulation Scheme aims to: secure the provision of safe and effective medicines for the NHS at reasonable prices;

promote a strong and profitable pharmaceutical industry capable of such sustained research and development expenditure as should lead to the future availability of new and improved medicines; encourage the efficient and competitive development and supply of medicines to pharmaceutical markets in this and other countries.

Finally, the patent system provides considerable incentives for companies to compete in the development of new and innovative medicines.

Learning Disabilities

Mr. Paul Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much funding has been allocated to the provision of services for people with learning disabilities since the publication of the White Paper "Valuing People"; how this funding has been spent; and what funding remains unallocated. [138187]

Dr. Ladyman: Over £3 billion a year is spent on health and social care provision for people with learning disabilities. The White Paper, "Valuing People: A New Strategy for Learning Disability for the 21st Century" (Cm 5086), published in March 2001, which set out our proposals for improving services for people with learning disabilities, their families and carers, announced two new funds to support its proposals: the implementation support fund (ISF) from April 2001 and the learning disability development fund (LDDF) from April 2002. Funding has been allocated to support priorities set out in "Valuing People".

Money from the £2.3 million ISF was fully allocated in both 2001–02 and 2002–03. We expect it to be fully allocated in 2003–04. Funding has been used to support a range of work, including:

The development and support of advocacy services

The setting up and support of the national forum of people with learning disabilities and its network of regional forums

The preparation, publication, and dissemination of good practice guidance on a range of subjects

The setting up and support of the Learning Disability Telephone Information and Helpline (funded jointly with MENCAP)

Extension of the learning disability awards framework.

The LDDF was introduced in April 2002. £2 million of the £22.6 million revenue element available in 2002–03 was used to support the "Valuing People" support team and its related activities. The remainder was distributed to health authorities on a pro-rata basis to be used as agreed through their partnership board, with their partner local authorities to support the following priorities for service change:

Modernising day centres

Completing the reprovision of the remaining long-stay hospitals to enable people to move to more appropriate accommodation

Developing supported living approaches for people with learning disabilities living with older carers

Promoting the further development of advocacy

Supporting the wider introduction of person centred planning

Enhancing leadership in learning disability services.

In 2003–04, £2 million was again allocated for the "Valuing People" support team, with £21 million being distributed to primary care trusts to be used on the above priorities for service change.

The capital element of the LDDF comprises £20 million a year to be used on the following priorities:

Enabling local providers to develop specialist services for people with severe challenging behaviour

Developing integrated health and social services facilities for children and people with severe disabilities and complex needs

Developing supported living approaches for people with learning disabilities living with older carers

Implementing the results of person centred planning for people currently living in national health service campuses.

In 2002–03, bids were invited from learning disability partnership boards and £16 million of the available £20 million was allocated. In 2003–04, the £20 million capital was allocated direct to strategic health authorities as part of their strategic capital allocations.

London NHS Trusts

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the total aggregate cumulative deficit of London NHS trusts was at the end of the most recent financial year for which records are available. [133743]

Mr. Hutton: The combined balance sheets of all London national health service trusts at the end of 2002–03 show a net cumulative deficit on the income and expenditure reserve account of £47.7 million. This figure does not necessarily represent liabilities which will need to be settled nor is it an indication of poor financial performance. Changes in accounting policy and the periodic re-valuation of assets over recent years have distorted the apparent financial position of NHS trusts.

The latest annual accounts for 2002–03 show London NHS trusts made an overall surplus of £4.3 million. All have balanced financial plans for 2003–04.

Market Research

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list each item of market and opinion research commissioned since May 1997 by (a) his Department and (b) agencies and non-departmental public bodies for which his Department is responsible; what the purpose of each item was; and whether the results were published. [137008]

Ms Rosie Winterton: A list of research projects carried out by the Department since 1 May 1997 was placed in the Library in July 1999. The list may not include all research projects, as some information was not centrally available. The list has been updated year on year, with the most recent list, for 2002–03, being placed in the Library in July 2003.

We are committed to consulting and involving the public to help inform both policy formulation and the delivery of better quality and more responsive public services.

Market or opinion research is commissioned only when it is justified by the needs of the policy programme and is the most economical, efficient and effective way to achieve the purpose.

Medicine Reviews

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list, by primary care trust, the (a) numbers and (b) percentages of patients over 75 who have had their medicines reviewed at least annually in the last three years. [137929]

Dr. Ladyman: This information is not collected centrally.

Mental Health

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he proposes to publish the summary of responses to the consultation on the Draft Mental Health Bill. [139096]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Government's response to the consultation will be published prior to introduction of the Bill. It will be available in hard copy and on the Department of Health website.

At that time, copies of responses will be placed in the Library, except in cases where respondents have asked for confidentiality.

Mersey Regional Ambulance Service

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for what reason no Warrington-based ambulances were available in Warrington during the weekend of 1 and 2 November 2003; and if he will take steps to ensure that Mersey Regional Ambulance Service do not allow this situation to occur again. [136788]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The shortfall in the number of Warrington-based ambulances in Warrington during 1 and 2 November 2003 was due to the diversion of blue light admissions from Warrington Hospital accident and emergency department. Ambulances were diverted to other hospitals in the area, which included Manchester and Stoke. This had a direct impact on the length of time taken for ambulances to return to the Warrington area.

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps the Mersey Regional Ambulance Service has taken to develop an effective internal and external communications strategy as recommended by the Commission for Health Improvement; and if he will place a copy of the strategy in the Library. [138444]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 13 November 2003]: In July 2002, the Mersey Regional Ambulance Service appointed a communications manager with considerable senior level experience. A review of both internal and external communications has taken place along with a review of the trusts ability to provide effective communications. The trust is currently drawing up its communications strategy. A copy will be placed in the Library when it is completed.

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps the Mersey Regional Ambulance Service has taken to arrange with NHS acute trusts locations for ambulance liaison assistants which maintain patient confidentiality. [138445]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 13 November 2003]: Cheshire and Merseyside Strategic Health Authority reports that several initiatives have been taken forward to address this issue. In particular:

> A major redesign of Aintree Hospital included refurbishment work within the ambulance liaison assistants (ALA) area. This is now more accessible for patients and more suited to their needs. This has also involved a redesign of the office furniture and now all telephone conversations are conducted behind a higher level counter;
> During the last 12 months a refurbishment project has been carried out by the Countess of Chester Hospital and this included work in the ALA lounge. Specifically, this involved relocating the patient transport service lounge to make it more accessible and more open plan to create a better environment. Telephone conversations are now held in a much more secure environment behind high level counters;
> Work is also currently ongoing with the Royal Liverpool Hospital. As part of its major entrance redesign, this has included the creation of a purpose built patient discharge and ambulance liaison lounge. This is a confidential environment.

Furthermore, recognising the need to work more closely with its hospital partners, the Mersey Regional Ambulance Service National Health Service Trust has recently completed a management restructure, which empowers managers to work on a more integrated basis within the health economy to ensure such projects are taken forward.

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what procedures have been put in place by Mersey Regional Ambulance Service to ensure that all crews receive information and training on new vehicles prior to their introduction. [138446]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 13 November 2003]: A number of procedures ensure that all staff receive training and information on new vehicles prior to their introduction. These are consistent with the Mersey Regional Ambulance Service national health service trust's health and safety policy and supported by the head of training and development.

The trust also operates a vehicle working group, which is made up of managers, staff and trade union representatives. This group agrees the format of all new vehicles and equipment as well as the formal training plan to ensure staff receive appropriate training prior to the vehicles being put into service.

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will place a copy of Mersey Regional Ambulance Service's child protection policy in the Library. [138447]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 13 November 2003]: Following the Commission for Health Improvement (CHI) action plan, the Mersey Regional Ambulance Service national health service trust agreed to review its current child protection arrangements.

A draft policy is awaiting approval by the trust board. The trust is on target to achieve the timescales of the CHI recommendations. A copy will be placed in the Library in due course.

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made by Mersey Regional Ambulance Service in developing a plan for the training of staff in clinical audit skills; and if he will place a copy of the plan in the Library. [138448]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 13 November 2003]: Cheshire and Merseyside Strategic health authority reports that the Mersey Regional Ambulance Service is developing a trust-wide training programme for frontline staff in clinical audit skills and will incorporate this into the training and education strategy by December 2003.

A copy of the programme will be placed in the Library when it is completed.

Midwives

Mr. Baron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what the average vacancy rate is for midwives in the NHS, broken down by region; what proportion of midwife vacancies have remained vacant for more than three months in (a) England and (b) each region in the last year for which figures are available; which 10 regions of England have the highest vacancy rates; and what these rates are; [139021]

(2) what assessment he has made of the effect of the vacancy rate for midwives on decisions by midwives to leave the profession. [139240]

Mr. Hutton: Information on the number of vacancies for midwives lasting three months or more is collected in the national health service vacancy survey, information on the number of vacancies lasting less than three months is not collected centrally. The available information is shown in the table by Government regional office area and strategic health authority.

No assessment has been made on the effect of vacancy rates for midwives on decisions by midwives to leave the profession. The vacancy rate for midwives is comparable with that for the overall nursing work force. Since 1997, the number of midwives employed in the NHS has increased by 860 and the Government will continue to increase the NHS midwifery work force through a range of recruitment and retention initiatives.

1. Vacancy and staff in post numbers are rounded to the nearest whole number
2. Calculating the vacancy rates using the above data may not equal the actual vacancy rates
3. Due to rounding, totals may not equal the sum of component parts
4. Strategic HA figures are based on Trusts, and do not necessarily reflect the geographical provision of healthcare

Mixed Wards

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many wards in NHS hospitals have regularly had patients of both sexes staying at the same time in the last 12 months; [138156]

(2) on how many occasions over the last 12 months hospitals have admitted a patient into a ward reserved for patients of the opposite sex, broken down by NHS hospital trust. [138159]

Mr. Hutton: The Department does not collect information at the level of the individual ward. National health service trusts are required only to report on total patient throughput per annum.

MRI Scans

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the existing capacity for MRI scanning for NHS patients in the (a) public and (b) private sectors; and if he will make a statement. [137083]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Past under-funding of the national health service led to the inadequate provision of essential diagnostic equipment, unevenly distributed across the country. The Government are committed to putting right this under-investment and is providing unprecedented levels of central funding to expand capacity and replace ageing equipment.

There are currently 207 magnetic resonance imaging (MRI) scanners installed in the NHS in England, compared with 110 machines in 1997, representing an 88 per cent. increase in total numbers. By December 2004, this will increase further to approximately 276 MRI scanners, a 150 per cent. increase on 1997.

There are approximately 60 MRI scanners in private hospitals in England. The private sector is only able to provide a small amount of additional capacity for the NHS. The utilisation of any radiology equipment is dependent on the availability of skilled staff. Both the NHS and private sector use staff from the same work force pool.

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the average waiting time for MRI scans in England was in each of the last 10 years, broken down by region. [137084]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Data on waiting times for diagnostic tests are not collected centrally.

National Service Framework for Children

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures aimed at children with learning disabilities will be included in the national service framework for children. [138494]

Dr. Ladyman: A key part of the national service framework for children, young people and maternity services will focus on the needs of disabled children, including those with learning disabilities. This will involve looking at how services can respond to their needs more flexibly and improving the transition to adulthood.

NHS Direct

Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the maximum period is which he requires should elapse before NICE guidance is reflected in (a) the advice given by NHS Direct and (b) the content of NHS Direct Online. [133369]

Ms Rosie Winterton: When content of National Institute for Clinical Excellence (NICE) guidance requires amendment to National Health Service Clinical Assessment System (CAS) clinical content, the change would normally be made in the next clinical release. Main releases are currently made twice yearly. When the need for change is identified as more urgent than the timetable for the next main release, guidance regarding the change is issued first to all staff by a message system which is part of NHS CAS and this is followed by an interim version release of the clinical content between the main releases. Depending on the timing of release of NICE guidance in relation to the next planned main clinical release, it could otherwise be up to six months before the clinical content was revised. Advice on the urgency of implementing changes is given by the NHS Direct national medical adviser in consultation with the NHS Direct CAS clinical panel. NHS Direct is working with the system supplier to be able to amend clinical content more frequently.

If someone required information only on a treatment, the situation is as follows. The NICE website is on the recommended list for all NHS Direct call centres. Also, a monthly current awareness bulletin is produced and posted on 'indirect' (NHS Direct's Intranet site) as well as being e-mailed to site information staff (they are encouraged to publicise at sites). This would feature any new NICE guidelines.

If NICE guidance requires a change to the content of NHS Direct Online, it would usually be updated in their content within 48 hours, although this process can be shortened to within the hour for urgent cases.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of calls to NHS Direct were answered within 30 seconds in the most recent 12 month period, broken down by month, for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [136874]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The percentage of calls to NHS Direct that were answered within 30 seconds for the most recent 12 month period, broken down by month are shown in the table. The overall percentage for the most recent 12 month period is 63 per cent.

[1] Percentage of calls answered in 30 seconds

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many members of staff are employed by NHS Direct; and if he will make a statement. [136876]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Currently, all NHS Direct members of staff are employed by their host organisation trust. NHS Direct employs approximately 3,000 (whole time equivalent) members of staff nationally. Of these, around 1,063 are nurses and 543 call handlers. The remaining staff consists of health information advisors, managers, trainers, nurse supervisors and administration staff. Each of the 22 sites for clinical governance purposes employs a medical director (doctor).

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent assessment he has made of the quality of clinical advice provided by NHS Direct to patients. [138074]

Ms Rosie Winterton: NHS Direct has a well established record for offering good clinical advice. This was confirmed in the sector report published by the Commission for Health Improvement on 10 November, following its review of 19 out of the 23 NHS Direct sites in England.

NHS Staff

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS employees belong to a trade union; and which ones. [134811]

Mr. Hutton: The Department does not hold centrally the number of national health service employees who belong to a trade union.

The Office for National Statistics produces an estimate for the United Kingdom of the proportion of public sector employees with trade union membership, by industry classification, using data from the Labour Force Survey. The figure for health for autumn 2002 is 62 per cent.

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many staff are employed by the NHS in (a) the London borough of Havering and (b) each NHS trust in London. [137330]

Mr. Hutton: Information is not collected by London borough. The information shown in the table includes national health service organisations within the London borough of Havering.

Nurses

Mr. Flook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many nurses (a) were in training and (b) completed training at Taunton and Somerset NHS Hospital Trust in each year since 1997. [137231]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Information on the number of nurses in training or completing training at Taunton and Somerset Hospitals National Health Service Trust is not available centrally. The number of training commissions in the Somerset, Devon and Cornwall area in 2002–03 was 547, an increase of 41 per cent. since 1998–99.

The Nursing and Midwifery Council (NMC) publishes an annual statistical report, which includes information about the number of nurses registering each year, a requirement for employment in the NHS. This data can be found on the NMC website at www.nmc-uk.org.uk.

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many nurses have left the register in each of the last five years. [138039]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 11 November 2003]: The Nursing and Midwifery Council (NMC) publishes an annual statistical report, which includes information about the number of nurses and midwives leaving the register. These data can be found on the NMC's website at: www.nmc-uk.org.uk

Older People

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which hospitals have introduced self-administration schemes for medicines for older people. [137931]

Dr. Ladyman: This information is not collected centrally.

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what analysis he has made of the (a) levels and (b) patterns of services for older people in order to facilitate comparisons across health authorities. [137937]

Dr. Ladyman: In July 2002, the Department published its national health service performance ratings and indicators for 2001–02. This compared performance of NHS trusts, also grouped by strategic health authority and, for the first time, primary care organisations.

The indicator set included several performance indicators relating to services for older people including services following a fall or a stroke.

The indicators and ratings can be found at www.doh.gov.uk/performanceratings/2002.

The Department also collects, on a regular basis, performance information relating to targets, including those relating to older people's services, in "Improvement, Expansion and Reform," the 2003–06 priorities and planning document.

Overseas Treatment Scheme

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what basis patients are selected for the NHS overseas treatment scheme; and who is involved in the making of that decision. [136746]

Mr. Hutton: Local national health service trusts determine the process for selecting patients for treatment abroad. However, two key determinants are always addressed:

The patient is clinically fit to travel

The patient is clinically fit to be operated on

In general, in selecting patients for a NHS overseas treatment scheme, acute trusts will review their waiting lists and identify suitable patients who are then contacted to offer patients the choice of travelling for treatment either overseas or in the private sector. Where patients express an interest in treatment abroad, either the local trust or the overseas commissioner (in accordance with local agreement) seeks approval from the patient's general practitioner that they are fit to travel. Before travelling overseas, all patients attend an overseas assessment clinic, run by the overseas clinicians. This allows the overseas clinicians to carry out a pre-operative assessment to determine whether the patient is suitable for surgery and to travel to the overseas hospital.

Performance Targets

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the total cost was of (a) setting, (b) monitoring and (c) measuring the performance targets for his Department in 2002–03; and how many and what grades of civil servants monitor these targets. [137946]

Mr. Hutton: Performance targets for the Department were agreed as part of Spending Review 2002. The monitoring and measurement of Public Service Agreement (PSA) targets forms part of departmental performance management. Performance management is an integral part of the day to day running of the Department and, as such, it is not possible to separate the specific costs out. The monitoring of progress towards, and performance against, the Department's PSA targets is undertaken by a wide variety of staff at all levels of the organisation.

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the performance targets that (a) his Department and (b) its agencies and non-departmental public bodies are required to meet; and if he will specify for each target (i) who sets it and (ii) who monitors achievement against it. [137962]

Ms Rosie Winterton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Bexhill and Battle (Gregory Barker) on 23 June 2003, Official Report, column 581W.

The Department of Health Report 2003 provides information on its agencies and non-departmental public bodies. Performance against targets is monitored by the Department, including through meetings between Secretary of State and Ministers and the Chief Executive of the body.

Personal Alarms

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to supply personal alarms to NHS staff. [137466]

Mr. Hutton: The decision to supply personal alarms to national health service staff is the responsibility of each individual NHS employing body.

The Counter Fraud and Security Management Service (CFSMS) was launched in April 2003, with a remit encompassing policy and operational responsibility for the management of security in the NHS. The CFSMS will shortly be publishing a strategy on the management of security in the NHS. From June 2004, a NHS security management manual will be made available to trained and accredited security management specialists in each NHS health body, which will contain advice on the issue of personal alarms to NHS staff and professionals.

Personal Care

Mr. Patrick Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evaluation he has made of the impact of free personal care in Scotland. [138929]

Dr. Ladyman: It is a matter for the Scottish Executive to evaluate the implementation of free personal care in Scotland.

Pharmaceutical Regulations

Brian Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to carry out a regulatory impact assessment on the proposals to reform and modernise the NHS (Pharmaceutical Services) Regulations 1992. [137302]

Ms Rosie Winterton: I refer the hon. Member to the draft regulatory impact assessment and competition assessment at Annex C of our consultation document, "Proposals to reform and modernise the NHS (Pharmaceutical Services) Regulations 1992" published on 29 August 2003. This is available on the Department's website at www.doh.gov.uk/pharmacy regulationconsultation.

Comments on the consultation document and draft assessments can be sent, by 21 November 2003, to Peter Dunlevy, Pharmacy and Prescriptions Branch, Department of Health, Room 155, Richmond House, 79 Whitehall, London SW1A 2NS or e-mailed to peter.dunlevy@doh.gsi.gov.uk. We will publish a final full regulatory impact assessment and competition assessment in due course having analysed all comments received. These assessments will be placed in the Library.

Plastic Bottles

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what assessment he has made of the safety of plastic bottles for consumption of fluids for (a) babies and (b) the general public; [136077]

(2) what research he has collated on risks to health of using plastic bottles for feeding babies; and what assessment he has made of the practice in other EU countries. [137218]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The composition of plastic bottles used for drinks consumed by babies and the general public is strictly controlled to ensure the safety of foodstuffs contained in them. These controls are harmonised throughout the European Union and they set limits on the migration of substances into foodstuffs to prevent harmful quantities being present.

The materials used to make plastic bottles for feeding babies are subject to strict controls that have been harmonised throughout the European Union. These controls are based on a detailed assessment of safety data by European scientific experts.

Podiatry

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the average time has been that patients have had to wait for podiatry appointments in each primary care trust, in each year since 2001. [138160]

Mr. Hutton: This information is not collected centrally.

Premature Babies

John Mann: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will ensure that premature babies at Guys and St. Thomas' Hospital receiving preventative treatment for respiratory syncytial virus are not discharged without assurance that they will be able to return to the hospital as required to complete their course of treatment; [136926]

(2) if he will ensure that premature babies at Guys and St. Thomas' Hospital at high risk of contracting respiratory syncytial virus and chronic lung disease do not have their treatment curtailed due to cost cutting requirements; [136927]

(3) how many paediatric wards were closed to new admissions owing to respiratory syncytial virus infection in the last year for which records are available. [136928]

Mr. Hutton: It is the current view of the Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation that children less than two years of age with severe chronic lung disease and who are on home oxygen during the respiratory syncytial virus (RSV) season should receive prophylactic treatment during the respiratory syncytial virus season. I am assured by Guy's and St. Thomas' Hospital National Health Service Trust that it will continue to provide full courses of the prophylactic treatment for these children.

Information on the number of wards closed to new admissions owing to RSV is not collected centrally.

Proton Therapy

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on proton therapy in the context of the NHS cancer plan. [137066]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The NHS Cancer Plan set out our commitment to maintain a modern stock of equipment in the national health service which offers the latest imaging and treatment techniques. We are aware of the benefits proton therapy can offer to the small number of patients with ocular cancer and will keep under review its potential for the treatment of other cancers.

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has for further investment in proton therapy equipment at the Clatterbridge Centre for Oncology. [137363]

Miss Melanie Johnson: There are currently no plans for further investment in proton therapy equipment at Clatterbridge Centre for Oncology.

Public Interest Disclosure Act

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what his Department's obligations under the Public Interest Disclosure Act 1998 are. [138560]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Department recognises that it has an obligation under the Public Interest Disclosure Act 1998 to ensure that all employees are able to raise matters of concern about malpractice or illegal acts (whether it has been committed or is likely to be committed), such as,

unlawful conduct;

a failure to comply with any legal obligation;

a miscarriage of justice;

financial malpractice;

danger to the health and safety of any individual at work;

damage to the environment; and concealing of information in relation to any of the above.

The Department's employees have been provided with guidance on how to raise their concerns. While employees are encouraged to raise their concerns with their line manager, they can raise their concerns wherever or at whatever level they feel appropriate within the Department. Employees can also raise their concerns to an appropriate authority outside of the Department.

The Department's guidance clearly states that employees who raise concerns will be protected from discrimination, bullying, harassment or victimisation.

Respiratory Physiotherapy

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which primary care trusts offer (a) pulmonary rehabilitation and (b) domiciliary respiratory physiotherapy; and how many patients are undergoing such treatment in each. [138040]

Dr. Ladyman [holding answer 11 November 2003]: This information is not held centrally. However, a survey carried out earlier this year by the British Lung Foundation and British Thoracic Society found that 160 out of 266 hospitals across the country provide some form of pulmonary rehabilitation to lung patients.

The National Institute of Clinical Excellence is currently developing a guideline on the management of chronic obstructive pulmonary disease in primary and secondary care. It is expected that the guideline will be published in February 2004.

Respite Care

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what additional resources the Government made available for respite care since 1997 in (a) the UK, (b) the north west region and (c) St. Helens. [137979]

Dr. Ladyman: The Carers Grant was introduced in 1999 to support local councils in arranging short breaks services for carers. It has provided an extra £325 million over five years to increase the number of breaks for carers.

The Carers Grant allocations since 1999 are shown in the table.

	England (£ million)	North west region (£)	St. Helens (£)
1999–2000	20	2,719,403	71,679
2000–01	50	6,855,503	177,417
2001–02	70	9,469,014	245,713
2002–03	85	11,451,858	297,557
2003–04	100	14,087,110	393,460

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the Government's policy for the provision of respite care for carers is. [137980]

Dr. Ladyman: Carers are entitled to an assessment to determine their needs as carers and eligibility for support including short-term breaks. The Carers Grant, worth £100 million this year, provides money for local councils to provide short breaks and other services for carers to enable them to take a break. The introduction of the short-term break voucher scheme earlier this year provides more choice and flexibility for service users and their carers.

Smear Tests

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of smear tests in England and Wales resulted in women being recalled as a result of inadequate smears in the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [136875]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The number of inadequate smears that resulted in women being recalled are shown in the table.

Screening year	Number of inadequate smears
1998–99	364,116
1999–2000	379,501
2000–01	359,441
2001–02	367,329
2002–03	357,707

On 22 October, the National Institute of Clinical Excellence recommended that liquid based cytology (LBC) should be introduced across the cervical screening programme in England. LBC is a new method of preparing cervical samples for examination and reduces the likelihood of an inadequate test from one in 10 to one in 100. The Government welcomed the recommendations, which mean that approximately 300,000 women a year will not need to be recalled.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of UK women participated in the Pap Screening Programme, broken down by those (a) under 30, (b) 30 to 49, (c) 50 to 59 and (d) 60 to 64 in the last 12 months for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [136878]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The percentage coverage of the national health service cervical screening programme, broken into age groups and taken from the cervical screening programme statistical bulletin, is shown in the table.

Age range	Percentage coverage
20 to 29	63
30 to 49	82.8
50 to 59	82.3
60 to 64	77.3

Coverage is the proportion of women resident who have had a test with a result at least once in the previous five years.

Smog

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the (a) mortality and (b) morbidity caused by smog in London in the last five years. [136539]

Miss Melanie Johnson: No estimates of the impact of air pollution on mortality or morbidity in London have been made.

Smoking

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of 16 to 18-year-olds are addicted to cigarettes in the UK. [136812]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 10 November 2003]: The available data are shown in the table.

Cigarette smoking status among adults aged 16 to 18 by gender, Great Britain, 2001

Percentages

Status	Men	Women	Total
Current smokers
Less than 10 per day	9	10	10
10 to 19 per day	10	16	13
20 or more per day	2	4	3
Total current smokers	21	30	26
Ex-regular smokers	4	6	5
Never or only occasionally smoked cigarettes	74	64	69

Social Care Bodies

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many administrative staff have been employed by social care bodies (a) directly and (b) indirectly in each of the last six years. [138486]

Dr. Ladyman: Figures for the last six years for administrative staff employed by local authorities in central and/or strategic positions in social services are shown in the table.

	Number of administrative staff
1997	16,400
1998	17,300
1999	18,500
2000	19,400
2001	18,800
2002	18,000

These are whole-time equivalents and the figures are as at 30 September in each year. They represent a wide range of staff, including senior directing staff, planning staff, training managers and officers, registration and inspection officers and senior support staff.

The source of these figures is form SSDS001. This is the annual return of staffing figures provided by local authorities to the Department. The Department does not hold figures on staff employed indirectly by authorities, or employed by the independent sector.

Stroke Units

Mr. Baron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) pursuant to his answer of 27 October 2003, Official Report, column 99W, on stroke, how the stroke units that do not have rehabilitation stroke beds seek to rehabilitate their patients; [138930]

(2) pursuant to his answers of 27 October 2003, Official Report, column 99W and 23 October 2003, Official Report, column 736W, on strokes, whether he intends that specialist stroke units should have separate acute care and rehabilitation units; and whether a combined unit is sufficient to meet the stroke service target. [139011]

Dr. Ladyman: The stroke service model in the national service framework for older people states that an integrated stroke service will involve specialist stroke services providing acute care and rehabilitation. Decisions on how that rehabilitation will be provided are best taken at a local level. Different models of care may emerge, but we anticipate that most trusts will establish a rehabilitation stroke unit.

The target of all general hospitals that care for people with stroke to have a specialised stroke service by April 2004, as described in the stroke service model, is well on its way to being met. 94 per cent. of the hospitals that provide stroke care now have a specialised stroke service.

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which general hospitals which care for people who have had strokes have not developed plans to introduce a specialised stroke service from 2004. [137932]

Dr. Ladyman: 171 out of 181 hospitals which provide stroke services are planning to meet the target on time. Officials are in discussions with those who may not meet the target and hope to meet them in the near future to identify what central support we can provide to help them achieve the target.

Supported Accommodation

Mr. Keith Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what powers a local authority has to place an adult whose family live in that local authority in supported accommodation in another local authority area; and which local authority has the financial responsibility for that adult. [138965]

Dr. Ladyman: When a council makes arrangements for an adult to enter residential accommodation under section 21 of the National Assistance Act 1948, the council should make the placement in the most appropriate accommodation to meet the individual's assessed need subject to the National Assistance Act 1948 (Choice of Accommodation) Directions 1992. In doing so the placing council may place the individual in residential accommodation its own area or in the area of another council in England. Generally, no matter where the individual is placed, the placing council retains care management and financial responsibility for the individual for as long as he remains in residential accommodation under section 21.

Waiting List Deaths

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people died while on a waiting list for an operation in each national health service hospital in (a) London and (b) the London borough of Havering in (i) 1995, (ii) 1997, (iii) 1999, (iv) 2001 and (v) 2002. [137323]

Mr. Hutton: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients were waiting for surgery in the London borough of Havering on 31 December (a) 2002, (b) 2001, (c) 2000, (d) 1999, (e) 1998 and (f) 1997. [137328]

Mr. Hutton: This information is not held centrally.

Information for individual trusts and specialties is available on the Department's website at http://www.doh.gov.uk/waitingtimes

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for health how many people are waiting for an operation in each of the London boroughs. [137332]

Mr. Hutton: This information is not collected centrally.

Information for individual trusts and specialties is available on the Department's website at www.doh.gov.uk/waitingtimes.

Work-related Stress

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of work related stress have been reported in his Department in each of the last three years; how much compensation has been paid to employees; how many work days have been lost due to work related stress, and at what cost, what procedures have been put in place to reduce work related stress, and at what cost; and if he will make a statement. [136858]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Department holds no data on reported cases of work related stress, so we cannot identify costs. Central records on compensation payments do not record work-related stress separately.

The Department has a number of procedures in place to help managers and staff to be aware of and to reduce work-related stress.

The Department is committed to its legal obligation to provide a safe working environment for employees and its commitment to meeting targets for reducing the number of working days lost generally due to work related injuries and illness arising from the Government's Revitalising Health and Safety initiative.

Working Time Directive

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the impact of the Working Time Directive on the NHS; and if he will make a statement. [136134]

Mr. Hutton: The Working Time Directive (WTD) came into force for all staff in the national health service, with the exception of junior doctors in training, in 1998 and has already been effectively implemented. From August 2004, doctors in training will be subject to a limit of 58 hours a week under the WTD. A substantial programme of work is currently under way to support implementation within the NHS in the context of providing safe and effective services. Trusts have been asked to provide action plans for compliance with the Directive in respect of doctors in training by 31 December, to be agreed with their strategic health authorities.

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the impact of the implementation of the European Working Time Directive on (a) hospital waiting times and (b) junior doctor training. [137069]

Mr. Hutton: Strategic health authorities (SHAs) are assessing the readiness of trusts to comply with the Working Time Directive (WTD) for doctors in training and continuing to deliver service priorities, including waiting times. Trusts have been asked to provide action plans for compliance with the WTD in respect of doctors in training by 31 December, to be agreed with their SHAs. A substantial programme of work is underway to support implementation and WTD pilots are beginning to demonstrate that the right mix of solutions can be found locally to deliver improved services for patients, fairer working hours and extended opportunities across the work force.

The pilots are also implementing medical training posts, which are designed to offer doctors suitable programmes of training and achieve WTD compliance. Also, the modernising medical careers programme has been informed by the requirements of the WTD. These initiatives, together with discussions taking place with the Medical Royal Colleges, are designed to ensure that doctors continue to receive the high quality training that they and their patients deserve.

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions he has had on the implementation of the European Working Time Directive in the health sector in other EU countries. [137070]

Mr. Hutton: Ministers and officials at the Department held discussions with counterparts in other member states throughout the previous negotiation and subsequent implementation of the European Working Time Directive (WTD).

Further to the recent announcement of a Commission Review of the WTD, which they were required to undertake, we continue to actively engage with fellow member states to ensure that the interests of health workers and the national health service are protected. We expect the Commission to publish their proposals in late November and we continue to work to try and influence the content of this communication.

ENVIRONMENT, FOOD AND RURAL AFFAIRS

Abattoirs

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) if she will make a statement on the Government's policy towards small abattoirs; [137247]

(2) how many slaughterhouse premises have closed in the last 12 months; and what effect this has had on increasing journey times of livestock to slaughter within the United Kingdom. [137269]

Mr. Bradshaw: Slaughtering of livestock for human consumption is a commercial activity provided in response to the market, and livestock producers are free to choose which abattoirs to use. According to information provided by The Food Standards Agency, 25 red meat abattoirs had their licences terminated in the United Kingdom over the last 12 months.

The Government support the robust enforcement of rules protecting animal welfare during transport. However, they do not attempt to manage the sector in a dirigiste way, including the numbers and locations of abattoirs.

As part of the wider Strategy for Sustainable Farming and Food, we are working with industry to help secure a network of abattoirs and meat cutting plants including small enterprises. As part of our work, we are finalising data on the structure of the sector and this should help in the further development of strategic policies. We are already encouraging the use of investment grants within the England Rural Development Programme to help improve industry structure, processing and marketing. In addition, we are committing significant resources to the Red Meat Industry Forum and are actively participating in its work to improve the competitiveness of the red meat supply chain.

Agricultural Subsidies

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many (a) UK and (b) other EU countries she estimates would be affected if (i) 300,000 euro, (ii) 250,000 euro and (iii) 200,000 euro limits were placed upon public support for agricultural holdings. [135771]

Mr. Bradshaw: England would be affected by each of these limits. Questions regarding the payment of direct grants and subsidies in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland should be directed to the devolved authorities in Scotland and Wales and the Northern Ireland Administration.

According to commission figures, in the 2000 EU financial year 11 of the 14 member states excluding Greece would have been affected by each of these limits. Statistics are not available for Greece.

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many farm holdings in (a) the UK and (b) each member state she estimates would be affected if the EU were to place a 300,000 euro limit on the payment it makes; and how many euros would be held back from agricultural support under such a system. [135772]

Mr. Bradshaw: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 23 October 2002, Official Report, column 314W. We have not made an assessment of what funds would be generated in this hypothetical policy scenario.

According to figures from the European Commission, in the 2000 EU financial year, 11 of the 14 member states excluding Greece would have been affected by each of these limits. Statistics are not available for Greece.

Bechtel

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will list the contracts for consultancy and other work carried out by Bechtel for agencies responsible to her Department and its predecessor in each year since 1997, stating in each case (a) the nature of the work, (b) the value of the contract and (c) the duration of the contract; and if she will make a statement. [137883]

Alun Michael: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 5 November 2003, Official Report, column 628W. From information held centrally, Defra and its agencies have let no contracts with Bechtel.

Scottish Beef Exports

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how much Scottish produced beef has been exported by (a) weight and (b) value in the last five years for which figures are available; and how much of these exports comprised (i) beef of Scottish origin and (ii) beef of foreign origin. [135827]

Mr. Bradshaw: This is a matter for the Scottish Executive.

For information, the following table shows UK exports of beef in the last five years.

	Exports of beef
	Tonnes	£000
1998	4,884	12,157
1999	5,647	19,720
2000	5,387	20,983
2001	5,409	18,763
2002	5,318	18,057

Bovine Tuberculosis

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what arrangements she will put in place to assist dairy farmers affected by herd breakdowns as a result of bovine tuberculosis. [138028]

Mr. Bradshaw: There are already a number of measures in place to help farmers, including dairy farmers, with herds affected by bovine TB. Compensation is paid at the market rate for all animals slaughtered under TB control measures and in late 2002 we introduced licensed movements of non-reactor cattle on to and off farms under restriction, subject to veterinary risk assessment. In seeking ways to assist farmers dealing with TB, a balance must be struck between reducing the burden on industry and effective disease control.

We have a wide ranging research programme in place which is seeking, amongst other things, to develop a vaccine for TB, to improve diagnosis of the disease and establish how bovine TB is spread. All farmers are likely to benefit from the outcomes of the research. The bovine TB programme is under review and we will be consulting on proposals for a new long-term strategy, and on short term policy options, around the end of the year.

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what estimate she has made of the number of cattle which are awaiting tests to identify bovine tuberculosis. [138029]

Mr. Bradshaw: At the end of September 2003 there were just over 3,300 cattle herds awaiting bovine tuberculosis tests. Details of the number of overdue herd tests are published each month on the Defra website at defra.gov.uk/animalh/tb/stats/index.htm

The number of individual animals awaiting tests is not available.

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what estimate she has made of (a) the funding for and (b) the number of veterinary surgeons which would be required to ensure there was no waiting list for cattle tests to identify bovine tuberculosis. [138030]

Mr. Bradshaw: In 2002/03 we spent £14 million on TB testing to bring the backlog of 27,000 overdue tests built up during the outbreak of foot and mouth disease (FMD) under control. We expect to spend in the region of £10.3 million on the testing programme in this financial year.

At the end of September 2003 the number of outstanding herd tests had been reduced to just over 3,300. This is about the same level as that prior to the outbreak of foot and mouth disease. The rolling nature of the testing programme means that herd tests are falling due all the time and we are therefore unlikely to reduce the overdue list to zero.

We propose to consult on additional testing (pre and post-movement testing and changes to testing frequencies) as part of a short term measures package and are preparing estimates of the veterinary resource input for such proposals.

We recently consulted on proposals to permit suitably trained and competent non-veterinarians to carry out TB tests. Responses are still being analysed. However, there is no intention in the proposal to require local veterinary practices to use lay testers.

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what system she has in place to monitor bovine TB factor compensation payments; and whether her Department collates and publishes the results of monitoring. [136411]

Mr. Bradshaw: Bovine TB compensation payments are based on the market value of the animals. The valuations are agreed between the Department and the farmer, or between professional valuers working on behalf of the Department and on behalf of farmers.

A consultation on proposals to rationalise existing compensation arrangements for all notifiable animal diseases is underway. The main aim of that exercise will be to increase transparency and operational simplicity by creating a single approach for all notifiable diseases. In the interim, the Department is considering what can be done to monitor valuers and the level of valuations in recognition of deficiencies in the current system which were highlighted in recent audit reports.

The Department publishes aggregated data on the numbers of stock slaughtered and compensation paid in Great Britain in the annual report of the Chief Veterinary Officer.

Foxes

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what discussions she has had with the (a) State Veterinary Service and (b) Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals about the re-homing of captured foxes. [138378]

Mr. Bradshaw [holding answer 13 November 2003]: The release of foxes and other wild animals from animal rehabilitation centres is an issue that is being considered as part of our consideration of the proposed Animal Welfare Bill. We hope to be able to propose that animal rehabilitation centres should be licensed and required to operate to a code of practice, including provisions for a code for the release of wild animals. Discussions on the rehabilitation of wild animals have included representatives of the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals and the State Veterinary Service.

Correspondence

Sir Michael Spicer: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when she will reply to the letter of 24 September from the hon. Member for West Worcestershire to the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State with responsibility for nature conservation and fisheries. [138829]

Mr. Bradshaw: I responded to the hon. Member on 6 November 2003.

Crematoria

Mrs. Dean: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) what estimate she has made of the effect upon the cost of a cremation arising from (a) the cost of installing gas cleaning filtration systems to remove mercury emissions and (b) the need to travel a greater distance to the nearest crematorium if closures take place; [137918]

(2) what representations she has received about the review being undertaken by the Environment Agency's Local Authority Unit into the Best Available Techniques Not Entailing Excessing Costs for crematoria; [137919]

(3) what estimate has been made of the cost of fitting gas cleaning filtration systems into crematoria; [138017]

(4) what estimate has been made of the number of crematoria which would be likely to close if there was a requirement to fit cleaning and filtration systems; [138018]

(5) what plans she has to conduct (a) quantified and (b) qualified research into mercury emissions from crematoria prior to reaching a decision on whether gas cleaning filtration systems should be fitted; [138019]

(6) what account she will take on any decision to enforce the fitting of filtration systems into United Kingdom crematoria of trends on levels of mercury emissions; [138020]

(7) what assessment she has made of the content of the Local Authority Unit report into Best Available Techniques Not Entailing Excessive Costs (BATNEEC) for crematoria; and what representations she has received which disagree with the report's recommendations. [138563]

Mr. Bradshaw: Estimates of the impacts of controlling mercury from crematoria were contained in a consultation paper the Department issued on 7 May 2003. A summary of the responses to the consultation has been placed on the Defra website at www.defra.gov.uk/corporate/consult/crematoria

The main interim conclusions reached from this consultation exercise are as follows:

- reducing emissions of mercury from crematoria should aim to be achieved without forcing any crematoria closures due to physical constraints such as insufficiency of space or heritage considerations
- a requirement to remove teeth prior to cremation is not acceptable
- the next step should be to explore developing a fair mechanism for reducing emissions from only a proportion of existing crematoria
- any improvements required for existing crematoria should be spread over a number of years
- detailed proposals on the basis of the above will be subject to full consultation in due course
- new crematoria should be required to install mercury abatement.

Dairy Sector

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what measures she is taking to support dairy farmers in (a) Lancashire and (b) the UK. [136036]

Mr. Bradshaw: Dairy farmers in Lancashire, in common with the rest of the UK, benefit from expenditure on the dairy CAP worth nearly 2 billion euros across the EU15. This expenditure will increase with the introduction of direct payments to dairy farmers from 2004.

We believe that in the long term the future of the dairy sector is best secured through pursuing the objectives of our Strategy for Sustainable Farming and Food. We have made a grant of nearly £0.5 million to the Food Chain and we have supported the establishment of English Food and Farming Partnerships, a new industry led body that has been set up specifically to support and encourage collaborative activity across all agricultural sectors. Furthermore my noble friend Lord Whitty has been chairing meetings of a Dairy Supply Chain Forum made up of senior figures from across the diary sector. This Forum and its sub-groups have been examining ways in which collaborative action can promote supply chain efficiency, and how levels of innovation and new products development might be increased, and considering the likely impact of the CAP reform package on the dairy sector. It also intends to consider the kinds of changes that the sector might need to make to adjust to the new environment created by the reforms.

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many dairy firms went out of business in the last year; and what assessment she has made of the causes. [137285]

Mr. Bradshaw: Data from the Office for National Statistics shows that in 2002, 50 enterprises classified as manufacturers of dairy products were de-registered for VAT. This compares to 525 enterprises under this classification registered for VAT at the end of 2002. Although these figures may be indicative of the number of firms which went out of business, the Government have made no assessment of the reasons for these de-registrations, and it should be noted that de-registration can occur for reasons other than an enterprise ceasing to trade, such as its turnover falling below the VAT threshold.

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) what arrangements she has put in place to evaluate the effect of the farm gate price of raw milk on average net (a) income and (b) profit of dairy farms in the United Kingdom; [137893]

(2) what estimate she has made of the threshold of the farm gate price of raw milk that would enable dairy farming to be economically viable. [137894]

Mr. Bradshaw: The Department monitors incomes on dairy farms through the annual Farm Business Survey and also, from time to time, via special studies into the economics of milk production. Incomes for the years ended February 2002 and February 2003 on a range of farm types, including dairy farms, will be published by the Department at the end of this month. Forecast incomes for the year ending February 2004 will be published in January 2004. In regard to economic viability, there are a number of factors that influence economic performance, including milk yield, milk price and efficiency of input use and these all vary from farm to farm. The wide range in economic performance across dairy farms is reflected in the wide range in the break even ex-farm milk price.

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of the likely effect of the current proposals for Common Agricultural Policy reform on the farm gate price of milk. [137895]

Mr. Bradshaw: When fully implemented, the reforms agreed in June in Luxembourg will reduce the support price for butter by 10 per cent. more than the 15 per cent. reduction originally agreed for both butter and skimmed milk powder under Agenda 2000 (i.e. a 25 per cent. cut in the support price for butter). If farm gate prices were to fall to the same extent, the price per litre might be reduced by a further 0.95p beyond the impact of Agenda 2000. However, we share the European Commission's assessment that farm gate prices are unlikely to settle at this level: indeed, the overall package of compensation agreed reflects this. (Producers will be compensated through an increase in the level of direct payments of a further 0.74ppl over and above the compensation originally agreed in Agenda 2000.) The figures quoted above are based on an exchange rate of 70p/euro.

Our economic assessment indicates that decoupling of direct payments from production will have a beneficial effect on farm incomes; we would expect the main dairy-specific price impact to be in relation to the value of milk quota.

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of the competitive position of the dairy processing industry in each EU member state. [137246]

Mr. Bradshaw: KPMG, in its report on "Prices and Profitability in the British Dairy Chain", which was commissioned by the Milk Development Council and published earlier this year, found that in 1997 (the most recent year for which UK data was available), apparent labour productivity in the UK dairy processing sector was somewhat below the EU average and significantly lower than in the Netherlands, Ireland, Austria and France. However, there has been significant investment in larger, more efficient, dairy plant in the UK since 1997 and this gap may well have closed.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what recent discussions she has had with (a) supermarkets and (b) dairy farmers regarding the price of milk. [136035]

Mr. Bradshaw: While the Government share producers' concerns over the low farmgate price of milk, price negotiations between producers and processors, or processors and supermarkets, are a private commercial matter in which the Government cannot and should not get involved, as long as competition rules are respected.

The Secretary of State has had no formal meetings with representatives of the dairy industry or retailers to discuss milk prices. However, Ministers frequently meet with representatives from all parts of the dairy supply chain and are therefore aware of the issues. Matters affecting the whole dairy supply chain are regularly discussed at the forum chaired by my noble friend Lord Whitty.

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what estimate she has made of the growth of the United Kingdom milk and milk products industry over the next (a) five, (b) 10 and (c) 15 years. [137292]

Mr. Bradshaw: A study commission by Defra, the Scottish Executive, the National Assembly for Wales and the Department for Agriculture and Rural Development, Northern Ireland by the Centre for Agriculture, Food and Resource Economics at the University of Manchester, which was published in April 2002, concluded that on balance the elimination of dairy market support and milk quotas, together with compensating decoupled direct payments would not result in a significant change in UK milk production. It also concluded that such a reform of the dairy CAP would result in dynamic benefits to the processing sector as it moved from the production of commodity products to value-added products. Nevertheless, this study could not predict and could therefore not consider the actual outcome of the agreement reached on CAP reform in June. Under the umbrella of the Dairy Supply Chain Forum, which is chaired by my noble Friend Lord Whitty, Defra is co-funding with the Milk Development Council and the Dairy Industry Association, supported by the National Farmers Union, a study on the impacts of the agreement on Dairy CAP reform and some of the options available to the UK. Preliminary results for this work should be available in December, with a final report published in January. Once this is complete, we intend to work with the industry through the Forum to consider the long-term implications and the adjustments the sector will need to make to the new environment.

Egg Industry

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what procedures she has put in place to assess the effect of tariff reductions on egg imports on the UK's egg industry. [138034]

Mr. Bradshaw: There is still a considerable way to go in the WTO negotiations on tariff reductions before consideration can be given to the level of reduction applying to individual products. But we are well aware of the egg industry's concerns and we will do all we can to ensure the most favourable outcome possible for UK producers.

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what direct subsidies are available to egg producers in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) France and (c) Germany. [138035]

Mr. Bradshaw: Given that the CAP regime for eggs is a very light one, it does not provide direct subsidies for EU egg producers. Some limited financial assistance is available to the UK egg industry under the England Rural Development Programme and Regional Selective Assistance. We do not hold information on the extent to which other member states make similar assistance available to their egg producers.

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what conditions producers are required to meet to be licensed to receive export refunds for egg and poultry products; how many licences have been issued to UK farmers; and what level of export refunds are available to licence holders. [138036]

Mr. Bradshaw: In order to receive export refunds for egg and poultry products the applicant must be registered with the Rural Payments Agency (RPA). Export licences are required where quantities to be exported exceed certain amounts. Applicants for export licences must be natural or legal persons who, at the time applications are made, are able to prove to the satisfaction of the RPA that they have engaged in trade in the egg, or poultry, sector for at least 12 months.

Within the period of 1 November 2002 and 1 November 2003, 162 egg licences and 395 poultry licences were issued to UK farmers.

The level of export refund is determined by product (CN) code. Different egg/poultry products will have different product codes and rates of export refund, however for the period 1 November 2002 to 1 November 2003 the highest and lowest rates prevailing were:

Egg products—lowest 1.70 euros/100gs; highest 75 euros/100kgs

Poultry Products—lowest 0.80 euros/100kgs; highest 40 euros/100kgs

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the timetable is for determining whether United Kingdom egg producers may continue to use enriched cages for housing laying hens. [138077]

Mr. Bradshaw: The future of enriched cages will be reviewed on an EU basis when the Welfare of Laying Hens Directive 99/74/EC is next considered by the Agriculture Council in 2005.

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of the conclusion of the European Union's Agricultural Research Department report that under EU Council directive 99/74/EC on the Welfare of Laying Hens, EU countries will not be able to compete in their home egg market after 2012; and if she will make a statement. [138078]

Mr. Bradshaw: The Government will consider this report along with other economic assessments in preparation for the review of the Welfare of Laying Hens Directive 99/74/EC in 2005.

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what steps she has taken to assist UK egg producers to compete in (a) European and (b) world wide markets. [138079]

Mr. Bradshaw: Subsidies to compete in the EU market would be incompatible with the principles of the Single Market. The EU egg regime provides for some limited export refunds in respect of egg exports to third countries.

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will press the European Union to bring forward measures to enable EU countries to maintain their market share in the European egg market. [138080]

Mr. Bradshaw: The UK will continue to play an important role in formulating EU policy in this area.

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what volume in tonnes of shelled eggs was (a) produced by United Kingdom farms, (b) produced by United Kingdom farms and sold at United Kingdom retail outlets and (c) produced by United Kingdom farms and exported in the last 10 years for which figures are available; and to which countries shelled eggs were exported. [138083]

Mr. Bradshaw: (a) The following table shows the production of shelled eggs in the United Kingdom for the last 10 years:

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what volume in tonnes of whole egg powder was (a) produced in the United Kingdom, (b) produced in the United Kingdom and sold in United Kingdom retail outlets and (c) produced in the United Kingdom and exported in the last 10 years for which figures are available; and to which countries whole egg powder was exported. [138084]

Mr. Bradshaw: No figures are available on the production of whole egg powder in the United Kingdom, nor on the volume of egg powder sold through United Kingdom retail outlets.

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of the reasons for the egg production costs in the United Kingdom; and what assessment she has made of the reasons for the primary egg production costs in (a) Poland, (b) the Ukraine and (c) the USA. [138085]

Mr. Bradshaw: We have made no assessment of the costs of egg production in those countries, but some of this information has been produced by the egg industry. Costs will depend on a number of different factors such as the costs of land and labour, inputs, transport etc.

Fishing Fleet

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) what targets she has set for the decommissioning of the UK fishing fleet; and if she will take steps to ensure that the oldest boats and lines constitute the same proportion of boats decommissioned as they do of the entire fleet; [138089]

(2) whether the UK's decommissioning plans are supported by binary decommissioning of fishing vessels within EU member states; [138090]

(3) what estimate she has made of the likely number of vessels in the UK fishing fleet in each of the next 10 years; [138091]

(4) what assessment she has made of the effects on fishing communities of the decommissioning of the UK fishing fleet; [138092]

(5) what estimate she has made of the cost of a benefits package in relation to decommissioning of the UK fishing fleet; [138093]

(6) what estimate she has made of the cost of the process of decommissioning the UK fishing fleet; [138094]

(7) what plans there are for decommissioning fishing fleets in other EU member states; [138096]

(8) what branches of the Civil Service are covered by paragraph 14(7) of Statutory Instrument 2669. [138097]

Mr. Bradshaw: The objective of the 2003 decommissioning schemes in England, Scotland and Northern Ireland is to remove 15–20 per cent. of the 2001 effort on cod in the North Sea and west of Scotland fisheries (Northern Ireland have also targeted vessels catching cod in the Irish Sea). We are therefore focusing the schemes on those vessels which spend most time fishing for cod. The age of the vessels is not relevant in that context.

Other member states will decide for themselves whether a decommissioning scheme is appropriate to their particular circumstances. However the effort control measures that are in place under the Community's 2003 Days at Sea scheme apply to the fleets of all European Union countries fishing in the North Sea and west of Scotland—not simply the UK.

While the Government are keen to reduce overcapacity within the European fleet, we have set no targets for the future size of the UK fleet.

We are working with the Regional Development Agencies to ensure that the full range of Government support and regional funding is made available as appropriate to individuals and businesses in fishing communities in order to enable them to deal with the consequences of decommissioning.

More than £60 million has been made available within the UK for decommissioning and associated financial support in 2003.

It is for applicants to the schemes to decide the basis for their decommissioning bids, but these may include any anticipated costs of decommissioning e.g scrapyard fees.

The provisions of the decommissioning scheme in England (as defined in Statutory Instrument 2669) are enforced by the staff of the Department's Sea Fisheries Inspectorate.

Food Standards

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what steps the Government is taking to ensure that consumer interests are represented on food advisory groups. [137257]

Miss Melanie Johnson: I have been asked to reply.

The expert committees and working parties that advise the Food Standards Agency (FSA), including those committees which also advise the Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs and/or the Department of Health, all have at least one consumer representative member. The FSA regularly holds meetings with consumer groups to discuss and explain food policy issues and consumer groups are always included in FSA consultations.

Animal By-products

Judy Mallaber: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs whether her Department has a database of registered animal by-products approved premises available to enforcement agencies, with particular reference to the Meat Hygiene Service. [137589]

Mr. Bradshaw: As required by Regulation (EC) 1774/2002 (which lays down health rules concerning animal by-products not intended for human consumption), Defra maintains information on various premises that require approval to be able to operate e.g. pet food plants. This information is available to the Meat Hygiene Service for enforcement purposes and can be obtained from local Defra animal health offices (who issue the approvals).

Import Bans

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on powers to ban importation of foods whose production standards are illegal in this country. [137282]

Mr. Bradshaw: All consignments of animal products (including meat and fish) imported into the UK from other EU member states must have been produced in accordance with the rules laid down in Community legislation. Imports from third countries must have been produced to standards at least equivalent to those in the legislation. Among other things, the legislation sets out the licensing, structural and veterinary supervision requirements to be applied in production plants and each consignment must be accompanied by appropriate health certification.

If there is an outbreak of disease or if any other phenomenon occurs which is likely to present a risk to human or animal health, Community legislation allows us to take appropriate safeguard action, which may include a ban on imports of products from all, or parts, of the country concerned.

Any consignment of animal products imported from third countries are subject to veterinary inspection on entering the EU to ensure that conditions of import have been complied with and to ensure that they have remained in a satisfactory condition during transport. Food not of animal origin imported from countries outside the EU is also subject to routine food safety controls at the point of entry to the UK under imported food legislation. Any products that do not meet appropriate requirements may be rejected and either re-exported or destroyed.

Food from other EU member states is in free circulation within the EU and is not subject to routine checks at UK ports. Such food can be subject to import checks where there is information to support such action. All imported food, including food from other EU member states, may be inspected at the point of destination in the UK and is subject to the same controls and checks at retail level.

Food Labelling

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the labelling by country of origin of meat sold in the United Kingdom. [137281]

Miss Melanie Johnson: I have been asked to reply.

European Union rules require country of origin labelling for fresh or frozen veal and beef cuts and veal and beef mince sold prepacked or non-prepacked. For other meats, and for processed veal and beef, country of origin need not be given unless failure to do so might mislead a purchaser as to its true origin. Where origin information is given voluntarily it must not be false or misleading.

The Food Standards Agency has issued guidance notes for industry and enforcement authorities, which emphasise the need to ensure that origin labels are clearly worded to avoid misleading consumers, for example by applying 'British' labelling to products like ham or bacon prepared from imported meat.

The Government are pressing at EU level for compulsory origin labelling on all meats and some meat products, and for tighter controls on misleading origin declarations. It welcomes the European Commission's identification of rules on origin labelling as one of the key issues to be considered in its current review of EU labelling rules.

Waste Management

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what is being done to assess the impact of the different waste management practices required as a consequence of the (a) Landfill Directive and (b) the Waste Management Strategy. [137530]

Mr. Morley: A number of studies looking at the health impacts of different waste management options are being carried out by the Environment Agency. Following recommendations in the Strategy Unit report Waste not, Want not, and the 2002 Pre-Budget Report, the Government commissioned a review of existing literature and evidence of the health and environmental effects of different waste management: options. The first phase of the report has looked at facilities which handle municipal solid waste and waste of a similar nature. This is now being peer reviewed by the Royal Society and is due to be published around the time of the Pre-Budget Report.

The Government will consider whether there are further research requirements in the light of the conclusions of the Review.

Mobile Telephone Costs

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how much she spent on official mobile phone calls in 2002. [132119]

Margaret Beckett: Records of itemised phone bills are not kept beyond six months. Usage is fully in accordance with the guidelines set out in the Ministerial Code.

Market Towns

Dr. Jack Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessments she has made of the effect of the Government's policy on market towns in (a) Cumbria and (b) Copeland since the proposals were published; and if she will make a statement. [138470]

Alun Michael: In Summer 2002, 76 out of the 120 towns that were then involved in the Market Towns Initiative (MTI) responded to a questionnaire survey. The findings provided a snapshot of what had been achieved in the first year of the MTI, particularly in four key areas: establishing partnerships; community involvement; getting the best out of the health check, vision and action plan; and project successes. This research note can be found at: http://www.countryside.gov.uk/Publications/articles/crn_60.asp. No specific analysis of any town, district or county was undertaken. However, this year the Countryside Agency is working in partnership with Defra to carry out a more intensive analysis of the problems and achievements arising in the 200+ towns of the Market Towns Initiative. This report is due to be published in May 2004.

Organic Farming/Biotechnology Research

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how much the Government spent in 2001–02 on research into (a) organic farming and (b) biotechnology. [137248]

Mr. Bradshaw: The table shows Defra spending in the financial year 2001–02 on research into organic farming and biotechnology.

	£ million
Organic farming	2.127
Biotechnology	29.7

Biotechnology is defined as the application of biological organisms, systems and processes to manufacturing and service industries. This definition covers genetic modification (GM) but goes much wider to include fused cell techniques, protein engineering, fermentation and cell culture, production of vaccines and monoclonal antibodies (and many other areas) all of which have applications in conventional agriculture.

Poultry Meat

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what procedures she has put in place to assess the impact of Brazilian turkey imports into the United Kingdom on the UK's turkey producing industry. [138037]

Mr. Bradshaw: Additional duties can be imposed on poultry meat imports from outside the Community if prices are unrealistically low and are threatening market stability. However, under WTO rules these additional duties can be applied only to a limited number of chicken and turkey products. Action in this area is taken at EU level.

Earlier this year, the European Commission began investigating industry concerns over the misdescription of basted turkeys as a means of evading proper duties. As part of this, we submitted information on turkey imports into the U.K. Those investigations are continuing.

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the volume in tonnes of (a) poultry meat produced in the UK, (b) poultry meat produced in the UK and sold at UK retail outlets and (c) poultry meat produced in the UK and exported overseas was in the last year for which figures are available. [138032]

Mr. Bradshaw: The information requested is as follows:

(a) 1,534 thousand tonnes of poultry meat was produced in the UK in 2002 (the last year for which figures are available).

(b) There are no figures available on the volume of UK poultry meat that is sold at UK retail outlets. However, the volume of UK production less exports which was 1,320 thousand tonnes in 2002 provides an indication of the volume of UK production sold onto the UK market (including retail, catering and the food processing sector).

(c) 214 thousand tonnes of poultry meat (carcase weight equivalent) was exported from the UK in 2002 (the last year for which figures are available). This will mainly be of UK origin but may include some re-exports of imported poultry meat.

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) what mechanisms are in place to ensure that poultry meat imports from (a) the European Union and (b) third country suppliers meet the same (a) quality and (b) health and safety requirements that poultry meat producers in the UK are required to meet; [138081]

(2) what procedures are in place to assess whether egg products imported to the United Kingdom meet the same quality standards as domestic egg products. [138086]

Mr. Bradshaw: All consignments of poultry meat and egg products imported into the UK from other EU member states must have been produced in accordance with the requirements laid down in Community legislation. Imports from third countries must have been produced to standards at least equivalent to those in the legislation.

All consignments of poultry meat and egg products imported into the UK from third countries must enter at designated UK Border Inspection Posts (BIPs) where they are subject to veterinary inspections. All consignments are subject to documentary and identity checks and at least 50 per cent. of consignments undergo physical checks. These ensure import conditions are met and that the products remain in a satisfactory condition during transport.

In line with Community rules, random spot checks at destination may be carried out on consignments of poultry meat and egg products imported into the UK from other EU member states.

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what support the Government provides to (a) poultry meat and (b) egg producers. [138082]

Mr. Bradshaw: The Government do not provide any specific support for either of these sectors. The Government readily acknowledges that both industries have excellent track records of innovation and market orientation. From their perspective, the principal need is for Government to avoid imposing unnecessary burdens or obstacles, while ensuring that environmental and animal health and welfare standards, among others, meet public requirements.

Radioactivity in Food and the Environment

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) what liaison took place between the United Kingdom regulatory bodies and the Radiation Protection Institute for Ireland in the production of the report on radioactivity in food and the environment, RIFE 8; [136721]

(2) when she received the most recent annual report on radioactivity in food and the environment from the regulatory agencies; how members of the public may obtain this report; and if she will make a statement on the key findings of the RIFE 8 report. [136722]

Miss Melanie Johnson: I have been asked to reply.

The Radioactivity in Food and the Environment report (RIFE 8) contains full details of the monitoring of radioactivity in food and the environment undertaken by the Food Standards Agency, the Scottish Environment Protection Agency, the Environment Agency and the Environment and Heritage Service for Northern Ireland in 2002.

The report shows that in 2002 radiation doses to the UK public as a result of man-made radioactive discharges to the environment were well below national and international limits.

The report was published on 29 October and is available in the Library.

The report was also sent to the Radiation Protection Institute for Ireland (RPII) and its findings will be discussed at the next biannual meeting of the UK Ireland Contact Group on Radioactivity Matters attended by the RPII and the UK regulatory bodies.

Members of the public may obtain a hardback copy of the report (or an electronic version on CD) by writing to the Food Standards Agency at Aviation House, 125 Kingsway, London WC2B 6NH. The report is free. Copies of the report may also be downloaded from the website of the Food Standards Agency at www.food.gov.uk

Religious Slaughter

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will list for each species the total number of animals religiously slaughtered in the United Kingdom for the last year for which figures are available. [137278]

Mr. Bradshaw: Information on the number of animals and birds slaughtered by religious methods in the United Kingdom is not collected routinely.

Information on religious slaughter in Great Britain is gathered as part of the Animal Welfare Review (carried out every two years by the Meat Hygiene Service on behalf of Defra), but the Review collects data only on a weekly basis. The latest published Animal Welfare Review contains information on Muslim (Halal) and Jewish (Kosher) slaughter gathered in 2001. The data given in the table were for the period 3 to 9 September 2001 for red meat animals, and for the period 14 to 20 May 2001 for poultry.

Species	Halal, stunned prior to slaughter	Halal, not stunned prior to slaughter	Kosher, stunned prior to slaughter	Kosher, not stunned prior to slaughter
Cattle (including calves)	1,116	0	0	833
Young lambs	54,469	4,028	0	2,277
Other sheep	23,589	7,880	0	0
Goats	120	21	0	0
Broilers	913,997	131,656	0	34,728
Hens	128,408	21,780	0	1,970
Turkeys	0	0	0	637
Ducks	0	36	0	476

Religious slaughter is rarely carried out in Northern Ireland. There have been only a few instances involving a small number of sheep, and all the animals were stunned prior to slaughter.

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what tonnage of animals religiously slaughtered in Britain in the last year for which figures are available was exported overseas; and to which countries. [137279]

Mr. Bradshaw: This information is not available since there is no requirement for an exporter to supply details of the method of slaughter in order to obtain an export health certificate.

Meat Imports

Mr. Weir: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what recent discussions she has had with the Scottish Executive on the impact of the proposed reform of the Common Agricultural Policy on meat imports from South America. [133229]

Mr. Bradshaw: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and other Defra Ministers, have had frequent discussions with the Scottish Executive on all aspects of CAP reform, but the reform is unlikely to have any direct impact on the level of South American meat imports.

Mr. Weir: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what recent discussions she has had with representatives of UK meat producers on the impact of the proposed reform of the Common Agricultural Policy on meat imports from South America. [133230]

Mr. Bradshaw: Ministers and officials have met regularly with representatives of UK meat producers such as the National Farmers Union and the National Beef Association, to discuss all aspects of CAP reform.

Rural Payments Agency

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what target time has been set for the Rural Payments Agency to reimburse food manufacturers for the additional costs of using EU origin sugar; and if she will make a statement. [139134]

Alun Michael: For year 2003–04 the Rural Payments Agency has a target to pay 80 per cent. of all valid non-IACS claims within 28 days of the claims becoming processable and all claims within EU deadlines or in their absence 60 days.

For the period 1 April 2003 to 12 November 2003 the target has been met. It is anticipated that this level of performance will be maintained throughout the 2003–04 year.

Women in Agriculture

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what funding is available from the European Union for schemes to help women into agriculture. [137276]

Mr. Bradshaw: The England Rural Development Programme (ERDP), which is funded by Government and the European Union, provides support for rural areas, by encouraging sustainable rural businesses and thriving communities. It helps farmers and foresters respond better to consumer requirements and become more competitive, diverse, flexible and environmentally responsible. It also provides help to rural businesses and communities which need to adapt and develop. The Programme covers 10 separate schemes which provide new opportunities for farmers and others to protect and improve the countryside, to develop sustainable rural enterprises and to help rural communities to thrive. It is estimated that the Programme will provide £1.6 billion in support between 2000 and 2006. Defra believes the best way to encourage enterprise in rural areas is to provide the right economic framework and, where necessary, to target support measures e.g. rural enterprise and training, towards appropriate people. Awards of ERDP funds are made in line with principles of equal opportunities.

TRANSPORT

Bus Services

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many passengers used bus services in (a) Shrewsbury and Atcham and (b) Shropshire in each year since 1997. [138349]

Mr. McNulty: The number of bus passengers is not available for Shrewsbury and Atcham. Information included by Shropshire County Council in its latest Annual Progress Report for its Local Transport Plan showed that there were an estimated 6.3 million local bus passenger journeys in Shropshire in 2001–02, followed by 6.6 million in 2002–03. There is no reliable estimate of bus passenger journeys in Shropshire for earlier years.

Childhood Obesity

Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what research his Department has commissioned into the impact of pedestrian strategies on childhood obesity; [138739]

(2) what discussions he has had with other Departments about implementing a strategy to tackle childhood obesity. [138740]

Mr. McNulty: My Department has not commissioned specific research on this topic. We are, however, closely involved with the work of the cross-departmental Activity Coordination Team, which is developing a strategy to raise levels of physical activity among both children and adults.

In addition, on 17 September 2003 we launched, in conjunction with the Department for Education and Skills, an action plan that includes measures to promote healthy and safe travel to school on foot and by bike.

Coastguard (Essex)

Mr. Francois: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many part-time coastguards were employed by the Essex Coastguard Service on 1 September 2003. [139510]

Mr. McNulty: On 1 September 2003, the Maritime and Coastguard Agency employed 56 part-time auxiliary coastguards in Essex.

Cycling

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many people have died while cycling in London in each of the past 10 years. [138667]

Mr. McNulty: The following table shows the number of pedal cyclists killed in road accidents in Greater London in each of the last 10 years.

Pedal cyclists killed in road accidents in Greater London

	Number
2002	20
2001	21
2000	14
1999	10
1998	12
1997	12
1996	20
1995	15
1994	15
1993	18
Total	157

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to promote safety guidance aimed at young cyclists; and if he will make a statement. [139438]

Mr. McNulty: We have produced a large body of material on cycle safety aimed at younger children promoting the use of cycle helmets as well as other cycle safety messages such as conspicuousness and training. We have also developed a Cycle Sense campaign aimed at teenagers that was launched on 21 May this year. The campaign encourages teenagers to wear cycle helmets and consists of posters and a new Cycle Sense website.

Dangerous Goods Safety Advisers

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what the cost of the Dangerous Goods Safety Adviser Scheme has been in each year since the scheme was established; and how many advisers have been trained in each year. [138370]

Mr. McNulty: The regulations implementing EU Directive 96/35/EC were made in February 1999 and dangerous goods safety advisers (DGSA) had to be appointed by a qualifying undertaking from 1 January 2000. The Directive does not include a requirement for approved training. Competence is proved by the successful completion of a written examination, which leads to the award of a DGSA certificate. The first certificate was awarded in October 1998.

The number of certificates issued in each year are as follows:

	Number
1998–99	75
1999–2000	2,237
2000–01	1,061
2001–02	389
2002–03	321

The costs of undertaking the approved examinations and the issue of the vocational certificate issuing arrangements are currently £230. This is to undertake a typical examination consisting of the core module, the transport module and the class module. An additional fee of £85 is payable to undertake an additional module or class examination. As there is no formal training required, there are no records of any associated training costs. The level of training necessary will depend on the competence of the candidate.

The Health and Safety Executive consulted with stakeholders prior to the making of the regulations. In its consultative document, the HSE estimated the quantified costs to society over a 10-year period at between £580 million and £990 million. These costs are incurred by consignors and operators of transport involved with the carriage of dangerous goods by road and rail. These estimated costs have not been updated or verified.

Driving Standards Agency

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what the budget of the Driving Standards Agency is in 2003- 04. [138417]

Mr. McNulty: The DSA is a trading fund and is not given a budget by the Department. The Agency's business plan for 2003–04 plans for an expenditure of some £110 million.

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many daily (a) telephone calls and (b) website hits were received on average by the Driving Standards Agency from people trying to book a driving test, in the last 12 months for which figures are available. [138419]

Mr. McNulty: During the period November 2002 to October 2003, the Driving Standards Agency (DSA) received 6,627,063 calls to the national test booking line. This is approximately 26,000 calls per working day.

Figures are not available for the number of hits on the Agency's website but, during the same period, some 327,000 theory test bookings were made online. The facility to book practical tests online was introduced last month, and some 7,000 customers have already booked their practical test using this method.

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what the average waiting time for booking a driving test, broken down by area, was in the last 12 months for which figures are available. [138418]

Mr. McNulty: For the period November 2002 to October 2003, the waiting times for a driving test in each of the Driving Standards Agency's five areas were:

Weeks

Category of test	London	Midlands and Eastern	Wales and Western	Northern	Scotland
Car	9.9	9.6	7.6	9.8	6.9
Motorcycle	3.1	3.8	2.5	3.8	2.1
Lorry/bus	3.6	4.6	2.8	4.8	3.6

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many people have (a) taken and (b) passed a driving test in each of the last six years. [138420]

Mr. McNulty: In the last six years the number of people taking and passing practical driving tests, and pass rates, were:

	1997–98	1998–99	1999–2000	2000–01	2001–02	2002–03

Pass rate (percentage)	48.22	47.52	45.82	45.95	44.94	44.74

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many driving test examiners have been employed in each of the last six years, expressed as (a) head count and (b) full-time equivalents. [138421]

Mr. McNulty: For the last five years for which data are readily available, the average number of driving examiners employed by the Driving Standards Agency each month was:

	1999	2000	2001	2002	2003 (to October)
Headcount	1,261.05	1,271.08	1,313.06	1,391.25	1,493.05
Full-time equivalent	1,257.23	1,268.07	1,311.34	1,388.84	1,488.14

Note:

Figures before 1999 are not held.

Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will press the DVLA to include a contact telephone number on their envelopes. [138612]

Mr. Jamieson: I am currently content that the arrangements in place at DVLA are satisfactory and I would be concerned that the inclusion of the DVLA phone number on the envelope could potentially compromise the secure delivery of valuable documents.

EU Committees

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the dates of meetings of (a) the EU Committee for the implementation of the Community framework for co-operation in the field of accidental or deliberate marine pollution, (b) the EU Committee on application of the legislation on access to the groundhandling market at Community airports and (c) the EU Technical Adaptation Committee on the introduction of measures to encourage improvements in the safety and health of workers at work during the Danish and Greek presidencies; what items were on each agenda; what representative of the Scottish Executive was present on each occasion; what preparatory meetings were held for each meeting; which officials were present at each preparatory meeting; and if he will make a statement. [132684]

Mr. McNulty: The information is as follows:

(a) During the period in question, this Committee met on 14 March 2003. It typically meets twice a year. Its agenda focuses on a five-year rolling programme of work in the field of pollution prevention and control.

(b) There were no meetings of this Committee during the period in question.

(c) UK involvement in this Committee is not the responsibility of the Department for Transport.

UK officials consult widely and the views of the Devolved Administrations, including the Scottish Executive, are fully reflected at Committee meetings.

Exemption 2 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information covering internal discussion and advice applies.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the dates of meetings of (a) the EU Committee on application of the legislation on the minimum level of training for seafarers and the recognition of certificates issued by training institutes or administration of third countries and (b) the EU Committee for the adaptation to technical progress of recording equipment in road transport (tachographs) during the Danish and Greek presidencies; what items were on each agenda; what representative of the Scottish Executive was present on each occasion; what preparatory meetings were held for each meeting; which officials were present at each preparatory meeting; and if he will make a statement. (b) The EU Committee for the adaptation to technical progress of recording equipment in road transport (tachographs) during the Danish and Greek presidencies.

The Committee has met only once in the last 12 months, on 26 June 2003, under the Greek presidency. The Committee considered and approved editorial amendments to the technical specification to Commission Regulation (EC) 1360/2002, adapting to technical progress to Council Regulation (EEC) 3821/85 on recording equipment in road transport (digital tachographs). These amendments were subsequently published as a corrigendum to that regulation. There are currently no plans for further meetings.

For both these Committees, Exemption 2 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information covering internal discussion and advice applies.

UK officials consult widely and the views of the Devolved Administrations, including the Scottish Executive are fully reflected at Committee meetings.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether the EU Committee on the reciprocal recognition of national boatmasters' certificates for the carriage of goods and passengers by inland waterway met during the Danish and Greek presidencies; and if he will make a statement. [132721]

Mr. McNulty: This Committee did not meet during the period in question.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the dates of meetings of (a) the EU Committee for the adaptation to technical progress of roadworthiness tests of vehicles, (b) the EU Standing Committee for Implementation of the Directive on Marketing of Biological Products and (c) the EU Scientific Committee for occupational exposure limits to chemical agents during the Danish and Greek presidencies; what items were on each agenda; what representative of the Scottish Executive was present on each occasion; what preparatory meetings were held for each meeting; which officials were present at each preparatory meeting; and if he will make a statement. [132722]

Mr. McNulty: The information is as follows:

(a) There was one meeting only of this Committee during the relevant period. It was on 3 to 4 December 2002. It discussed Directives on Vehicle Emissions and Registration of vehicles. It also discussed developments on a regulatory standard on roadworthiness testing and the results of an emissions research study during the period.

(b) and (c) UK involvement in these Committees is not the responsibility of the Department for Transport.

UK officials consult widely and the views of the Devolved Administrations, including the Scottish Executive, are fully reflected at Committee meetings. Exemption 2 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information covering internal discussion and advice applies.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the dates of meetings of the European Energy and Transport Forum during the Danish and Greek presidencies; what items were on each agenda; what representative of the Scottish Executive was present on each occasion; what preparatory meetings were held for each meeting; which officials were present at each preparatory meeting; and if he will make a statement. [132729]

Mr. McNulty: During the period in question, the European Energy and Transport Forum met in plenary session on 8 October 2002 (inaugural meeting), 21 January 2003 and 27 June 2003. Trans-European transport networks, interoperability of road toll collection systems and infrastructure charging were its principal topics of discussion at these meetings.

UK officials consult widely and the views of the Devolved Administrations, including the Scottish Executive, are fully reflected at Committee meetings. Exemption 2 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information covering internal discussion and advice applies.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the dates and locations of meetings of (a) the EU Committee for granting Community aid in the field of trans-European networks on transport, (b) the EU Committee on the Development of trans-Europe Transport Networks and (c) the EU Committee on the adaptation to scientific and technical progress of legislation concerning the transport of dangerous goods during the Danish and Greek presidencies; what items were on each agenda; what representative of the Scottish Executive was present on each occasion; what preparatory meetings were held for each meeting; which officials were present on each occasion; and if he will make a statement. [132730]

Mr. McNulty: The information requested is as follows.

(a) The EU Committee for granting Community aid in the field of trans-European networks on transport met once during the period on 30 June 2003 in Brussels. The agenda comprised issues regarding the financing of the network and the projects of common interest on it.

(b) The EU Committee on the Development of trans-European Transport Networks (TEN-T) met three times during the period, on 26 November 2002, 4 March 2003 and 3 June 2003 in Brussels. The agenda comprised items regarding progress towards completion of the TEN-T and its further development.

(c) The EU Committee on the adaptation to scientific and technical progress of legislation concerning the transport of dangerous goods met on 9 December 2002 and 4 June 2003 during the period in question. It typically meets twice a year. The Committee discussed derogations and modifications of the annexes to three Directives on the transport of dangerous goods. Heathrow Airport

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the effect on regional economies of a third runway at Heathrow Airport. [138621]

Mr. McNulty: The assessment of additional capacity options is based on direct benefits to passengers from allowing more people to fly and giving passengers a greater choice of timings and routes. No assessment has been made of the wider economic benefits including those to regional economies of additional airport capacity, though some of these will be captured in the direct benefits, particularly to business passengers.

M6 Toll Road

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the M6 toll road will become operational. [137357]

Mr. McNulty: The M6 Toll road is being developed by Midland Expressway Ltd. The Department is expecting them to make an announcement on the road opening date shortly.

MOT Computerisation

John Thurso: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what the cost was at today's prices of the contract with Siemens Business Services to run the MOT computerisation programme; when this contract was awarded; how much has been spent to date; and how much will have been spent by the time the system is operational. [138144]

Mr. McNulty: The cost of the contract with Siemens Business Services (SBS) to run the computerised MOT service is £1.07 per test at today's prices. SBS have been paid nothing so far and will not receive any transaction payments until the first MOT stations are computerised.

The MOT Computerisation Contract was awarded in 2000. Expenditure to end of 2002–03 on managing and delivering VOSA's contracted products is £8.4 million and the forecast spend from April 2003 until roll-out in May 2004 is £9.6 million.

John Thurso: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the progress of the MOT computerisation programme; and what assessment (a) has been conducted and (b) is planned of the (i) success and (ii) value for money of its implementation. [138145]

Mr. McNulty: Siemens Business Services (SBS) activity since the MOT Computerisation Contract was awarded has included design, development and testing of hardware and software needed to supply the service, and they are close to concluding their testing of the system functionality. VOSA is due to begin its trials of the new service in December 2003.

Treasury Task Force commissioned a full review of the project in January 2000 before the contract was awarded. The review concluded that the project had a high probability of success. A further review of progress by an Office of Government Commerce independent expert was conducted in July 2002. This review concluded that an amended contract, then being negotiated, should ensure the first MOT stations would be computerised by mid-February 2004.

A third independent review of progress now under way will report by 20 November 2003.

A readiness-for-service review, to be conducted at the end of VOSA trials, will confirm the viability of the business case and that the services and users are ready for go-live. This review will also cover value-for-money set out in the business case and approved by HM Treasury.

John Thurso: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what the timetable was for the introduction of the MOT computerisation programme when the contract with Siemens Business Services to run the system was awarded; and what it is now. [138146]

Mr. McNulty: The original contracted date for the first MOT stations to be computerised was May 2002. The earliest likely date for implementation is now mid-May 2004.

Railway Maintenance

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much was spent on clearing railway lines of litter in each of the last five years. [138361]

Mr. McNulty: This is an operational matter for Network Rail. Responsibility for clearing railway lines of litter usually forms part of Network Rail infrastructure maintenance contracts and as such there is no specific budget, rather spending on litter clearance is subsumed into the general maintenance budgets.

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many trees have been (a) planted and (b) felled on rail embankments in each year since 1997. [138362]

Mr. McNulty: This is an operational matter for Network Rail who are responsible for the maintenance of over 20,000 miles of track in the UK much of which requires the management of vegetation. Detailed figures of the number of trees planted or felled are not available.

Rail Services

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what the performance against target was for (a) reliability, (b) punctuality and (c) safety of rail services between Shrewsbury and (i) Wolverhampton, (ii) Hereford, (iii) Chester and (iv) Aberystwyth in the last year for which figures are available. [138348]

Mr. McNulty: The Strategic Rail Authority publishes performance information in its six monthly "On Track" publication, copies of which are placed in the Library of the House. Information is provided for the services of each operator in aggregate, not by specific routes. There is no single performance measurement or target for 'safety'.

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the line from Weaver Junction to Liverpool Lime Street will be modernised to enable trains to run at 125 mph. [138922]

Mr. McNulty: The Strategic Rail Authority's "West Coast Main Line Strategy", published in June 2003, envisages that the modernisation of the line from London to Crewe will be completed in autumn 2004 and the Crewe-Weaver Junction-Liverpool section in summer 2005, including sections with a maximum line speed of 125mph. With the introduction of 125-mph trains, journey times between London and Liverpool will be substantially reduced from autumn 2004.

Roadworks

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has made of how many roadwork cones are (a) accidentally destroyed and (b) stolen in each of the last three years for which figures are available. [138359]

Mr. McNulty: Figures for the number of cones accidentally destroyed or stolen are not recorded.

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many pedestrians were injured in accidental falls into holes dug as a result of roadworks in each of the last five years. [138360]

Mr. McNulty: The Highways Agency has no record of any pedestrian being injured in accidental falls into holes dug as a result of roadworks on its roads, in any of the last five years.

My Department does not hold figures centrally for local authority roads.

Road Schemes

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has undertaken into the environmental effects of proposals by Norfolk County Council to build a road through the Ringland Valley. [138209]

Mr. Jamieson: None. Options for a Northern Distributor Road form part of a review of the Norwich Area Transport Strategy currently being undertaken by Norfolk County Council. It has not taken a decision in principle on the need for the road and so there have been no proposals put forward for assessment by the Secretary of State.

Vehicles (Tinted Windows)

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what response he has made to the concerns represented by the Glass and Glazing Federation about the impact on the owners of vehicles with lightly tinted windows of proposed amendments to Regulation 32 of the Road Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations. [138735]

Mr. Jamieson: Officials have already met with representatives from the Glass and Glazing Federation and have fully answered their concerns.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will issue guidance on how the proposed amendments to Regulation 32 of the Road Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations should be enforced in respect of existing vehicles already fitted with (a) lightly and (b) heavily tinted windows. [138737]

Mr. Jamieson: Guidelines have already been issued to the Department's own enforcement staff in the Vehicle Operator Services Agency. These guidelines have been copied for information to the police.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Afghanistan

Mr. Hepburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further measures are planned to help combat opium production in Afghanistan. [138429]

Mr. Rammell: The UK is the lead nation on Counter Narcotics (CN) in Afghanistan and has a PSA target to contribute to a reduction in poppy cultivation in Afghanistan by 70 per cent. in five years with elimination in 10 years. The United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC) and the UK are working closely with the Afghan Transitional Administration to help them implement their National Drug Control Strategy.

The UK has developed a plan of activities to support the Afghan authorities in implementing their Strategy, including law enforcement, institution building, drugs demand reduction and alternative livelihoods for poppy farmers.

As the lead nation, the UK has committed £70 million over three years and posted additional personnel to Afghanistan to lead this work. It is also planned to hold a counter-narcotics conference in February 2004 in Kabul, involving Afghan and international representation, to encourage further international support for the delivery of the Afghan strategy. I will co-host this with President Karzai.

Ascension Island

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) when he next plans to make an official visit to Ascension Island; and for what purpose; [139102]

(2) if he will meet the hon. Members for (a) Totnes, (b) Vale of Glamorgan and (c) Cheltenham to discuss St. Helena before his departure to Ascension Island. [139103]

Mr. Rammell: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has no plans to visit Ascension Island in the near future.

However, I will pay a short visit to Ascension Island during a brief stop-over on the way to the Falkland Islands on 26 November 2003. During this visit I have no plans to meet the Legislative Council of St Helena, but will meet the Island Council of Ascension.

The Foreign Secretary has no plans to meet with the hon. Member for Totnes, my hon. Friend the Member for Vale of Glamorgan (Mr. Smith), and with the hon. Member for Cheltenham (Mr. Jones) to discuss St. Helena. However, I shall meet with them before my visit to discuss St. Helena and Ascension Island.

Embassy Closures

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many British embassies (a) have closed and (b) are expected to close in financial year 2003–04. [137100]

Mr. Rammell: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Banbury (Tony Baldry) on 6 October 2003, Official Report, column 1112W.

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many foreign embassies in the United Kingdom (a) have closed and (b) are expected to close in financial year 2003–04. [137101]

Mr. Straw: To date, no foreign diplomatic missions have closed in the United Kingdom in financial year 2003–04.

The Seychelles Government have informed us of their intention to close their High Commission in London on 31 December 2003.

Colombia

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what monitoring takes place to ensure that military aid to Colombia does not indirectly support paramilitary action against civilians. [137720]

Mr. Rammell: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer my right hon. Friend the Minister of State, Ministry of Defence gave on 10 November 2003, Official Report, columns 46–47W.

Community Liaison Unit

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the work of the Community Liaison Unit. [137534]

Mr. Mullin: The Community Liaison Unit (CLU) is based in the Human Rights Section of Consular Directorate in the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. It provides assistance to British Nationals in danger of a forced marriage overseas.

The CLU covers three main areas of work:

Casework:

Since the establishment of the CLU in October 2000, staff have dealt with over 600 cases of young British Nationals fearing or escaping from a forced marriage overseas. Forced marriage is a serious human rights abuse and is not sanctioned by any religion or culture. It is quite different from an arranged marriage, in which the parties give their full and free consent. The CLU has dealt with victims, male and female, aged between 11 and 39, and from a wide range of backgrounds including Sikh, Hindu, Catholic and Muslim to date.

Public sector guidance:

The CLU also works with other Government Departments to develop guidance for public sector services that may come into contact with forced marriage cases. To date the CLU has developed a video for schools, guidelines for police and are currently awaiting clearance on guidelines for social services. They have also provided support to link UK and foreign police services tackling some of these issues.

Outreach:

The CLU also work in the UK with NGOs, refuges, community groups, public sector, and faith groups to raise awareness of the issue and the help available to victims. Overseas, the CLU and posts (Embassies and High Commissions) work with partners in the judiciary, police and NGO community.

The Community Liaison Unit also worked in partnership with the British Muslim community from 2000–03 to organise the British Hajj Delegation to Mecca. Responsibility for the Hajj Delegation has now moved to the Middle East Assistance section of Consular Directorate. This section deals with consular assistance to distressed British Nationals in the Middle East, including Saudi Arabia, which means they are better placed to offer assistance to British Hajjis.

Correspondence

David Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs for what reasons the letter dated 14 October from the hon. Member for Walsall, North, Home Office ref: PO15398/3 concerning an immigration appeal was sent to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office; when the letter was transferred; and for what reasons an immigration appeals matter was sent to the Foreign Office. [139035]

Mr. Mullin: My hon. Friend's letter dated 14 October was transferred to UKvisas, the department responsible for entry clearance matters overseas, as the appeal related to a refusal of entry clearance. At the time of receipt of my hon. Friend's letter, the appeal did not show on Home Office records. The letter was therefore transferred to UKvisas by the Home Office on 4 November so that further enquiries could be conducted with our High Commission in New Delhi.

I will write to my hon. Friend in the next few days on this case.

Democratic Republic of Congo

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps are being taken to encourage British firms to trade with the Democratic Republic of Congo. [136345]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: UK Trade and Investment does not pursue an active programme to encourage British firms to trade with the Democratic Republic of Congo but it does provide information and advice to UK companies wishing to trade there, with particular emphasis on the mining sector.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the situation in the Democratic Republic of Congo. [137601]

Mr. Mullin: Encouraging progress is being made in the Democratic Republic of Congo (DRC). The Transitional National Government (TNG) in Kinshasa is functioning. Welcome moves have been made recently to improve the DRC's relations with Rwanda and Uganda. The TNG now provides the Congolese people with a real opportunity to end the cycle of violence and human rights abuses and start on the path to democracy and development.

Pockets of fighting remain, particularly in the east of the country. We are concerned by recent clashes between "Mai-Mai" and forces of the former Forces Armées Rwandaises/Interahamwe in eastern DRC. We welcome and support efforts by the UN Mission in the DRC (MONUC)—acting under their new Chapter VII mandate as authorised by UN Security Council Resolution 1493 (2003)—to tackle this problem.

In the north-eastern district of Ituri, MONUC's Ituri Brigade have responded robustly and effectively to outbreaks of violence and are now establishing themselves outside the regional capital of Bunia.

EU Constitution

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what amendments the Government will seek to make to article (a) I-14, (b) III-62 (2) and (c) III-63 of the draft EU Constitution; and if he will make a statement; [137155]

(2) whether the Government is seeking an explicit rejection of (a) further tax harmonisation and (b) a federal fiscal policy in the European Union in the draft EU Constitution; and if he will make a statement. [137156]

Mr. MacShane: The Government set out their approach to the Intergovernmental Conference in the White Paper, "A Constitutional Treaty for the EU: The British Approach to the European Union Intergovernmental Conference."

As the Government make clear in the White Paper, they will oppose proposals which might lead to unnecessary rigidities or undermine the central role of member states in determining their economic policies. They will work to ensure outcomes that will bolster stability, promote flexibility and enhance the ability of European countries to raise productivity and employment levels.

The Government also believe that the right of member states to determine their own tax policies is a fundamental one. Tax matters are a key component of national sovereignty and vital to the social and economic well-being of the country. That is why, in the IGC, the Government will insist that tax matters continue to be decided by unanimity.

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his policy regarding the energy chapter of the proposed European Union constitution as it affects the UK offshore oil and gas industry. [137759]

Mr. MacShane: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my right hon. Friend the Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, East and Wallsend (Mr. Brown) on 11 November 2003, Official Report, column 204W.

Council of Ministers

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs pursuant to his answer of 1 September 2003, Official Report, columns 796–97W, on the European Council of Ministers, what items were on the agenda for the Gymnich Informal Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs on (a) 1 September 2002, (b) 9 to 10 February 2002 and (c) 2 to 4 May 2003; when the agenda for each was received by his Department; whether the agenda was forwarded to the Scottish Executive; and if he will make a statement. [137294]

Mr. MacShane: The Gymnich Informal Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs can take in all the key policy issues of the day, as well as broader strategic issues. The last four meetings have addressed inter alia such issues as: enlargement, wider Europe, counter proliferation, Middle East Peace Process, Western Balkans, ESDP and Iraq.

The Gymnich offers Foreign Ministers an opportunity to discuss broad policy themes in an informal setting. The nature of the Gymnich means that there is no formal agenda. The Gymnich does not form conclusions or take decisions. Items to be discussed are set out in a letter from the Foreign Minister of the country holding the Presidency to his colleagues. However, the issues actually discussed at the Gymnich often vary from the preliminary suggestions in this letter.

We usually receive the Presidency's letter about two weeks before the Gymnich. The letter is not a document, which is automatically forwarded to the Scottish Executive. However here, as elsewhere, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office is alert to the need to consult the Scottish Executive on issues which touch on devolved areas in Scotland (including non-devolved matters which will have a distinctive impact of importance in Scotland) in line with the Concordat between HMG and the Scottish Executive.

India

John Mann: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the UK's relationship with India. [138202]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Bilateral relations have steadily strengthened over recent years. Our relationship with the Indian government is now closer than it has been for a long time across a broad range of policy areas. UK development assistance will increase to £250 million in 2004–05. We are encouraging closer education links between the UK and India, including through a substantial British Council programme. And there has been a marked increase in bilateral trade to 5 billion in 2001. The large British community of Indian origin plays a very important part in maintaining and developing the UK's relationship with India.

Indonesia

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many United Kingdom citizens were affected by the flash floods in the Gunung Leuser national park on Sumatra Island, Indonesia on 3 November; how many United Kingdom citizens have been identified as (a) missing, (b) injured and (c) killed; what assistance the Government has offered the Government of Indonesia in their search and rescue operations; and if he will make a statement. [137293]

Mr. Mullin: There are no reports of any British Nationals missing, injured or killed following the floods in the Gunung Leuser national park in Northern Sumatra. Our Consul-General went to Medan from 4 to 6 November and together with the Honorary Consul, visited the site, and checked with police, hospitals and mortuaries. We remain in close contact with the local authorities. Our Rapid Deployment Team was put on standby to help but was not, in the end, required.

The Indonesian Government has announced an assistance package of 1 billion Indonesian Rupiahs (£70,420) for reconstruction and relocation of displaced people. They have not sought any international assistance.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment his Department has made of the impact the imposition of martial law in Aceh on 15 May has had on (a) civil rights and (b) media freedom in the area; when this was raised with (i) the head of the Aceh Martial Law Administration, (ii) President Megawati Sukarnoputri and (iii) representatives of the Government of Indonesia; what assurances were (A) requested and (B) received; and if he will make a statement. [137709]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We remain concerned about the situation in Aceh. Most recently, I met the Indonesian ambassador on Monday 10 November and raised our concerns about the extension of martial law, and the Indonesian Government's recent decision not to allow the Tokyo Group (EU, Japan, US and the World Bank) to visit Aceh. Our ambassador to Indonesia wrote to the Indonesian Government in August 2003 requesting that NGOs be granted permission to return to Aceh. When I visited Indonesia on 3–4 June 2003, I stressed to President Megawati that Indonesian military action in Aceh should be proportionate and in accordance with international standards on human rights. We have not approached the head of the Aceh Martial Law Administration as our concerns about the situation in Aceh are raised through Indonesian Central Government. Some media have recently been granted permission to gain access to Aceh to report on the situation there. NGOs have not yet been granted permission to return to Aceh.

We, with our EU partners, urged the Indonesian Government to protect non-combatants in the on-going operations in Aceh, and to pursue a peaceful negotiated solution to the conflict. We remain convinced that a long-term solution to the Aceh problem can be achieved only through political negotiation and consultation between the Indonesian Government and the Acehenese people.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with (a) President Megawati Sukarnoputri, (b) representatives of the Government of Indonesia, (c) UK-based non-governmental organisations and (d) local non-governmental organisations concerning the extension of the state of martial law in Aceh; and if he will make a statement. [137710]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: On 6 November the Tokyo Group (EU, Japan, United States and the World Bank), which co-chaired the preparatory Conference on peace and reconstruction in Aceh, issued a statement to the Indonesian Government expressing their concern at the extension of martial law in Aceh. I met the Indonesian ambassador on Monday 10 November and also reiterated our, and the international community's, concerns about the extension of martial law. The UK continues to work through NGOs and the UN to provide assistance to the people of Aceh.

We with our EU partners, continue to urge the Indonesian Government to return to the negotiating table as soon as possible, as only political negotiation will offer a long term solution to this ongoing conflict. We stand ready to assist both sides in this process wherever appropriate.

International Terrorism

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps the Government are making to prevent links being formed between the Irish Republican Army and other international terrorist and guerrilla organisations. [136766]

Mr. MacShane: UK authorities co-operate with their international partners both bilaterally and through international fora to combat all forms of terrorism.

Iran

Mr. Best: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will undertake further joint initiatives with the foreign ministers of France and Germany with regard to relations with Iran. [137639]

Mr. Rammell: We will continue to work with like-minded governments in any combination required to impress on Iran the need to co-operate fully with the International Atomic Energy Agency and to rebuild international confidence in Iran's intentions. Following the visit to Tehran last month by my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary and his French and German counterparts, the onus now lies on Iran to deliver on its commitments. We are also calling on Iran to address international concerns on human rights, international terrorism and support for the Middle East Peace Process.

Iraq

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps the occupying powers are taking to ensure access to safe, legal pregnancy termination services in Iraq; what policy, and direct funding to achieve it, the UK is adopting on this matter; and if he will make a statement. [135435]

Mr. Rammell: Pregnancy termination services are a matter for the Iraqi Ministry of Health. Reproductive health services are available in Iraqi hospitals.

Israel

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the building by Israel of the security wall; and what discussions he has had with the Israeli Government on the issue. [137118]

Mr. Rammell: We recognise Israel's legitimate security concerns, and deplore the terrorist suicide bombings of Israeli civilians. We have urged the Palestinian Authority to do more to stop such bombings. But we believe that Israel's building of a wall, or fence, on occupied land is unlawful. We have repeatedly urged the Government of Israel to reconsider the route of the fence. My right hon. Friends the Prime Minister and Foreign Secretary have raised this issue on a number of occasions with the Israeli Prime Minister and Foreign Minister. My noble Friend the Baroness Symons of Vernham Dean also raised the matter with the Israeli Foreign Minster, Silvan Shalom, during her visit to Israel on 30 September. She also raised with Zvi Shtauber, Israeli Ambassador on 22 October and Yosef Paritzky, the Israeli Minister for National Infrastructure on 29 October.

We have made representations through our Embassy in Tel Aviv expressing concern at the route and likely impact of the fence. Foreign and Commonwealth Office officials have also made representations through the Israeli Embassy in London, most recently on 5 November.

Mr. Best: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the Israeli Government about the building of the wall. [137524]

Mr. Rammell: My right hon. Friends the Prime Minister and the Foreign Secretary made clear our concerns about the route of the wall, or fence, to the Israeli Prime Minister and Foreign Minister on a number of occasions. My noble Friend the Baroness Symons of Vernham Dean also raised the matter with the Israeli Foreign Minster, Silvan Shalom, during her visit to Israel on 30 September. She also raised with Zvi Shtauber, Israeli Ambassador on 22 October and Yosef Paritzky, the Israeli Minister for National Infrastructure on 29 October.

We have made representations through our Embassy in Tel Aviv expressing concern at the route and likely impact of the fence. Foreign and Commonwealth Office officials have also made representations through the Israeli Embassy in London, most recently on 5 November.

Nagorno-Karabakh

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the terms of reference of the UK-funded project to improve the prospects for a settlement of the Nagorno-Karabakh conflict. [137481]

Mr. Rammell: The UK will be funding a £2 million three year project aiming to improve the prospects for a permanent settlement of the Nagorno Karabakh conflict. The purpose of the project will be to improve understanding of the conflict among all stakeholders, to improve the conflict sensitivity of national and international actors in the region and to implement a number of activities which will contribute to the development of constituencies for peace in the region. This should improve the prospects for a permanent settlement of the Nagorno Karabakh conflict. We shall continue to encourage the governments of both Azerbaijan and Armenia to look to the future and build a better relationship between their two countries.

Our policy on the Nagorno Karabakh dispute is that we will support any mechanism for its resolution which both parties can accept and which has a realistic chance of delivering a lasting political settlement. We continue to support the work of the OSCE Minsk Group.

Northern Cyprus

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the conduct of the election in Northern Cyprus with particular reference to (a) legal action against the media, with reference to the cases of (i) Murat Kanatli, (ii) Basaran Duzgun, (iii) Hasan Hasturer, (iv) Suleyman Erguclu, (v) Hasan Kahvecioglu and (vi) Mehmet Davuleu, (b) the recent incidents involving the Peace and Democracy Movement, (c) the television interview by Mr. Denktash in which he claimed that Turkish Cypriots would be raped by Greek Cypriots, (d) the protest at Doganci (Elye) on 25 March and (e) the extent to which citizenship is being extended to settlers from mainland Turkey. [138777]

Mr. MacShane: The elections in north Cyprus on 14 December are of pivotal importance to the future of the island. This is an important opportunity for Turkish Cypriots to decide their own future. It is essential that these elections should be conducted in a transparent and democratic manner, free from interference. We are calling on all those who have influence, including Turkey, to help ensure the elections in the north are free and fair. We welcome indications from the Turkish Government of the importance they attach to this.

With regard to legal action against the media, we are deeply concerned about any attempts to limit press freedom. On the particular cases raised, we condemn the physical attack on the journalist Murat Kanatli, reportedly by the 'Grey Wolves' group in north Cyprus. The five further journalists mentioned were charged with a range of offences, including insulting the Turkish Security Forces and undermining the "state". These charges relate to articles reporting events at Doganci (Elye) on 25 March 2003, when opposition parties and pro-solution forces tried to hold a symbolic referendum in support of the Annan Plan. The police raided the protest, an army contingent removed the "ballot box" and the organisers were arrested. The timing of these prosecutions (seven months after the event) adds weight to the assertion that the indictments are politically motivated. Furthermore, we are concerned by reports that a number of these cases will be tried in a military court.

On the recent incidents involving the Peace and Democracy movement, we are concerned about reports of attacks on their party headquarters.

We do not wish to offer detailed comments on the remarks attributed to Mr Denktash. If he did say such things, it was clearly intended to be inflammatory.

We continue to have concerns about the number of "settlers" who have recently been granted citizenship in north Cyprus. The fact that this took place in such numbers immediately before an election is undermining confidence in the electoral process. The opposition in northern Cyprus has applied to the "Higher Electoral Council" (YSK) for an injunction barring those who have become citizens since the municipal elections in June 2002 from voting in the elections on 14 December. We await a ruling on that particular issue. The Turkish Cypriot courts have already barred two hundred people from voting in the elections who had been granted citizenship by the "Council of Ministers".

We will continue to monitor the situation in Cyprus very closely in the build up to elections on 14 December.

Nuclear Non-proliferation Treaty

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty; and if he will make a statement. [136700]

Mr. MacShane: The Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty (NPT) remains the cornerstone of the nuclear non-proliferation regime and receives the wholehearted support of the UK and the vast majority of the international community—indeed it has the greatest membership of any arms control treaty.

The NPT currently faces a number of challenges. It is not yet universal, and the UK continues to urge Israel, India and Pakistan to accede to the Treaty as non-nuclear weapon states. We are also concerned about North Korea's admission of a uranium enrichment programme and its announced intention to withdraw from the Treaty. This issue can only be resolved by DPRK's strict compliance with the NPT and full implementation of International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) safeguards.

The NPT has survived many challenges in its 33-year history and it remains a strong Treaty. The UK looks forward to participating fully in the 2004 NPT Preparatory Committee and the Review Conference in 2005.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to affirm negative security assurances given at the 1995 Non-Proliferation Treaty Review Conference; and if he will make a statement. [136701]

Mr. MacShane: The UK remains fully committed to the negative security assurance we gave in 1995. This negative security assurance was noted by the UN Security Council in its Resolution 984.

Pakistan

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from the Pakistan authorities in respect of recent security operations involving their premises; and if he will make a statement. [138583]

Mr. Mike O'Brien [holding answer 13 November 2003]: The Pakistani authorities have raised with us both in London and in Islamabad the contents of an article in the Sunday Times on 2 November. We have explained that it is the long-standing practice of successive governments not to confirm or deny allegations concerning the activities of the intelligence and security agencies.

People Trafficking

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the Government's estimate is of the number of children that were trafficked in (a) the world, (b) Europe and (c) the UK in each of the last 10 years; and what plans he has to reduce this number. [137978]

Mr. Rammell: We are committed to doing all we can to combat human trafficking. I refer my hon. Friend to the Written Statement made on 5 March 2003, Official Report, column 1085W, by my hon. Friend the Minister of State at the Home Office (Beverley Hughes) which sets out the actions we are taking.

The nature of trafficking means that it is a hidden crime and there are no reliable figures about children being trafficked into or out of the UK. There have been a few high profile instances of children being trafficked into and through the UK, but there is insufficient information to say if this is a growing problem. However, the very nature of the crime demands that is treated very seriously, which is why the Government have introduced criminal sanctions covering child traffickers and has tasked the Reflex group with co-ordinating intelligence on the problem.

Performance Monitoring

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the total cost was of (a) setting, (b) monitoring and (c) measuring the performance targets for his Department in 2002–03; and how many and what grades of civil servants monitor these targets. [137957]

Mr. Rammell: Performance targets for the Foreign and Commonwealth Office were agreed as part of Spending Review 2002. The monitoring and measurement of PSA targets forms part of departmental performance management. Performance management is an integral part of the day to day running of the Department, and as such it is not possible to separate the specific costs out. The monitoring of progress towards, and performance against, the Department's PSA targets is undertaken by a wide variety of staff at all levels of the organisation.

Religious Freedom (Egypt)

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will raise the issue of the Christians arrested in Egypt for their faith with the Egyptian Government and urge them to stop their action against Muslim converts to Christianity. [135500]

Mr. Rammell: We are looking into the reports to which the hon. Member refers. The Egyptian Constitution provides for equal public rights and duties without discrimination on the basis of religion or creed. Although we have received a number of letters on this subject from concerned people in the United Kingdom, we have seen no evidence of systematic official targeting of converts to Christianity. Where there is evidence of violation of human rights, we of course make our views known to the Egyptian authorities.

Sudan

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the progress of the peace process between the Government of Sudan and the Darfur rebel group. [136764]

Mr. Mullin: There has been a joint communiqué by the Government of Sudan (GoS) and the Sudan Liberation Movement (SLM) agreeing to return to Abeche in one month to discuss the political and wealth sharing annexes. The parties have also reached agreement on humanitarian access, which will be under the supervision of the Humanitarian Aid Commission, with the Tri-Partite Committee (GoS, Government of Chad and the SLM) being informed of developments.

We are not directly involved in the Abeche talks and it is difficult at this stage to make an assessment of progress. There have been allegations that the GoS have resumed military activities near SLM areas, and some indication that the SLM are disappointed that some of their proposals have been rejected.

However, we remain hopeful that both parties will adhere to the terms of the communiqué and resume the talks on time.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the main points were of the ceasefire agreement of 15 October 2002 between the Government of Sudan and the Sudan Liberation Movement/Army; what assessment his Department has made of the Sudanese bombings in Darfur on 2 November and their impact on the on-going negotiations in that region; and if he will make a statement. [136905]

Mr. Mullin: The main points of the Memorandum of Understanding on Cessation of Hostilities signed on 15 October 2002 in Kenya between the Government of Sudan and the Sudan People's Liberation Movement (SPLM) are as follows:

> the parties agree to create and maintain a conducive atmosphere throughout the negotiations; to cease hostilities in all areas and ensure military stand down for all forces; to freeze media wars and allow unimpeded humanitarian access to all areas.

The negotiations between the Government of Sudan and the Sudan Liberation Movement (SLM) in Chad, with the Chadian Government as mediators, are separate. We are aware of reports that the Government of Sudan have resumed military activities close to Sudan Liberation Movement (SLM) areas. The Government of Sudan has stated that it had bombed areas controlled by other militias who rejected the cease-fire. We are seeking corroboration of the reports including by visits by members of our embassy to the area.

The parties have now signed a joint communiqué resolving to meet in one month to discuss the political and wealth sharing annexes of the draft agreement. There has also been agreement on humanitarian access. We view these as positive steps.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment his Department has made of the progress made in negotiations between the Government of Sudan and the Sudan Liberation Movement/Army since the signing of the ceasefire agreement of 15 October 2002; what help his Department has (a) offered and (b) delivered to facilitate the process; and if he will make a statement. [136906]

Mr. Mullin: The Memorandum of Understanding on Cessation of Hostilities between the Government of Sudan and the Sudan People's Liberation Movement/ Army has continued to hold. The parties have made substantial progress in the past year. A Framework Agreement on Security Arrangements during the Interim Period, signed on 25 September 2003, is a further indication of the commitment of both parties to peace. The talks have adjourned for Ramadan and will resume on 30 November. We remain hopeful that a comprehensive peace agreement will be signed in the new year.

The UK observer team has consisted of an official based in Nairobi who can attend every session of the talks and handle local co-ordination between sessions, and the UK Special Representative for Sudan and the Head of the joint FCO/DFID Sudan Unit from London. In addition to financial contributions to the Intergovernmental Authority on Development (IGAD), the Government have provided experts on legal and security issues. We also contribute funding and personnel to the missions monitoring the agreements already reached.

Tariq Aziz

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what (a) medical help and (b) legal help and advice has been given to Mr. Tariq Aziz. [137730]

Mr. Rammell [holding answer 10 November 2003]: Tariq Aziz is in US custody. As the detaining power, these questions are a matter for the US authorities, who have said that they do not comment on the cases of individual detainees.

UKvisas

David Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will take steps to ensure that calls to UKvisas on 020 7008 8446 are answered by officials. [139034]

Mr. Mullin: I am sorry that officials did not answer UKvisas telephone number 0207 008 8446. Officials in UKvisas are expected to respond to all telephone calls and to use the voicemail facility. Unfortunately, on this occasion, this voicemail facility had not been updated to show that the official was out of the office, and did not give an alternative point of contact. Guidance has been re-issued to ensure that officials are aware of these procedures.

A full list of contact numbers for the Visa Correspondence Section has been circulated to MPs' offices and is also available on the parliamentary internet. UKvisas recently introduced a dedicated telephone hotline for Members of Parliament to deal with urgent cases and inquiries. This is manned throughout office hours. UKvisas has now resent a copy of this list to my hon. Friend's office.

United Nations Compensation Commission

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list payments from the United Nations Compensation Commission to (a) the UK Government and (b) other UK beneficiaries broken down by (i) amount and (ii) date; what disbursements have been made by the UK Government; to whom; for what amount; on what dates; and if he will make a statement. [137433]

Mr. Mullin: From 1996 to date, the United Nations Compensation Commission (UNCC) has paid a total of US$286,028,428.89 to the UK Government for distribution to individuals, companies and Government Departments. US$100,595,509.28 has been paid to individuals, US$180,329,020.61 to companies, and US$5,103,899.00 to Government Departments. All payments are routed through the UK Government. Details of the 420 payments to companies and six payments to Government Departments can be found on the UNCC website at www.uncc.ch. Details of payments to individuals cannot be disclosed for reasons of confidentiality.

Uzbekistan

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the human rights situation in Uzbekistan. [137432]

Mr. Rammell: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Truro and St. Austell (Matthew Taylor) on 20 June 2003, Official Report, column 437W, and the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Portsmouth, South (Mr. Hancock) on 21 October 2003, Official Report, column 536W.

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether Uzbekistan has agreed to BBC World Service re-broadcasting from within Uzbekistan. [138166]

Mr. Rammell: Uzbekistan has not agreed to BBC World Service re-broadcasting effectively from within Uzbekistan despite representations made to the Uzbek authorities by our embassy in Tashkent. We shall continue to lobby the Uzbek authorities on this issue.

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what funding other than that provided for the translating and printing of his Department's publications in Uzbek will be provided for assistance to Uzbekistan in judicial reform. [138167]

Mr. Rammell: In 2002, the Global Conflict Prevention Pool (GCPP) funded a £71,000 pilot electronic court reporting project in Uzbekistan. As part of the project, new electronic court reporting equipment was installed in four criminal courts in the Ferghana Region. Sadly, while receiving some positive reports from defence lawyers, this assistance has had its limitations; the equipment was abused or not used in practice and court reports were not made available when cases were appealed. Further plans to install the equipment in over 150 courts nation wide have been suspended until we receive firm evidence that the equipment provided thus far is being used effectively.

We shall continue to look for viable opportunities to assist Uzbekistan in reforming its judiciary and improving its human rights record in conjunction with EU, OSCE and other partners. We believe that lessening the dependence on often doubtful confessions and improving the focus on material and forensic evidence is the key to reducing levels of brutality and improving fairness in the judicial process. Through engagement with the authorities on development of an action plan to combat torture, we are also pressing for the political will for such reforms. Regionally we are organising a training workshop in Almaty in December to train judges and prosecutors in the judicial control of the practice of torture. Members of the Uzbek judiciary and procuracy will be invited to attend.

Western Sahara

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with representatives of the oil industry which are active in the Western Sahara. [130573]

Mr. Rammell: None.

Work-related Stress

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many cases of work related stress have been reported in his Department in each of the last three years; how much compensation has been paid to employees; how many work days have been lost due to work related stress, and at what cost, what procedures have been put in place to reduce work related stress, and at what cost; and if he will make a statement. [136851]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office does not currently keep statistics on work-related stress as a sickness absence type. No compensation has been paid to employees because of work-related stress in the last three years. All FCO staff (and dependants overseas) can discuss work-related (and personal) concerns in confidence with a trained welfare officer.

Since March 2002 the FCO has also provided a counselling and advice service to staff in the UK, and for staff and dependants overseas, via an Employee Assistance Programme. Stress, whether or not related to work, is one of the areas covered. The cost is approximately £50,000 pa.

Zimbabwe

Mr. Best: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contacts his Department has had with the Daily News in Zimbabwe. [137635]

Mr. Mullin: Our High Commission in Harare maintains regular contact with media organisations in Zimbabwe, including the Daily News, as part of its routine duties. High Commission representatives also attended the court hearings that followed the Daily News closure on 12 September 2003. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has since issued two press statements on 15 and 20 September condemning the Government of Zimbabwe for its harassment of the free and independent media in Zimbabwe. Copies of the press release are available on the FCO website: www.fco.gov.uk/policy/news/press-releases.

Representatives from the Daily News were in London recently to raise awareness of the plight of the newspaper. I met them on 6 November.

Mr. Best: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met President Mbeki to discuss the situation in Zimbabwe. [137638]

Mr. Mullin: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary last met President Mbeki in the margins of the United Nations General Assembly on 24 September. They discussed Zimbabwe.

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to urge the Commonwealth to expel Zimbabwe. [138407]

Mr. Mullin: Commonwealth decisions are made by consensus. The issue will be discussed at the Commonwealth Heads of Government Meeting next month.

The Commonwealth Secretary General has listed five benchmarks where there would have to be progress before Zimbabwe could be re-admitted to the Councils of the Commonwealth:

(i) Achieving national reconciliation and dialogue;

(ii) Repealing legislation that prejudices freedom of speech, of the press and of peaceful assembly;

(iii) Stopping harassment of the political opposition and civil society;

(iv) Addressing the recommendations of the two Commonwealth election observer group reports;

(v) Engaging the Commonwealth Secretariat and UN Development Programme on a proper land reform programme.

We see no case for readmitting Zimbabwe to the Councils of the Commonwealth while it remains in breach of these benchmarks and of the Harare Principles.

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to press the United Nations (a) to impose sanctions on Zimbabwe and (b) to debate the issue of Zimbabwe. [138408]

Mr. Mullin: We maintain regular contact with the UN Secretary General, the UN Development Programme and the World Food Programme about Zimbabwe. We supported EU resolutions at the UN Human Rights Commission in 2002 and 2003. Regrettably these resolutions fell to 'No Action' motions.

As my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary made clear to the House on 10 June 2003, Official Report, column 524, we would only go to the United Nations Security Council for a resolution when we believed that we would win one. Tabling a resolution on UN sanctions would be certain to fail and would only hand Mugabe a gratuitous victory.

We will continue to encourage the UN to focus on the crisis in Zimbabwe.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Asylum Seekers

Diana Organ: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people from the People's Republic of China sought asylum in the UK in (a) 2001, (b) 2002 and (c) 2003 to date. [134202]

Beverley Hughes: The table shows the number of asylum applications, excluding dependants, lodged in the UK by nationals of the People's Republic of China in 2001, 2002 and from January to June 2003. The next publication on asylum applications and other asylum statistics covering the third quarter of 2003 (July-September) will be available on 27 November 2003 on the Home Office Research Development and Statistics Directorate website at http://www.homeoffice.gov.uk/rds/immigration1.html.

Applications[1] lodged in the UK by nationals of the People's Republic of China, excluding dependants

	Asylum applications lodged in UK
2001	2,390
2002[2]	3,675
2003—January to June[2]	1,620

[1] All data are rounded to the nearest five.
[2] Provisional data.

Mr. Best: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the states regarded by his Department for the purposes of fast-tracking asylum applications as democratic. [132233]

Beverley Hughes: Applications are considered suitable for fast tracking if, upon initial screening, they are believed to be straightforward and capable of being decided within about seven to 10 days, and the applicant is from a country on the Fast Track Processes Suitability List (previously referred to as the "Oakington List"). A country will be added to the list only if we consider that it produces some types of claim which are capable of being decided quickly. There are no other specific requirements.

The countries (or part countries) presently appearing on the list are:

Afghanistan, Albania, Bangladesh, Benin, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Cameroon, Canada, Central African Republic, Chad, China, Congo, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Djibouti, Ecuador, Estonia, Equatorial Guinea, Gabon, Gambia, Ghana, Guinea-Bissau, Hungary, Iraq, Ivory Coast, India, Jamaica, Kenya, Latvia, Lithuania, Macedonia, Malaysia, Malawi, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Moldova, Mongolia, Mozambique, Namibia, Niger, Pakistan, Poland, Romania, St. Lucia, Serbia and Montenegro, Senegal, Slovakia, Slovenia, Somaliland, South Africa, Sri Lanka, Swaziland, Tanzania, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Turkey, Uganda, Ukraine, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Not all applications from the countries listed above are considered suitable for fast tracking. We are keeping under review the basis on which we consider an application suitable for special fast-tracking arrangements.

Mr. Keith Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what resources have been allocated to citizen advice bureaux specifically for their work with asylum seekers in each of the last five years. [132690]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 20 October 2003]: The National Asylum Support Service grant funds six voluntary sector organisations to provide reception assistance and one stop services to asylum seekers. The citizens advice bureaux are not one of the organisations funded to assist asylum seekers.

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (a) on what basis and (b) when decision making on Iraqi asylum applications resumed. [133595]

Beverley Hughes: On 16 June I announced the resumption with immediate effect of decision making on Iraqi asylum applications. I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Leeds, North-West (Mr. Best) on 15 July 2003, Official Report, column 266W.

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his Department's policy regarding travel arrangements for asylum seekers to visit relatives in the UK. [133955]

Beverley Hughes: The provision of support to eligible asylum seekers applying for asylum in the UK is intended to meet essential living needs. Regulation 9(4) of the Asylum Support Regulations 2000 provides that costs of travel are not to be regarded as an essential living need. National Asylum Support Service (NASS) does not provide funding for asylum seekers to travel by taxi to visit family or friends.

NASS does not make arrangements for supported asylum seekers to visit relatives living elsewhere in the UK. Neither does it make arrangements for those seeking asylum outside the country to travel to the UK to see relatives.

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seekers there were in (a) Hull and (b) the East Riding of Yorkshire in each month in the last two quarters for which figures are available; how long each application took to process; and how many applications were successful. [134052]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 23 October 2003]: The information is not available in the form requested.

The availability of information on the location of asylum seekers in the UK is currently linked to the support the asylum seeker receives. Asylum seekers in the UK either receive support from the National Asylum Support Service (NASS), local authorities or the Department for Work and Pensions (DWP), or are supporting themselves.

Information on outstanding asylum cases, initial decision outcomes and asylum case processing times relating to persons in particular areas of the UK is unavailable, as are statistics regarding the location of asylum seekers not in receipt of support.

NASS does not disperse asylum seekers to any areas in the East Riding of Yorkshire. The following table shows the number of asylum seekers (including dependants) accommodated by NASS and receiving subsistence only support in Hull as at the end of the last two quarters for which figures are available.

As at end of quarter	Number of asylum seekers (including dependants supported in NASS accommodation in Hull[1]	Number of asylum seekers (including dependants) receiving subsistence only support in Hull
March 2003	940	50
June 2003	75	60

From grant claims sent to the Home Office by local authorities, as at the end of March 2003, there were the following additional number[2] of asylum seekers being supported by the local authorities in Hull and East Riding of Yorkshire:

[1] Figures are rounded to the nearest 5 and may not sum due to rounding.

[2] Asylum seekers are not necessarily resident in the local authority that supports them due to the voluntary dispersal programme which operated prior to NASS.

Local authority	Number of singles supported as at end March 2003	Number of families supported as at end of March 2003
East Riding	5	0
Hull	20	5

Statistics on the number of asylum seekers supported by NASS in each region are available on the Home Office's Immigration and Asylum Statistics website: http://www.homeoffice.gov.uk/rds/immigration1 .html

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seekers, broken down by country of origin, applied in the (a) fourth quarter of 2002, (b) first quarter of 2003 and (c) second quarter of 2003. [134090]

Beverley Hughes: The table shows the number of asylum applicants, by nationality, for the last three published quarters. This data is not available by country of origin.

Information on asylum applications and other asylum statistics is published quarterly. The next publication covering the third quarter of 2003 (July—September 2003) will be available on the 27 November 2003 on the Home Office Research Development and Statistics Directorate web site at http://www.homeoffice.gov.uk/rds/immigration1.html.

Mr. Colman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration is given by the National Asylum Support Service to the health of an asylum seeker when a decision to disperse that asylum seeker is made. [134261]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 23 October 2003]: NASS will consider all the information known to it when deciding whether dispersal is appropriate. Where it is known this will include consideration of an asylum seeker's, or a dependant's, current medical condition.

Mr. Flook: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seekers the National Asylum Support Service has placed in (a) Somerset, (b) Devon, (c) Plymouth, (d) Bristol, (e) Bath, (f) Swindon, (g) Wiltshire and (h) Dorset in each month since January. [134551]

Beverley Hughes: The information is not available in the form requested.

Figures in respect of asylum seekers in receipt of accommodation support from the National Asylum Support Service (NASS) are published at the end of each quarter.

Figures for the areas requested as at the end of each quarter since January 2003 are shown in the table.

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his intended use of zones of protection to (a) house asylum seekers and (b) process their claims. [134593]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 27 October 2003]: The UK ideas were designed to stimulate a debate on improving the international asylum system. Our thinking continues to evolve. But we remain focused on the provision of better protection in asylum seekers' own regions to reduce the motivation to cross continents to make a claim; and to reduce the burden on the asylum system from those misusing it to gain entry to the UK for economic or other reasons. This is not about shifting the burden to poorer regions.

The majority of the world's refugees are already unable to access asylum systems in the European Union. It is therefore essential to strengthen protection in their region of origin, close to their homes, in order to ensure accessible and effective protection for people fleeing persecution and conflict. We have been working closely with UNHCR, the ED and others on this.

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to establish regional protection zones for asylum seekers outside the UK; and what recent discussions he has had with EU Governments on this matter. [134659]

Beverley Hughes: The UK's proposals were designed to stimulate a debate on improving the international asylum system. Our thinking continues to evolve and we are engaged in dialogue with the UNHCR, the European Commission and others to consider how we might put these ideas into practice. We are thinking less in terms of specific protection areas or 'zones' and more in terms of strengthening capacity in regions of origin. The aim would be to reduce the motivation to cross continents to make a claim; and to reduce the burden on the asylum system from those misusing it to gain entry to the UK for economic or other reasons.

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people who have applied for asylum in the UK were resident in each constituency in the UK in the last period for which figures are available. [134729]

Beverley Hughes: I regret that the requested information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Information is held on the location of all asylum seekers supported by NASS and figures are published at local authority level in the regular quarterly asylum statistics on the Home Office Research Development and Statistics Directorate website at http://www.homeoffice.gov.uk/rds/immigration1.html, and from the Library of the House. More detailed data on those supported by NASS, at parliamentary constituency level, is available on request.

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seekers are waiting to have their cases finally determined (a) 12 to 18 months, (b) 18 to 24 months, (c) two to three years and (d) three or more years after it was lodged. [135084]

Beverley Hughes: Information on final decisions is not readily available and complete information could only be obtained by examination of individual case files to obtain information on the outcomes of initial decisions, of subsequent appeals to the Immigration Appellate Authority and the Tribunal, and of cases which have been reconsidered. This would incur disproportionate cost. 31,800 cases were awaiting an ipitial decision at the end of June 2003 (the latest date for which published figures are available); of these 8,900 cases were work in progress ie the application had been outstanding for six months or less.

As at 30 June 2003, there were an estimated 20,000 appeals lodged with the Immigration and Nationality Directorate which had not been sent to the Immigration Appellate Authority (IAA); a proportion of appeals lodged do not result in appeal bundles being sent to the IAA. The total asylum work in progress in the IAA as at 30 June 2003, was 29,500 (19,900 at the Adjudicator Tier, 5,000 applications for permission to appeal to the Tribunal, and 4,700 Tribunal Appeals).

Provisional data show that 74 per cent. of applications (excluding withdrawals and third country cases[1]) received in 2002–03 were decided and served within two months. This exceeded the Government's target of 65 per cent. for 2002–03, and was a significant increase on the corresponding figure of 61 per cent. for 2001–02.

Information on the number of asylum applications awaiting initial decision and the timeliness of initial decisions is published quarterly on the Home Office website at http://www.homeoffice.gov.uk/rds/immigration1.html.

[1] Cases which may be the responsibility of other EU member states under the Dublin Convention.

Ms Drown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans the Government has to establish an independent country documentation centre in relation to asylum applications. [135337]

Beverley Hughes: There are no plans to establish an independent documentation centre. We recently established the independent Advisory Panel on Country Information under the Nationality Immigration and Asylum Act 2002 to make recommendations on the country information material produced by the Home Office and help to ensure that it is as accurate, objective and up to date as possible. The Panel is chaired by Prof. Stephen Castles of Oxford University and held its first meeting on 2 September 2003.

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to increase the financial support to local authorities responsible for the care of asylum seeker children as a result of the judgment of the Administrative Court in the case of Behre and Others v Hillingdon London Borough Council. [135453]

Beverley Hughes: Officials across Government are working together to resolve issues arising from the recent Court judgment. An announcement about the rate of grant will be made as soon as practicable after these decisions have been concluded.

The grant paid by the Home office to local social services departments is intended to cover the direct and immediate costs arising from the placement of children.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to ensure that children of asylum seekers receive education. [136785]

Beverley Hughes: It is Government policy that children of compulsory school age here as part of an asylum seeking family should receive education. This applies to all children, not just those whose parents are in receipt of support. Currently, with the exception of the small number of families who are detained, children are entitled to attend mainstream schools. For those who are detained a modular programme of education is provided at the relevant removal centre if detention is expected to last for more than a very short period. In the vast majority of cases, the detention of families with children will last for no more than a very short period, usually less than 14 days and often for only a few hours or days prior to removal.

In respect of children placed in accommodation centres, the operators of the centres will be required to provide education to children which mirrors that provided in mainstream schools.

Mr. Caton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many mistaken asylum removals there were in the latest period for which figures are available. [137103]

Beverley Hughes: The information requested is not available and could be obtained only by examination of individual case files at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Caton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to assign National Asylum Seekers Service hard case support to failed asylum seekers in Wales. [137104]

Beverley Hughes: There is nothing to prevent the majority of asylum seekers who have received a final negative decision on their claim from leaving the country immediately. Failed asylum seekers unable to leave due to circumstances entirely beyond their control may seek the short-term provision of accommodation under section 4 of the Immigration and Asylum Act 1999, as amended. NASS has entered into an arrangement with the west London YMCA to provide accommodation in these circumstances. Accommodation will be in one of a number of YMCAs across England.

Mr. Caton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to reinstate embarkation controls at United Kingdom borders. [137105]

Beverley Hughes: My hon. Friend will be aware from my written answer of 10 July that we are keeping the option for embarkation controls under review while exploring the extent to which new technology which were removed by the previous conservative administration could offer us more efficient ways of checking those leaving the country. Short term embarkation exercises continue and during October a number of such exercises took place at airports throughout the United Kingdom.

Mr. Caton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum applicants have become homeless after their claims for asylum have failed since 1 May. [137106]

Beverley Hughes: This information is not available. The legislation requires that, with the exception of families including children under the age of 18, support must be terminated 21 days after the receipt of the final negative decision on the asylum claim. NASS does not have information on the whereabouts of asylum seekers evicted from NASS properties.

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department pursuant to his answer of 10 June 2003, Official Report, column 808W, on asylum seekers, if he will make a statement on (a) the proportion of failed asylum seekers who notified a new address after their final refusal and (b) the proportion of those visited by the UK Immigration Service who were found living at the recorded address in the last 12 months. [137713]

Beverley Hughes: The Immigration and Nationality Directorate (IND) maintains databases containing address details for asylum seekers which are also recorded in the individuals' Home Office file. All applicants and their representatives are told of their obligation to notify the Home Office of any subsequent change of address. This may be done, either in person at one of 11 designated Reporting Centres or by post to the Change of Address Team (CoAT), based in Croydon.

The Casework Information Database (CID) is the main information technology (IT) system used by IND and allows information to be updated upon receipt throughout the asylum process. There is no link within CID between a change of address and the stage in the asylum process at which it occurred, e.g. before or after final refusal, and therefore the information requested is not available and could be obtained only by examination of individual case files at disproportionate cost.

UK Immigration Service visits to asylum seekers' home addresses are not routinely recorded on the national CID database. Again, the information requested is not available and could be obtained only by examination of individual case files at disproportionate cost.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the reasons are for his policy not to allow asylum seekers to work while they await a decision on their case. [138269]

Beverley Hughes: We are determined to maintain a robust asylum process which helps those fleeing persecution and not those who wish to come to the United Kingdom to work.

We believe that allowing new asylum applicants to work could act as a pull factor for those with unfounded asylum claims. Those migrants who wish to come here for the purpose of employment have a range of schemes open to them and we continue to develop more routes to allow people to come here and work legally in ways which boost our economy.

Until 23 July 2002 there was a concession which allowed asylum seekers to seek permission to take employment if no decision had been made on their application within six months of it being lodged.

By the time we abolished the concession in July last year it had become largely irrelevant and only applicable to a minority of applicants. This was due to the increased speed with which we delivered initial decisions on applications.

Those who were given permission as part of the concession will retain their permission to work until they receive a final decision on their application for asylum. We have also maintained a discretion to grant permission to work in exceptional cases.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on European Union asylum policies; what progress has been made with the creation of a common European asylum system; and what measures need to be put into place before this can be established. [138270]

Beverley Hughes: The Tampere European Council on 15–16 October 1999 set out that the Common European Asylum System should, in its first phase, include the following: a clear and workable determination of the State responsible for the examination of an asylum application; common standards for a fair and efficient asylum procedure; common minimum conditions of reception of asylum seekers; and the approximation of rules on the recognition and content of refugee status. The Tampere European Council also called for an agreement on the issue of temporary protection for displaced persons and the completion of work on the system for the identification of asylum seekers (Eurodac).

Of the measures described above, the Council of Ministers have adopted the following: the Council Regulation of 18 February 2003 establishing the criteria and mechanisms for determining the Member State responsible for examining an asylum application lodged in one of the Member States by a third-country national (known as "Dublin II"); the Council Regulation of 11 December 2000 concerning the establishment of "Eurodac" for the comparison of fingerprints for the effective application of the Dublin Convention; the Council Directive of 20 July 2001 on minimum standards for giving temporary protection in the event of a mass influx of displaced persons and on measures promoting a balance of efforts between Member States in receiving such persons and bearing the consequences thereof; and the Council Directive of 27 January 2003 laying down minimum standards for the reception of asylum seekers.

Negotiations are ongoing on the proposal for a Council Directive on minimum standards for the qualification and the status of third-country nationals and stateless persons as refugees or as persons who otherwise need international protection and the proposal for a Council Directive on minimum standards on procedures in Member States for granting and withdrawing refugee status.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much asylum seekers cost public funds in the last 12 months, per head of tax paying population. [138283]

Beverley Hughes: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave on 30 October 2003, Official Report, column 320W.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the Government will change its policy of deporting persons from the UK who come from countries which will accede to EU membership in May 2004; and what the reasons are for refusing leave to remain to people from accession countries. [138466]

Beverley Hughes: Nationals of the new member states will have full free movement rights from accession.

We currently intend to maintain full immigration control towards nationals of the new member states until accession. This means that we will continue to remove nationals from the new member states in the same circumstances as we do at present. The Government considers that, as a matter of policy, this approach is necessary in order to maintain an effective immigration control. In addition, the United Kingdom is under no legal obligation to grant free movement rights to nationals from the new member states before 1 May 2004.

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to monitor the whereabouts of asylum seekers affected by Section 55 of the Nationality, Immigration and Asylum Act 2002; and if he will make a statement. [138479]

Beverley Hughes: As part of the initial screening process asylum seekers, including those affected by Section 55 of the Nationality, Immigration and Asylum Act 2002 (NIA Act 2002), are required to provide proof of residence at a particular address. Residence at that address is then made a condition of their temporary admission into the United Kingdom, to which other conditions may be added, principally a requirement that the asylum seeker reports regularly to the Immigration Service (IS). The Immigration and Nationality Directorate (IND) maintains databases containing the information supplied, which is also recorded in the individual Home Office (HO) file.

All applicants, and their representatives, are informed of their obligation to notify the Home Office of any subsequent change of address. This may be done either, in writing to the Change of Address Team (CoAT) in Croydon or, in person to the nearest IS Reporting Centre or Local Enforcement Office (LEO).

The IS has 11 designated Reporting Centres managing reporting regimes and in addition a person may be required to report to mobile IS staff at a police station near their address. The reporting network will be further expanded by the planned introduction of both Accommodation and Induction Centres.

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received from faith groups concerning Section 55 of the Nationality, Immigration and Asylum Act 2002. [139231]

Beverley Hughes: There is no record of any representations from faith groups about Section 55 of the Nationality, Immigration and Asylum Act 2002.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when it became his Department's policy not to enforce removals of people refused asylum to (a) Iraq, (b) Zimbabwe and (c) Somalia; and what the reasons are for this policy in each case. [124239]

Beverley Hughes: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave on 11 July 2003, Official Report, column 1065.

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of asylum applications within the last 12 months for which figures are available were given initial decisions (a) within two weeks, (b) within two months, (c) within six months and (d) after a period of more than six months. [135429]

Beverley Hughes: In the 12 months from April 2002 to March 2003 (the latest period for which published figures are available), 74 per cent. of substantive applications (excluding withdrawals and third country cases[1]) were decided and served within two months and 9 per cent. were decided and served within two weeks. This compares to an average of 20 months when the right hon. Member for Folkstone and Hythe was Home Secretary. The two months figure of 74 per cent. exceeded the Government's target of 65 per cent. for 2002–03 and performance is on track to meet the target for 2003–04 of 75 per cent. The corresponding data requested for initial decisions decided and served within six months will be published in the next quarterly asylum statistics, data for initial decisions decided and served after a period of six months are not available.

Information on the timeliness of initial decisions is published quarterly on the Home Office website at http://www.homeoffice.gov.uk/rds/immigration1.html.

[1] Cases which may be the responsibility of other EU member states under the Dublin Convention.

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to have determined and finalised asylum cases which qualify under the asylum amnesty he announced recently. [137829]

Beverley Hughes: It is expected to take about six months to assess the bulk of those who may be eligible.

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) which service providers are supplying housing for asylum seekers in Essex; and in which towns those homes are provided; [135458]

(2) how many service providers are providing accommodation for asylum seekers; [135460]

(3) if he will make a statement on the current service provider contracts for housing asylum seekers; and when they will expire. [135462]

Beverley Hughes: The Immigration and Nationality Directorate has 22 contracts with providers for the supply of accommodation to eligible asylum seekers. Eight of these contracts are with the private sector, 12 with the public sector, one with a registered social landlord and one with a charity. The majority of these contracts are due to expire in 2005. There are no contracts providing accommodation in Essex.

In addition some asylum seekers are supported by local authorities under the interim regulations. No information is held centrally on contracts between individual authorities and their suppliers of accommodation.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seeker families in North East Lincolnshire are eligible to remain in the UK under the recently announced amnesty. [135631]

Beverley Hughes: Families who may qualify will be asked to complete a questionnaire. On the basis of the responses and other information on our files decisions will be made about whether they qualify or not.

The number of families in North East Lincolnshire who will be eligible for a grant of indefinite leave will therefore only be known once the responses are in and the cases have been processed.

Coroners Courts (Welsh Language)

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many coroners courts in Wales have the resources for simultaneous language translation. [132347]

Paul Goggins: The information requested is not available centrally. However, I understand that the Court Service is normally able to provide suitable facilities for use by other courts and tribunals in Wales on request.

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what action he is taking to ensure that, in inquests, the principles laid down in the Welsh Language Act 1993 are upheld; [132348]

(2) what discussions he has had with the Welsh Language Board and the Welsh Assembly on the adequacy of only providing sequential translation as an option for those wanting a Welsh language inquest. [132355]

Paul Goggins: Coroners in Wales are expected to comply with the requirements of the 1993 Act and take responsibility for making any necessary arrangements for translation services.

The Home Office assists by providing Welsh language versions of our public information leaflets for distribution. Neither the Welsh Language Board nor the Welsh Assembly has raised any concerns with us about these arrangements.

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many Welsh language inquests have used (a) sequential and (b) simultaneous translation in each year since 1997. [132349]

(2) how many applications for a Welsh language inquest have been (a) made and (b) refused in each county in Wales since 1997. [132356]

Paul Goggins: The information requested is not held centrally.

Headstones

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department pursuant to his answer of 27 January, Official Report, column 622W, on headstones, when he expects to issue guidance following the report of the Burial and Cemeteries Advisory Group. [131991]

Paul Goggins: The issues surrounding memorial safety are currently being considered by a working group made up of representatives from the burial industry and other organisations. Although it has taken slightly longer than we had anticipated, work is progressing well, and we hope to issue appropriate guidance on memorial safety to local burial authorities early next year.

Speeding Fines

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many fixed penalty notices were issued in relation to speeding offences captured by (a) mobile speed cameras and (b) fixed speed cameras in each year since 1997. [138358]

Caroline Flint: Available data on the number of fixed penalty notices issued for speeding offences detected by camera in England and Wales from 1997 to 2001 (latest available) are given in the table. 2002 data will be available in the New Year. Data by type of camera device used are not collected centrally.

Fixed penalties[1] for speeding offences detected by camera[2] England and Wales, 1997 to 2001

Year	Number
1997	288,600
1998	338,800
1999	423,000
2000	599,200
2001	877,500

[1] Paid, i.e. no further action

[2] Automatic cameras until 1998, all camera types from 1999

Work Permits

Mr. Donaldson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many work permits have been issued to foreign nationals to work in the UK in each of the past five years. [133520]

Beverley Hughes: The total number of work permit approvals for each of the past five years in the United Kingdom is as follows:

1998—53,962

1999—60,743

2000—88,651

2001—120,823

2002—136,151 (including NI figures from 1 September);

and in Northern Ireland:

1998—347 (1 May to 31 December)

1999—549

2000—863

2001—1,173

2002—1,410 (1 January to 31 August).

Asylum Reform Consultation

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will extend the three week consultation period on new legislative proposals on asylum reform to the minimum stipulated by Criterion 5 of Cabinet Office Guidelines on written consultations. [137245]

Beverley Hughes: As my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary first announced on 22 May this year, the Government are intending to introduce further legislative measures to address the specific problems of abusive appeals and undocumented applicants in the asylum system which continue to undermine the credibility of the system. As stated in the letter we sent to stakeholders, we consider that these are urgent measures and are therefore seeking to introduce them as soon as parliamentary time allows. While we are seeking the views of key stakeholders on the new provisions we believe that further reform is needed quickly if we are to capitalise on the success of our measures to date. Further dialogue is taking place with stakeholders on specific measures and a copy of the letter to stakeholders has been placed on the website of the Immigration and Nationality Directorate so that it is available to the public.

Administrative Court

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the estimated costs are of cases dealt with by the Administrative Court relating to section 55 of the Nationality, Immigration and Asylum Act 2002; and how many cases these costs cover. [135451]

Mr. Lammy: One thousand and ninety six cases have been dealt with at an estimated cost to the Court Service of £120,320; the costs of solicitors and counsel representing the claimants and defendants are not included in this figure.

Police Code of Conduct (Anonymity of Suspects)

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions a police officer has breached the Police Code of Conduct through unauthorised disclosure of information on a suspect since 1973. [138280]

Ms Blears: Information concerning the number of occasions a police officer has breached the Police Code of Conduct through unauthorised disclosure of information on a suspect since 1973 is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the amendments by the Association of Chief Police Officers to their media and disciplinary guidelines on the subject of anonymity for suspects will be completed. [138281]

Ms Blears: The amendments by the Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO) to their media and disciplinary guidelines have been completed. They give greater prominence to the issue of anonymity and underline that suspects should not be named before charge. They go on to highlight the possible dangers of doing so in that not only is there the risk of causing irreparable damage to a suspect's reputation, but also because unwarranted disclosure could leave a force open to civil proceedings. ACPO promulgated these guidelines to all forces in mid-October 2003.

Antisocial Behaviour

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how he plans to keep (a) the police, (b) environmental health and housing officers and (c) the community informed of new powers resulting from legislation concerning anti-social behaviour; and how he will monitor the implementation of the new legislation; [137823]

(2) how he proposes to improve the efficiency of the administration of the implementation of anti-social behaviour legislation and orders; [137825]

(3) what measures are in place to hold local authorities to account for their role in the implementation of anti-social behaviour policies. [138368]

Ms Blears: All Crime and Disorder Reduction Partnerships will be required to set out their strategy for tackling anti-social behaviour as part of their three-year Crime and Disorder Reduction Strategy. This includes setting out the tools that they intend to use, available through new or existing legislation. It is the role of Government Offices to monitor the success of the Partnership against this strategy.

In addition "Together: Tackling Anti-Social Behaviour" the Government's Action Plan sets out our strategy to ensure that all available powers are understood, that they are used effectively and that all agencies support their local communities. We will be setting up the together Actionline and website to provide accurate and high quality information on a full range of interventions and access to innovative solutions. The together Academy will bring together practitioners to provide advice and training on specific issues, and to share knowledge about new solutions to tackle anti-social behaviour.

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make additional funds available to local councils for the establishment of anti-social behaviour teams with (a) legal support and (b) people trained in taking witness statements. [138174]

Ms Blears: The Home Department has set aside £75 million for the next three years to tackle anti-social behaviour. The Home Office, through this money, will fund local authorities for work to tackle anti-social behaviour; however, it will be for individual local authorities to decide how they invest funding.

In addition through the together campaign the Anti-Social Behaviour Unit will improve performance across England and Wales by providing funding to support every Crime and Disorder Reduction Partnership (CDRP); establishing a together Academy, providing training to practitioners; and establishing a together Action Line, offering advice and information on all anti-social behaviour related matters.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the Minister for Crime Reduction, Policing and Community Safety will meet the hon. Member for Crosby to discuss anti-social behaviour. [138278]

Ms Blears: I would be happy to meet with my hon. Friend the Member for Crosby (Mrs. Curtis-Thomas). If she would contact my office a meeting can be arranged.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how he intends to tackle the problem of binge drinking and associated anti-social behaviour. [138365]

Ms Blears: The answer I gave my hon. Friend on 16 September 2003, Official Report, column 659W, set out a number of legislative measures that are already in place to help tackle anti-social behaviour associated with drinking alcohol.

The Interim Analytical Report published by the Prime Minister's Strategy Unit in September highlighted the scale of alcohol misuse in England. The final report setting out the Alcohol Harm Reduction Strategy for England will be published in time for implementation to begin in 2004 and will contain measures to tackle the range of harms associated with alcohol misuse, including binge drinking and alcohol related crime and disorder.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on how powers of the police have been strengthened since 1997 to deal with antisocial behaviour. [138366]

Ms Blears: The Anti-social Behaviour Bill provides a number of new powers for the police:

1. Powers to close premises that are being used for drug dealing or use and causing disorder or serious nuisance.

2. The ability to issue penalty notices for truancy, for use when conducting truancy sweeps with the education welfare service

3. A power to designate areas with a history of anti-social behaviour where they can disperse groups causing intimidation and take children home who are out on the streets late at night.

4. New controls to tackle the misuse of air weapons and replica guns.

5. Improved powers for dealing with public assemblies and trespassers. This will help the police to deal with problems caused by intimidating protestors and illegal raves. There is a new power to move on trespassing encampments where there is a relevant site available.

6. New powers for local authorities to intervene in neighbourly disputes regarding high hedges.

7. Extension of the power to issue penalty notices for disorder to 16 and 17 year olds.

8. The Criminal Justice Bill will extend police stop and search powers to circumstances where they have reasonable suspicion that articles made, adapted or intended for use in offences of criminal damage are being carried.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department who will make up the nuisance neighbours panels; when they will be set up; how they will be able to be contacted; what powers they will have; and what measures will be put in place to ensure complainants are protected. [136271]

Ms Blears: Nuisance neighbour panels will be going live in early 2004. Work is currently being undertaken on the composition of the panels, and finalising their core functions. Once up and running the panels will be contactable through the Anti-Social Behaviour Unit in my Department. All complainants will be anonymised.

Bechtel

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the contracts for consultancy and other work carried out by Bechtel for agencies responsible to his Department and its predecessor in each year since 1997, stating in each case (a) the nature of the work, (b) the value of the contract and (c) the duration of the contract; and if he will make a statement. [137887]

Fiona Mactaggart: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on the 27 October, Official Report, column 109W. This answer included information provided by the agencies responsible to the Home Office.

Biometrics

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what research projects his Department has funded on the use of biometrics as a secure form of identification. [139225]

Beverley Hughes: We have funded a study by the National Physical Laboratory (NPL) on the use of iris, fingerprint and face biometrics in an identity card scheme, the results of which are on the Home Office website.

We have funded research into fingerprints through the Police Information Technology Organisation (PITO) and its predecessors, from the 1970s, chiefly through periodic 'benchmark' tests of fingerprint matching systems to ensure accuracy and security.

We have also used biometrics in several operational programmes such as the Immigration and Nationality Directorate's ARC scheme.

Bomfords/Pontrilas Sawmills

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department following the raids last month on two employers in the Midlands, how many of the people detained were people who had claimed asylum, had been refused but could not be returned to their country of origin because it was not safe; how many, after investigation, were found to have the right to remain but had not obtained national insurance numbers; how many were found to have the right to work and a national insurance number; of the other employees working at Bomfords and Pontrilas sawmills who were interviewed, how many were found to have the right to remain but had not obtained national insurance numbers; and how many who had the right to work were being paid below the minimum wage. [137712]

Beverley Hughes: A total of 44 individuals were detained during the course of the operations at Bomfords and Pontrilas sawmills. None fitted the above criteria. The individuals were detained because they were removable from the United Kingdom.

The operations were aimed at the detection and removal of immigration offenders. Once an individual's immigration status was established, no further inquiries were conducted on site. It is not possible therefore to give details relating to the possession of national insurance numbers.

Once an employee established to an immigration officer that he or she had the right to remain in the United Kingdom, no further inquiries were required.

Inquiries were not made into exact pay levels at Pontrilas, but it is believed that there were no staff being paid less than the minimum wage. At Bomfords the majority of labour had been provided by agencies and were employed on a piece work basis.

Child Abuse (Investigations)

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make a statement on the outcome of discussions with the Association of Chief Police Officers regarding mandatory audio and visual recording of police interviews with (a) complainants and (b) other significant witnesses in investigations of past cases of abuse in children's homes; [138473]

(2) if he will make a statement on discussions with the Association of Chief Police Officers regarding the safeguards in investigations of past cases of abuse in children's homes. [138472]

Ms Blears: I am corresponding with the Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO) regarding the investigation of past cases of child abuse in children's homes.

I wrote to the hon. member on 4 November offering a meeting to discuss these matters.

Citizenship Applications

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how long it has taken to deal with citizenship applications in the last 12 months for which figures are available; how many citizenship certificates were issued in each year since 1993; and what the total income from citizenship applications has been since 1993. [133463]

Beverley Hughes: There are no data published on actual decision times to determine applications for British citizenship. Information on expected waiting times for citizenship applications are available on the IND website; www.ind.homeoffice.gov.uk and is periodically updated. As at September 2003 the expected average processing times were:

Naturalisation	7.7 months
Adult registrations	1.7 months
Minor registrations	7.9 months
Other registrations	1.3 months

Delays arise in part because applications are not always accompanied by complete documentation. Thus, the time taken for a particular individual application may be significantly less than the average if all relevant documentation has been sent with the application form. Statistics on the applications for British citizenship granted since 1993 are shown in the table below:

Year	Applications granted
1993	45,795
1994	44,035
1995	40,515
1996	43,070

1999	54,900
2000	82,210
2001	90,295
2002	120,145

Information on total income from citizenship applications before 1996 is unavailable. Information for 2000–01 is also unavailable. Total income from citizenship applications from 1996–2000 and after 2001 are shown in the table.

Community Support Officers

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Community Support Officers there are in Lincolnshire constabulary. [138227]

Ms Blears: There are currently 43 Community Support Officers on patrol within Lincolnshire police force and one vacancy.

The Home Office funds or part funds 42 of these posts. The other two, deployed within caravan sites in East Division's (Skegness), are wholly locally funded.

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Community Support Officers (a) there are in 2002–03 and (b) there will be in 2003–04 in each police authority in England and Wales. [138228]

Ms Blears: The table shows the number of Community Support Officers (CSOs) recruited by each force by 1 April 2003 and the Home Office estimate for the number of CSOs in each force on 1 April 2004.

The figures given include both Home Office funded CSOs and those CSOs funded by local arrangements who have already been recruited. I anticipate that the total numbers for April 2004 will be larger for some forces as they are working to recruit additional locally funded CSOs.

Crime Statistics (Lincolnshire)

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many offences were recorded by Lincolnshire police force in each year since 1995, broken down by category. [138226]

Ms Blears: The requested information is given in the table.

There was a change of counting rules for recorded crime on 1 April 1998, which had the effect of increasing the number of crimes counted. Numbers of offences for years before and after this date are therefore not directly comparable.

The National Crime Recording Standard (NCRS) was introduced across England and Wales in April 2002. Lincolnshire Police Force introduced the Standard in March 2002. Broadly, the NCRS had the effect of increasing the number of crimes recorded by the police. Therefore, following the introduction of the Standard, numbers of recorded crimes are not comparable with previous years.

Discrimination (Catholic Subjects)

Mr. Gummer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what restrictions upon Her Majesty's Catholic subjects are contained in legislation for which his Department is responsible; and whether he intends to introduce legislation to repeal them as part of the new legislation against religious discrimination. [137816]

(2) whether he intends to introduce legislation to remove discrimination against Catholic subjects of the Crown; and if he will make a statement; [137817]

(3) if he will make a statement on his policy towards the enforcement of laws that discriminate against Her Majesty's Catholic subjects. [137818]

Fiona Mactaggart: I will write to the right hon. Member about the matters he has raised.

Donald Russell McLachlin

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the application by Donald Russell McLachlin (Ref: M525305) for indefinite leave to remain in the UK will be determined; and what the reasons for the delay are. [133567]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 21 October 2003]: Mr. McLachlin's application was lodged in April. It could not be decided on initial consideration. Cases that cannot be initially decided are dealt with in order of receipt. The majority of these are expected to be decided within six months although particularly complex cases can take longer.

Applications received on or after 1 August attract a fee and we intend that decisions will be reached on these within 13 weeks. Mr. McLachlin's application was determined on 1 October and he has been informed of this decision.

I wrote to the hon. Member on 15 October to set out the position and suggest how Mr. McLachlin might proceed with an application.

Dungavel Immigration Removal Centre

Mr. Peter Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the annual running cost of Dungavel Immigration Removal Centre was in the most recent year for which figures are available. [131553]

Beverley Hughes: The most recent year in which there are figures available for the annual running cost of Dungavel Immigration Removal Centre is 2002–03. The annual running cost for this year was £4,778,287.

Mr. Peter Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to visit Dungavel. [131554]

Beverley Hughes: As Minister for Immigration I visited Dungavel Immigration Removal Centre in September last year. I currently have no plans to make a return visit.

Mr. Peter Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what procedures are in place to maintain teaching standards at Dungavel in circumstances where there has been a large admission of children. [131555]

Beverley Hughes: There is limited family accommodation at Dungavel Removal Centre and the number of families at the centre fluctuates from day-to-day. For example, during September there were, on any one day, as few as two school age children at Dungavel and never more than 15. The nature of immigration detention is such that there is never a large admission of children as might be the case in local schools and special arrangements do not therefore need to be made for such an eventuality.

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the cost per week is of detaining (a) a single adult asylum seeker in Dungavel, (b) a child of an asylum seeker in Dungavel, (c) a single asylum seeker in Tinsley House and (d) a child of an asylum seeker in Tinsley House. [131654]

Beverley Hughes: The average cost per place per week for detaining a person is £655 for Dungavel and £762 for Tinsley House for 2003/04.

These figures are an average cost per head. It would incur disproportionate cost to break the figures down for adults and children.

Mr. Peter Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on arrangements for the welfare of children being kept at Dungavel Immigration Removal Centre. [131557]

Beverley Hughes: Families with children who are detained at Dungavel Removal Centre are accommodated in a separate family unit within the centre. Each family room has en-suite facilities. There is a separate family canteen that provides three meals a day as well as a milk kitchen with facilities for younger children. There is a crèche for babies and younger children. There is education provision for all school-aged children. The curriculum includes maths, English, art and history. Science is also included and outside contacts have been set up with various agencies to facilitate the science programme. Children also have access to a library, televisions and videos and a variety of games. There is a multi-faith room at Dungavel which children are able to access with their parents.

Children have access to the open air throughout the day. There is an outdoor play facility for the younger children and separate gym time is made available for children each day.

There are health care facilities for both children and adults, with 24 hours, seven days a week on site nursing care and a GP available for surgery throughout the week.

Mrs. Geraldine Merchant

Mr. Dhanda: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take action to ensure that the passport of Mrs. Geraldine Merchant, Ref: M1012795, is returned to her as soon as possible. [135319]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 30 October 2003]: My hon. Friend is aware that the circumstances of this case required a full investigation. However, Mrs. Merchant's application should be decided within the next two months. Her passport can be returned to her before then if she wishes but will not be endorsed with leave to remain.

Ethnic Minorities

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many staff were employed by the Prison Service in England and Wales as (a) governor grade, (b) prison officers and (c) other staff on the latest date for which figures are available; and how many in each category were (i) black and (ii) Asian. [138396]

Paul Goggins: Information on the recorded ethnicity of Prison Service staff at 31 October 2003 is contained in the table.

Ethnic group	Senior operational managers[1]	Officers[2]	Other staff	Total
White	1,170	20,790	18,562	40,522
Asian	6	199	456	661
Black	10	432	768	1,210
Other Minority Ethnic	21	315	330	666
No Data	85	2,189	1,914	4,188
Total	1,292	23,925	22,030	47,247

[1] Refers to Governor grades

[2] Includes prison officers, senior officers and principal officers

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were stopped and searched by each police force in England and Wales in each of the last 10 years; and how many of the people stopped were (a) black and (b) Asian. [138401]

Ms Blears: Information on the number of stops and searches under section 1 of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 and other legislation for the years 1991 to 1996, broken down by police force area, are given in Table 1 which has been placed in the Library. These figures include stops and searches of persons and vehicles. During this period there was no information collected giving the required breakdown on the ethnic group of persons stopped and searched.

Information on stops and searches of individuals from 1996–97 to 2001–02 is presented in Table 2 which has been placed in the Library, and includes a breakdown by the specific ethnic group groups requested.

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers in England and Wales were in post on the latest date for which figures are available, broken down by rank; and how many in each rank were (a) black and (b) Asian. [138482]

Ms Blears: The total number of officers in post at 31 March 2003 is contained in Table 4 of Home Office Statistical Bulletin 11/03. Information on the number of minority ethnic officers by rank is contained in Table 9. A copy of the publication including Tables 4 and 9 is available in the Library.

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many new police officers were appointed during 2002; and how many of those newly appointed were (a) black and (b) Asian. [138483]

Ms Blears: The number of full time equivalent officers joining the police service in the 12 months to 31 March 2003 was 13,126. Of these, 679 (5.2 per cent.) were minority ethnic officers. There is no breakdown available for Black and Asian officers.

EU Enlargement (Migration)

Mr. Djanogly: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, what estimate he has made of the number of people from countries acceding to the EU who will take up jobs in the UK in each of the three years following accession. [135080]

Beverley Hughes: Research conducted by University College London for the Home Office, published in June this year ("The impact of EU enlargement on migration flows", Home Office On-Line Report 25/03), estimates that the numbers of people who will migrate to the UK from the new member states in the years following enlargement will not be significant. The research corroborates a number of other independent studies which have been summarised in reports by the European Commission in 2000 and the former Department for Education and Employment in 1999. The estimates for those expected to migrate comprise both those coming for purposes of work and those coming for other reasons such as education.

We will monitor the situation and the UK has the right to reintroduce restrictions in the event of an unexpected impact on the standard of living or level of employment in a particular region or occupation.

Fireworks

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what the estimated cost was of the misuse of fireworks not sold in retail outlets and not used in organised displays in each of the last four years; [138002]

(2) what estimate she has made of the criminal damage caused by Chinese bomb fireworks in each of the last three years. [137976]

Ms Blears: This information is not held centrally. However, Merseyside Police estimate they have spent £500,000 dealing with fireworks incidents so far this year. The recent use of fireworks as improvised explosive devices in the North-West is of particular concern.

Fireworks misuse is a nuisance and can be a danger to the public. That is why, on 5 November 2003, we announced our intention to introduce a package of measures banning possession of fireworks by under 18s, banning possession of display fireworks by members of the public and increasing penalties for throwing fireworks in the street. Further measures tackling fireworks nuisance will be taken forward in the New Year.

Forensic Science

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many pathologists on the Home Office Register of Forensic Pathology have been removed from the list since its creation; [84279]

(2) how many years each member of the Police Advisory Board for Forensic Pathology has served; and how many members have retired; [84278]

(3) by what means a coroner may alert the appropriate authorities of perceived professional shortcomings of a forensic pathologist; [84281]

(4) by what means he monitors the performance of forensic pathologists; [84280]

(5) for what reason the Police Advisory Board for Forensic Pathology's Disciplinary Tribunal recused itself before the completion of its hearing on the one occasion in the last 10 years on which it has met; what the consequences were of its recusal; and what subsequent professional activity has been undertaken by the pathologist who was the object of the complaint; [84275]

(6) if he will place the terms of reference of the Police Advisory Board for Forensic Pathology, the list of current members and a copy of the Board's Complaints and Disciplinary Procedures in the Library; [84274]

(7) to whom the Police Advisory Board for Forensic Pathology reports; and if he will place the most recent report of the Board in the Library; [84277]

(8) how many times the Police Advisory Board for Forensic Pathology has met since its creation; and if he will place minutes of its meetings in the Library. [84276]

Ms Blears: The issues raised have been dealt with in a letter from my hon. Friend the Member for Coventry, North-East (Mr. Ainsworth) on 11 June.

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations he has received (a) in favour of and (b) opposed to the privatisation of the Forensic Science Service. [137531]

Ms Blears: In his statement of 17 July 2003, my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary explained the reasons for the proposal that the Forensic Science Service should become a public-private partnership. To date, there have been (a) no representations in favour of the proposal, and (b) 120 representations expressing concern about the future status of the organisation.

Fraudulent Passport Applications

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department who is responsible for investigating fraudulent passport applications. [139057]

Beverley Hughes: It is one of the UK Passport Service's (UKPS) primary responsibilities to ensure that UK passports are issued only to those people who are entitled to them. UKPS are responsible for identifying fraudulent applications for passports and for mounting investigations into such applications. Once initiated, these investigations are progressed in partnership with police, Immigration Service, and other law enforcement agencies.

Haslar Removal Centre

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what briefings have been given to prison staff at Haslar Removal Centre relating to (a) the extension of the centre, (b) its transfer to the Immigration Service and (c) its possible privatisation. [135596]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 4 November 2003]: A project team has been set up to look at proposals to transfer operational responsibility for the centre from the Prison Service to IND. Staff and Trade Unions have been informed of this by means of a letter. The project team will continue to keep them informed throughout the process. The centre manager and his senior management team at Haslar were involved in a feasibility study to look at options to extend Haslar. The options did not prove to be cost effective and therefore there are no plans at present to develop the removal centre at Haslar.

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans other than those proposed by his Department have been put forward for the extension of the Haslar Removal Centre; and what the planned new accommodation total is in the proposals put forward by (a) his Department and (b) other bodies. [135597]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 4 November 2003]: Indicative plans were prepared which looked at a number of options to extend Haslar. However, these were simply architectural sketch plans and no detailed plans have been prepared. No plans have been submitted for planning approval and at this time there is no intention of doing so. There are currently no plans to expand the Removal Centre at Haslar.

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans for the extension of Haslar Removal Centre have been produced by Capita. [133065]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 20 October 2003]: Indicative plans were prepared by Capita for some expansion and improvement to Haslar Removal Centre, but we have no plans at present to take this forward.

Entitlement Cards/Identity Fraud

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will publish a summary of the responses to the consultation paper on Entitlement Cards and Identity Fraud. [138663]

Beverley Hughes: On 11 November 2003, my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary made a Statement to the House announcing the publication of "Identity Cards—A Summary of Findings from the Consultation Exercise on Entitlement Cards and Identity Fraud". This followed a lengthy public consultation under Cabinet Office guidelines.

The publication summarises the responses and the results of surveys and polling which demonstrated substantial commitment to some form of identity card, a term the public preferred to the term "entitlement card".

The Government has decided to begin the process of building a base for a national compulsory identity cards scheme. The scheme is a key part of a comprehensive strategy to contain threats from illegal migration and working, organised crime and terrorism, identity theft and fraud and fraudulent access to public services, for example by illegal immigrants who have no entitlement to them.

Imams (Entry Clearance)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Imams have been given clearance to enter and remain in the United Kingdom in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [136104]

Beverley Hughes: Information on the number of Imams given clearance to enter and remain in the United Kingdom in each of the last five years is not available except by examination of individual case-files at disproportionate cost.

Immigration

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what criteria are used by immigration officers, who release a person from immigration detention, to determine whether an address is suitable as one where the person will be required to live under the terms of the temporary admission; and what checks immigration officers are expected to carry out before releasing a person from detention to ensure an address meets these criteria. [124238]

Beverley Hughes: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave on 11 July 2003, Official Report, column 1068.

Mr. Best: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what actions he is taking to ensure that UK immigration rules are fully compliant with the Human Rights Act 1998. [132234]

Beverley Hughes: Paragraph 2 of the Immigration Rules states that all immigration staff will carry out their duties in compliance with the provisions of the Human Rights Act 1998. In preparing changes to the Immigration Rules, my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary takes detailed advice as part of his consideration of questions of compatibility with the European Convention on Human Rights from the Immigration and Nationality Directorate officials and Home Office lawyers. Judgments in individual immigration appeal cases raising human rights issues are also carefully examined for any wider potential implications for the Rules.

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set out his (a) proposals and (b) targets for improving the speed and quality of service for those who seek to enter the United Kingdom lawfully under the immigration rules. [134049]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 23 October 2003]: The UK Immigration Service is committed to processing bona fide passengers with minimal delay, and has signed up to international standards for passenger processing times. These are embedded in the UK Immigration Service's annual business objectives, and are kept under review.

The International Air Transport Association (IATA) standards for processing passengers are:

45 minutes for non-EEA passengers.

with minimal delay for EEA passengers.

The UK Immigration Service's performance is also measured independently against the British Airports Authority (BAA) quality of service management figures, which includes queuing times. The Immigration Service continues to score well against this measure.

The Immigration Service is currently drawing up service level agreements with a number of port operators to monitor passenger processing times.

Mr. Lyons: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the benefits to the UK economy of authorised immigration. [134136]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 27 October 2003]: In 2001 the Home Office published a wide ranging review of the effects of migration on the UK Economy, and in 2002 its Research Directorate published four separate research reports on migrants' fiscal effects and their labour market outcomes and impacts. The studies considered various aspects of immigrants' characteristics and contribution to the UK economy.

The overall impact is positive—migrants have no significant adverse impact on non-migrants' employment and, if anything, had a positive impact on wages, suggesting they bring complementary skills. The evidence demonstrates that migrants contribute to economic growth, productivity, innovation and public finances. The fiscal study estimated that immigrants made a net £2.5 billion contribution to the economy in 1999–2000. Immigrants also help fill jobs that companies have been unable to fill from the domestic labour force.

Mr. Simon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will amend paragraph 302 of the Immigration Rules to permit an accompanying child to be granted a two year visa. [134555]

Beverley Hughes: The Immigration Rules will be changed shortly so that children qualifying under paragraph 302 of the rules may be granted limited leave to enter for up to two years.

Mr. Dhanda: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department under what circumstances the Department may retain for up to three years the passport of an individual applying for (a) SET (M) and (b) SET (F). [135318]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 30 October 2003]: In both cases a passport is normally held while the application is being considered. It is unusual for documents to be held for three years as non-asylum applications are normally considered within a 12-month period. However, only in exceptional circumstances where, for example, a further investigation is required by the Immigration Service might this time be exceeded.

Documents can be returned on request at any time before a decision has been made although they may not be endorsed.

Immigration Checks (Northern Ireland)

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what immigration checks are in place at airports and ferry terminals in Northern Ireland; and under what legislation they are operating. [133296]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 21 October 2003]: Permanent immigration controls operate on passengers arriving in Northern Ireland from outside the Common Travel Area (i.e. the United Kingdom (UK), Channel Islands, Isle of Man and the Republic of Ireland) under powers contained in the Immigration Act 1971 which allows immigration officers to examine passengers for the purpose of determining whether they qualify for entry, and to refuse entry to those who do not.

Permanent facilities exist for examination of such passengers at Belfast International airport and temporary facilities operate at other airports within Northern Ireland as required. No permanent control facilities exist at any ferry port as there are no regular international ferry services.

In addition to the above arrangements, UK Immigration Service has a responsibility for detecting immigration offenders within the UK, including Northern Ireland.

Separate powers exist within the 1971 Act which enable Immigration Officers to arrest those reasonably suspected of being in the UK unlawfully and for the detention, pending removal from the UK, of those found to be here unlawfully.

UK Immigration Service staff periodically conduct exercises at the main air and ferry ports in Northern Ireland to identify immigration offenders travelling between Northern Ireland and Great Britain. Offenders so identified are arrested or detained under the powers referred to above.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what restrictions there are upon immigration checks at airports and ferry terminals within Nothern Ireland in relation to the Common Travel Area; and on what basis immigration officers distinguish between those travelling within the CTA and those outside it. [133297]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 21 October 2003]: The Immigration Act 1971 places statutory obligations upon airlines and ferry companies to ensure that passengers arriving from outside the Common Travel Area (CTA) are presented to an immigration officer, who has the power to examine them for the purpose of determining whether they qualify for entry, and to refuse those who do not. At Belfast International airport a separate pier exists for international passengers. At other airports, and when necessary at ferry ports, ad hoc arrangements are made to ensure that international passengers are similarly segregated from those on journeys within the CTA.

No immigration controls operate on passengers travelling on journeys within the CTA. However, if identified by a police officer or by other sources of intelligence, Immigration Officers may arrest or detain immigration offenders travelling on flights within the CTA or indeed anywhere in the UK, with a view to their removal from the UK. In doing this they use separate powers of arrest and detention contained within the 1971 Act.

Immigration Statistics

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent estimate he has made of the number of people in the UK who are not recorded in official statistics as authorised immigrants. [135594]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 4 November 2003]: There is currently no official estimate of the number of people in the UK who are not recorded in official statistics as authorised immigrants.

Independent Police Complaints Commission

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the (a) cost and (b) remit of the Independent Police Complaints Commission. [137533]

Ms Blears: This current financial year is the Independent Police Complaint Commission's (IPCC) set up year. It has been allocated £15 million for revenue expenditure and £11.5 million for capital expenditure. The funding for future years has not yet been established.

The IPCC's remit will be as set out in section 10 of the Police Reform Act 2002. From 1 April 2004, it will be tasked with maintaining effective and efficient arrangements for recording, handling and investigating complaints about conduct and internal conduct matters relating to persons serving with the police (regular officers, police staff, special constables and contracted escort and detention officers). It will also have the function of securing that public confidence is established and maintained in those arrangements and that they manifest an appropriate degree of independence.

Managed Migration

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on how his Department's managed migration policies are attracting immigrants to Scotland. [132982]

Beverley Hughes: The Government are responsible for migration to the United Kingdom. Our managed migration policies provide legal routes of entry that will attract migrants to all parts of the UK where this will contribute to our economy and society. The Scottish Executive is complementing these policies by developing the Fresh Talent Initiative to attract migrants to Scotland.

Mrs. Kaladura Nimali Mason

John Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will make a decision on the application of Mrs. Kaladura Nimali Mason (reference M2013611/3) for naturalisation as a British citizen. [135912]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 4 November 2003]: Mrs. Mason's application has been approved. She was sent an oath of allegiance form on 31 October 2003. Once she has sworn the oath and returned the form to the Immigration and Nationality Directorate, they will be able to issue a certificate of British citizenship.

National Asylum Support Service

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what date the report of the independent review of the National Asylum Support Service was submitted to ministers. [133964]

Beverley Hughes: The independent team established to review the operation of the National Asylum Support Service (NASS) submitted its report on 30 May 2003.

Mr. Digby Griffith was appointed as Secretary to the independent NASS Review Team during the first week in March 2003 and took up post on 10 March. Following a national open competition he was offered the post of Head of Accommodation in NASS on 24 April. He took up post on 30 June.

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the implications of the decision of the Court of Appeal in Regina versus National Asylum Support Service. [136706]

Beverley Hughes: We welcome the findings of the Court in this case. The judgment provides valuable clarification of the extent of the Immigration and Nationality Directorate (IND)'s responsibilities for accommodating asylum seekers who have children who are sick or have disabilities. As the judgment made clear IND has always accepted that it had a duty to provide adequate accommodation for the applicant and her family, taking account of the situation of the children. Work is on-going to obtain more suitable accommodation in the area for the family.

Nationality Applications

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the average time taken was to process an application for British nationality in the last five years was; and if he (a) has taken and (b) intends to take action to reduce that waiting time. [137072]

Beverley Hughes: There are no data published on actual decision times to determine applications for British citizenship. Information on expected waiting times for citizenship applications are available on the IND website; www.ind.homeoffice.gov.uk and is periodically updated. As at the end of October 2003 the expected average processing times were:

Applications	Months
Naturalisation	6.2
Adult	2.0
Minor	6.9
Other	1.4

However, this time may be significantly reduced if all relevant documents are sent with the application form.

The casework consideration process has been extensively reviewed by the Nationality Group to minimise delays. This has resulted in a reduction to waiting times during this financial year; over 25 per cent. of cases are now decided within one month of receipt. In addition to this, a review of Nationality Group processes was commissioned to focus on ways of reducing the backlog of work and cutting waiting times further. The review report was accepted by the Minister in October .An action plan is now being formulated to take forward its recommendations.

Nationality, Immigration and Asylum Act

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in relation to sections (a) 96, (b) 97 and (c) 98 of the Nationality, Immigration and Asylum Act 2002, how many cases have been certified by the Secretary of State in accordance with that section; how many cases so certified have been challenged (i) by judicial review and (ii) otherwise; how many challenges were successful; and what the grounds were in each case of challenge. [135430]

Beverley Hughes: I regret that the information requested is unavailable and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Statistics on the numbers of certified refusals at asylum initial decisions and the outcomes of any subsequent appeals or judicial reviews are not separately available in relation to sections 96, 97 and 98 of the Nationality, Immigration and Asylum Act 2002.

Statistics on the outcomes of initial asylum decisions and appeals are published quarterly. The next publication will be available from the 27 November 2003 on the Home Office Research Development and Statistics Directorate website at http://www.homeoffice.gov.uk/rds/immigration1.html.

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases certified as clearly unfounded under Section 94(3) of the Nationality and Immigration Asylum Act 2002 have been (a) challenged successfully and (b) challenged unsuccessfully by judicial review; and, in each case where the challenge was successful, what the grounds of the challenge were. [135431]

Beverley Hughes: Section 94(3) of the Nationality, Immigration and Asylum Act 2003 relate to nationalities subject to non-suspensive appeal (NSA). NSA provisions have been applied since 7 November 2002. The number of applications received from such nationalities has fallen significantly.

I regret that the information requested is not available and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Information on asylum initial decisions is published quarterly. The next publication will be available on 27 November 2003 on the Home Office Research Development and Statistics Directorate web site at http://www.homeoffice.gov.uk/rds/immigration1.html.

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) in how many cases considered under section 94(3) of the Nationality, Immigration and Asylum Act 2002 he decided that the claim was not clearly unfounded, broken down by country of origin of claimants; [135433]

(2) how many (a) asylum and (b) human rights claims were certified by the Secretary of State as clearly unfounded under Section 94(3) of the Nationality Immigration and Asylum Act 2002, broken down by country of origin of claimant. [135434]

Beverley Hughes: I regret that the information requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Information on asylum initial decisions is published quarterly. The next publication will be available on 27 November 2003 on the Home Office Research Development and Statistics Directorate website at http://www.homeoffice.gov.uk/rds/immigration1.html.

Overseas Students (Visa Charges)

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the number of overseas pupils attending boarding schools in the United Kingdom who will be required to pay visa charges under new regulations. [133935]

Beverley Hughes: No figures are available for the number of boarding school children who will be required to pay for applications for leave to remain in the United Kingdom following the introduction of charging for leave to remain which was introduced on 1 August 2003.

The cost of an application for leave to remain in the United Kingdom is £155 if sent by post or £250 if lodged in person.

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the number of overseas pupils attending boarding schools in the United Kingdom who will miss a period of school due to delays in granting visas. [133936]

Beverley Hughes: Student entry clearance applications do not allow us to differentiate those attending boarding schools from others. Globally, over 90 per cent. of all straightforward applications were processed within 24 hours in the financial year 2002–03. By their nature applications from boarding school students are straightforward in most cases.

UK visas has not received any complaints that students have missed school due to delays in processing entry clearance applications.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the additional charges for overseas student visas contain an element for cost recovery for the past costs of administering such visas in accordance with Treasury guidance. [136540]

Beverley Hughes: The fees are set under Treasury rules to recover the full administrative cost entailed in considering applications and no more. This is calculated taking the overall costs of processing applications for one year divided by the number of decisions we expect to make.

Treasury guidelines state that the only actual costs may be recovered.

The costs of dealing with applications which do not attract a fee cannot be recovered from fee paid for applications.

Treasury rules require the Immigration and Nationality Directorate to carry out an annual fee review.

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department pursuant to the statement by the Under-Secretary of State of 22 October 2003, Official Report, column 311WH, on visa charges, what discretion his Department has in interpreting Treasury rules on the setting of charges for visas for overseas students. [134907]

Beverley Hughes: There are no plans to increase student visa fees at this time. However, visa fees are kept under review and may be increased in order to ensure that the entry clearance operation recovers its full costs.

The fees for leave to remain applications are set under Treasury rules to recover the full administrative cost entailed in considering applications and no more. This is calculated by taking the overall costs of processing applications divided by the number of decisions we expect to make. This is the same method used to calculate the costs of entry clearance/visa fees. There is a scale of fees for entry clearance depending on the type of visa being applied for. We were unable to introduce differential charging for leave to remain applications, as our current accounting structure does not allow for this. Consultation would not have changed this. However, this is not to close off the potential for differential charging in the future and we will again consider this when charges are reviewed.

Fees and charges for statutory services are set in accordance with Treasury guidelines.

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the Minister of State will reply to the letter of 17 September from the General Secretary of the Independent Schools Council concerning visa charges for school pupils. [133070]

Beverley Hughes: A reply to Alistair Cooke's letter of 17 September was sent on 20 October.

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when, and by what means, he advertised the introduction of visa charges for overseas pupils attending United Kingdom schools. [133071]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 20 October 2003]: Theconcept of charging has been in the public domain for some time since it was debated during the passage of the Immigration and Asylum Act 1999. My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary further stated his intention to charge in the White Paper: "Secure Borders, Safe Haven: Integration with Diversity in Modern Britain" published on 7 February 2000.

The day the regulations were laid (10 July) there was a public announcement by way of a Press Release; information was available on the Immigration and Nationality Directorate (IND) Website and a leaflet 'Information about New Charges' was available to customers by post and in the Public Enquiry Offices. The leaflet was also sent to IND stakeholders.

Passports

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what research he has carried out into the effects on those on low incomes of introducing fees for (a) applications for variation of leave and (b) endorsing passports. [136962]

Beverley Hughes: We have not carried out any research into the effects to those on low incomes by the introduction of charging for leave to remain applications but the Immigration Rules require a person applying for leave to remain to be able to maintain and accommodate themselves and any dependants without recourse to public funds

Police Authorities

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the members of the Wiltshire Police Authority indicating (a) who nominated them, (b) who appointed them and (c) their political affiliation. [137348]

Ms Blears: There are 17 members of Wiltshire police authority made up of nine councillors, three magistrates and five independent members, as shown in the table:

Wiltshire Police Authority

Members	Political affiliation
Councillors
Mrs. C. Arkell	Conservative
Mr. B. Ford	Conservative
Mrs. M. Groom	Conservative
Mrs. C. Soden	Conservative
Mr. W. Spiers	Conservative
Mr. D. Benfield	Labour
Mrs. M. Taylor	Labour
Mrs. M. Boulton	Liberal Democratic
Mr. P Sample	Liberal Democratic
Magistrates
Mr. G. Baskerville	—
Mr. F. Palmer	—
Mrs. M. Sitaram	—
Independent Members
Mr. W. Fishlock	—
Mr. C. Hoare	—
Mr. I. Johnston	—
Miss A. Scofield	—
Mr. H. Woolnough	—

Councillors and magistrate members are nominated locally. The final decision on independent members is also taken locally but from a short list provided by my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary. Members are appointed under the terms of Schedule 2 of the Police Act 1996

The political affiliations of magistrate and independent members are not relevant to the appointment to the police authority and are not known.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance he issues on the range of organisations to be represented on police authorities, with particular reference to the number of representatives from (a) district and (b) county councils. [137508]

Ms Blears: The standard membership of a police authority outside London under section 4(1) of the Police Act 1996 is 17 members, of whom nine will be councillors appointed from relevant councils, three will be magistrates appointed by the local Magistrates Courts Committee and five will be appointed from local people (independent members) who mainly live or work in the police area. The Home Office and Association of Police Authorities published joint guidance on the selection and appointment of independent members of police authorities in England and Wales on 20 September 2002. This guidance reflects the intention in the Act that the independent membership should, as far as practical, represent the interests of a wide range of people in the community and be appropriately skilled. It does not specify organisations.

Where there is a single relevant council in a police area, it selects from its membership the nine councillor members of the police authority according to political balance. If there is more than one relevant council, then a Joint Committee of those councils makes the appointments on the balance of parties prevailing among the members of the relevant councils taken as a whole. The apportionment between relevant councils is a matter for the Joint Committee. This is set out in Schedule 2 of the Police Act 1996 as amended.

Rural Policing

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much funding has been made to each police authority in England and Wales since 1995 under the Rural Sparsity Grant. [138232]

Ms Blears: The Rural Policing Fund was introduced in 2000–01. Allocations to the end of this financial year are set out in the table.

Police Reorganisation

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to reorganise the Police Service in England. [137851]

Ms Blears: A major consultation exercise on the future direction of police reform was launched on 4 November 2003 with the publication of "Policing: Building Safer Communities Together". Among other things, this paper opens the debate on whether the current 43 force structure in England and Wales is the right one for today's and tomorrow's policing needs.

We are clear that any structural change will need to deliver improvements in police performance and delivery of service.

Deportations

Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many individuals who had been refused political asylum were deported in each of the last three years for which figures are available. [137060]

Beverley Hughes: Deportations are a just one type of removal; others include: persons subject to administrative removal, removal due to illegal entry action or those refused entry at port and subsequently removed.

The table shows the number of asylum seekers who were removed from the United Kingdom between 2000 and 2002. These are steadily being increased.

Removals and voluntary departures[1] of asylum applicants, 2000 to 2002[2]

Principal Applicants	8,980	9,285	10,740
